God's Word brought light to his soul, his burden rolled away, and he experienced for the first time the meaning of those beautiful words, "Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." More than eight years have passed since Jim was born again. He is now a preacher of the same Gospel that was the power of God to his own salvation. He has been privileged to lead many hundreds of young men to Christ. People sometimes ask why he always seems so anxious, when preaching, to win the young for Christ: if the readers of this story knew him, they, at least, would understand. Pray for him!

KONIGSHEIM HOUSE OF REST, Edinburgh-place, Weston-super-Mare.—The object of this Home is to provide a temporary residence, with board, for ladies engaged in teaching, who require a short change and rest; other ladies engaged in the Lord's service may also avail themselves of the quiet and comfort of the Home for a brief period. In each case the terms are moderate. During the past year the house has been full, and current expenses have all been met. Communications should be addressed to Miss Fanny Bulkley, honorary lady superintendent.

BIRMINGHAM CHURCH MISSION.

(BY OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.)

DURING the whole of last and the first three days of the present week, an evangelistic mission has been held among the Established churches of this busy metropolis of the Midlands. In one or two cases the special effort has extended to a fortnight. I find from a local directory that the population of the town and its suburbs is now close upon half a million souls. From the same source I gather that the number of Episcopal churches exceeds ninety. As the churches taking part in the mission have been thirty or thereabouts, it can scarcely be called a "general" one; but a wide interest has doubtless been created in some of the centres where the meetings were held. A good authority informs me that, taken as a whole, the Birmingham churches are less tinged with the Ritualistic element than some other of our large cities. Certain of the High Church clergy declined to be associated with their evangelical brethren in this special effort; but, as my few days' experience in the city amply showed, this abstention was not universal. Whether that is a matter for rejoicing or regret I do not undertake to say. The mission had the warmly expressed approval of the Bishop of Worcester. The influx into the city of so many experienced workers, and the proclamation of spiritual truths day after day by so many fresh voices, must have awakened no inconsiderable movement in the community; but, so far as I have observed or ascertained, it would be an exaggeration to say that the town has been deeply stirred. I am led to understand that there has been a regretted absence of coherence or unity in the arrangements, so that the influence of the mission has been local rather than extensive.

It has been a physical impossibility for me, within the allotted limits of time and space, to do more than visit a few of the churches where the mission was in progress; but these, I imagine, have been favourably representative of the whole. Foremost in point of general interest and importance, I may safely assert, has been the work at St. Martin's Parish Church, with Rev. W. H. AITKEN as missioner. It need scarcely be said that here the congregations have been very large; the messages of the preacher have been most powerful, and the ascertained results highly encouraging. On the week evening when I was present, the spacious church was filled from end to end, with a concourse made up, to a singular extent, of all sorts and conditions of men. The church is almost in the heart of the town, and is surrounded by a dense population, among whom the pinch of poverty is sadly familiar. The workers have assiduously visited the courts and alleys, inviting the dwellers to attend, with the result that "looped and windowed raggedness" has been plentifully intermingled with the crowds of well to do and thoughtful people whom Mr. Aitken never fails to attract to his ministry. The clear statements of Gospel truth, driven home with all the preacher's force of irresistible argument, tenderness and intensity of pathos, and wealth of burning speech, have produced a very marked effect in large after-meetings, and in many cases of spiritual concern and decision. On the evening to which I have referred the diversity of personnel in the audience was reproduced among those who found their way to the side chapel to be personally dealt with. I myself had the privilege of some conversation with a boy of twelve, who told me that his father was dead, and his Christian mother, who had to go out charing, had sent him to every evening meeting; and also with a poor old wreck of a woman, who said she scraped together a scanty subsistence by selling matches in the streets. There were others from far higher ranks of life. I do not pretend to fix the exact social status of the two or three actresses who, I am told, were found that night among the inquirers; but I greatly rejoiced to know that they had not been deterred from attaining the common level of "the penitent form," where they anxiously inquired, not only as to the way of life, but as to how much they would have "to give up" if they became disciples in the school of Christ.

Mr. Aitken's mid-day addresses to business men on the life that is worth living and the way to live it, drew large and eager companies day by day. So also did his afternoon talks on the Christian life, in which he expounded the epistles to the seven churches of Asia, applying the lessons of each to the circumstances, duties and responsibilities of to-day. While the week-day gatherings at St. Martin's were large, those of the two Sundays were overflowing. The services here are continued throughout the present week, and are certain to be among the most fruitful in blessing that the past fornight in Birmingham has had to show. Canon Wilkinson, the rector, and his helpers have entered heartily into the work.

St. George's Church is splendidly situated, also in a central district of the town, and in the heart of a working-class community. The leading missioner here has been Rev. JOHN HASLAM, son of the famous author of "From Death to Life." I heard of some visitors in the town who went to hear Mr. Haslam, thinking he was his father. That mistake could not be made by any resident in the neighbourhood, for Mr. John Haslam was for years the popular and much esteemed vicar of the adjoining parish of St. Matthias. This fact may, in some degree, account for the great crowds that day after day filled St. George's Church, which for seating capacity is scarcely, if at all, inferior to St. Martin's. Mr. Haslam has inherited much of his father's fiery zeal and evangelical fervour, and, judging from the address which I heard him give to men on Sunday afternoon, the congregations at St. George's have been well served in the matter of preaching. He is a true missioner, removed as far as possible from the dilettanteism that merely tickles the palate of the hearers and leaves no decided mark on the spiritual life of the people. There were good congregations of women and children day by day, and much interest was created by Mr. Haslam's morning addresses on "The Christian Life." He took up in succession various of the "Mysteries of the Kingdom," and applied their teaching in a practical way. The week evening Gospel services were crowded to excess. The after-meetings were very large, and were seasons of real power and blessing to many. Connected with the parochial agencies are several mission-rooms, and there the work was earnestly carried on by the assistant missioners, Revs. G. Turnbull and F. Hasluck. Altogether the work at St. George's has been of a very substantial and encouraging nature, which is all the more remarkable as hardly anything was done, I believe, by way of preparatory visitation and announcement. The church stands in a large open space, away from the thoroughfares, and I saw no posters of any kind, so that the success achieved cannot be attributed to subsidiary and outside influences.

Passing from Birmingham proper to the suburbs, I was glad to hear of a good work accomplished at Christ Church, Sparkbrook, where the mission preacher was Rev. F. WEBSTER, late of the Church Army. With his characteristic energy he threw himself into the mission, in which he had the complete sympathy and ready aid of the vicar, Rev. G. Tonge. Early prayer-meetings were held throughout, with a steadily increasing attendance. The spirit of intercession on these occasions was not fettered by any liturgical bonds, but free prayer was offered, and brief addresses given on practical religion. To excellent gatherings in the forenoon Mr. Webster discoursed on the Christian's walk and warfare. In the afternoon there were really splendid assemblages of children, who were drawn and held by the "object" talks of the missioner. With such simple aids as a sponge and a glass of water, candles, the superscriptions on a penny, he taught, and riveted on the minds of the youthful hearers, many a valuable truth relating to sin, forgiveness, faith, and testimony. The church was well filled every week night, and, of course, crowded on the Sundays. Mr. Webster adopts Mr. Moody's plan of asking the anxious ones to indicate the fact by rising in their places, and the numbers who responded night by night showed that the message had been with power and demonstration of the Spirit. From all that I could gather, the special effort at Sparkbrook, which is a middle-class suburb, seems to have been of a most encouraging sort.

I also paid a visit to one of the wealthier suburbs, but there the channel of the mission did not appear to me to run so deeply as elsewhere. In a large church, with a missioner bearing a well-known name, I found a splendid congregation, but the preaching, though clear and earnest, lacked that "accent of urgency" which one expects to find in connection with such an unusual effort. The after-meeting was large, but the second address was also diffuse, and not at all calculated to sway the people in the direction of deep spiritual concern or decision. An invitation was given to any who wished to remain for prayer or conversation, but not a solitary soul out of the great throng of well-dressed ladies and gentlemen availed themselves of it. In such an aristocratic community there are, of course, special hindrances to spiritual upheaval; but, with some preachers, I felt that the impressions made must have been deeper. I can only hope that the general course of the mission was more satisfactory than the sample of it I was enabled to see.

At other centres which I could not visit, and about which I did not gain any detailed information, there were such able and earnest evangelicals as Dr. Morgan (of Leamington), Dr. Harrison (of Liverpool), Rev. H. J. Thwaites (of Carisbrook), Dr. Morris (of the Parochial Mission Society), Rev. J. E. Linnell (of Davenham), Rev. T. Richardson (of Stepney), and others. I cannot doubt that they experienced a share in the blessing which I found was being vouchsafed at the places where I made inquiry.

As an impartial chronicler, I made it my duty to see something of the work as it was carried on in churches known as "Ritualistic," which had joined in the mission. Of these I visited three. One was in the fashionable suburb to which I have already alluded. Circumstances prevented me from hearing the missioner, but he was described to me as being an able and eloquent preacher. I found the large and highly aristocratic-looking congregation, largely composed of young ladies, kneeling and joining in a recital of one of the "short acts of faith, hope, charity, contrition, trust, and self-surrender," embodied in the Durham Mission Hymn-book, revised by Canon Body, and which was in use for the mission at this church. I may quote the "Act of Faith":—"My God, I believe in Thee, and I believe all that Thou teachest me through thy Church, because Thou hast said it, and thy Word is true." In the same book I find a list of "helps to a holy life," one of which is "Fasting or abstinence on Fridays, Vigils, and in Lent." To the dispersing congregation were given copies of a tract by Canon Body, in which much that is excellent is mixed with some strongly sacramentarian doctrine. Slips were scattered about, inviting any persons wishing to speak with the missioner to do so after any of the services. On that evening, at any rate, nobody appeared to wish it. In a "High" Church in the centre of the town I found very meagre congregations, both morning and evening, on Sunday; and, judging from what I myself heard and saw, I could not quarrel with the people for staying away, when they could get so little that would have been of real service to them in the battle of life. The list of week-day services at this church was phenomenally large, numbering no less than ten between 7.30 a.m. and 9 p.m. With so much effort, in addition to outdoor processions, with banners, the smallness of the Sunday evening congregation was the more noteworthy.

The third church of this description I attended, and one notoriously known for advanced ritual, is situated in one of the most poverty-stricken parts of Birmingham. The mission here virtually ended on Sunday evening, and I was fortunate enough to hear the closing address of the missioner, in which, as he said, he summed up the teaching he had been giving the people throughout. His text was, "Hold fast that which thou hast." He was a man of ready utterance, spare in figure, evidently of ascetic habit, and most earnest in his manner of address. He expressed himself as greatly cheered by the results of the special mission; seeing that, at this, the crowning meeting, the small church was only about half full, though hemmed in on every side by a dense population, it appeared to me that he was thankful for somewhat small mercies. Most of those present were clearly of the poorest class, and if the matter of the discourse had been equal to its earnest beseeching manner, I would have sincerely rejoiced. But, mixed with a great deal that I could heartily endorse, he proclaimed the "Catholic" doctrine of baptismal regeneration in the most unqualified way. One, he said, who had been baptized, could not help being a Christian; if he afterwards turned away from God, then of course he needed to be converted. He pressed home the duty of daily prayer and the reading of the Word of God, but said it was foolish for them to expect to be able to understand the Bible without the help of the Church, whom God has appointed to teach his truth. "The blessed Sacrament" he compared to the wire, without which the electric force could not possibly be conveyed out of the battery where it is stored. In like manner, the spiritual life cannot be nourished except through this appointed channel. Such are specimens of the mixed teaching given by this preacher, who repeatedly spoke of the "altar," on which, by the way, there was an array of lighted candles. I came to the conclusion, from personal observation at these churches, that while Ritualistic teaching and practice may be acceptable with those on whom the cares and burdens of life do not press hardly, and who feel a certain satisfaction in "playing at religion," they are well-nigh powerless in meeting the needs of the poor. Nothing could be more striking than the contrast between the small congregations at these two city churches and the crowded eager audiences that hung on the words of Mr. Aitken and others who were proclaiming a full, simple and unadulterated Gospel.

The very last thing I did on Sunday evening, at the close of a busy day, was to look in at the Central Hall, where a splendid work is being done among the masses by the Wesleyans, under the direction of a young and ardent minister, Rev. F. L. Wiseman. I was told the hall had been crowded out earlier in the evening, and an overflow meeting held. Though the time of my visit was late, I found a large after-meeting in progress, with earnest hand-to-hand personal dealing going on. I felt the sight to be a satisfactory and hopeful finish to my wanderings among the Christian workers of the city.

This week, besides the continuation of the Church mission, there are special evangelistic meetings at the Congregational Church, Moseley-road, with Rev. J. F. Hallowes as the preacher. In the course of the morning service on Sunday at Carr's-lane Chapel, Dr. Dale prayed earnestly for the success of these special efforts extending over the past and present weeks.

MR. HEALEY AT HIGHGATE.—The Gospel Temperance Mission recently held at Highgate was not arranged on a large scale, nor to cover an extensive area, the object being to bring about a personal contact between the mission and the people. To a certain extent this was accomplished, for very shortly after his arrival in Highgate, Mr. Healey visited nearly all the public-houses, and sought out special cases which were brought under his notice. Results of a permanent character are reported, and the Christian workers have been much cheered.

THE "NINETY-FIRST."

Our esteemed friend, Mr. S. G. Prout, of Braunton, Barnstaple, sends to us the annexed stirring poem, with the story attached to it. He says:—

Rather more than twelve months since, Miss Rundle, a young lady of Birmingham, who has for some time been doing, very quietly, splendid work in the King's service, in connection with the Wesleyan Missions and Homes for Soldiers and Seamen, and who was at the time labouring earnestly at Chatham, had the idea of forming a Christian regiment from all grades and branches of the Service, to be called "The 91st." The idea and title were suggested to her by the concluding chapter of my small soldiers' book—"Hurrah!"—which had been reproduced, slightly enlarged, as a separate booklet, and several thousands given me for free distribution in the Egyptian campaigns.

The title of the regiment is, of course, taken (as was that of the chapter) from the grand old 91st Psalm. I wrote the hymn (after long waiting for it) by Miss Rundle's wish, as a regimental hymn, to be given with the little books. A gifted, earnest Christian cousin of mine kindly composed for it a stirring melody, and both tune and hymn seem to have received most gratifying acceptance by the men.

Miss Rundle's "Standing Orders" [given below], will, I think, have your fullest approval. "The 91st" is now, I believe, over a thousand strong, of all ranks at home and abroad, who are constantly endeavouring to enlist their comrades and others as "Christ's Own" men, under the banner of the Cross. Since the formation of the "Regiment," Miss Rundle has from time to time given me very interesting quotations from happy letters received by her. This young Christian's devoted, evangelistic work, which is supported altogether from her own resources and exertions, is truly deserving of a warm and practical sympathy.

THE HYMN OF THE "91st."

Under the shadow of the Almighty.
The shout of a King is among them.
Ps. xci. 1; Numb. xxiii. 21.

Close your ranks, Men! they're upon us—
Far, uncounted thousands strong! [fight—
Through the long, dark hours we shall have to Fight, and fall, till the morning light;
So, pass the word along,
"The Lord of Hosts is with us,
Our Captain and our King!—
Ready! ay, ready!
Ready for everything!"

For that column's on—on coming,
And the crownless king at its head!—
In a lifted look at our Colours' fold—
On the Cross, there blazoned in living gold,
Set in its field blood-red—
In the power of the death, and the glory
Of our own loved Saviour-King,
"Ready! ay, ready!
Ready for everything!"

"Cannot stand those thousands' on-crush"?
Then we'll fight them on our knees;
And look into their eyes with stern delight,
As we meet the black wave of their gathered
Each face our Captain sees! [might—
Our van, and rear, and centre
Kept in his hand! we'll sing
"Ready! ay, ready!
Ready for everything!"

Fallen? Hurrah! our comrades answer
The roll-call of "Christ's Own": [bent,
And the rust of their arms, war-battered and Rays out ruby light in the glad "Present!"
Before our Leader's throne.
As a wall of steel, close up, men;
And let your cheer outring—
"Ready! ay, ready!
Ready for everything!"

In the conquering love, we conquer!
While dark, countless hosts surge on:
When beneath the low stars their slain lie dim,
We will think of that fight, fought alone, by Him
Who died, as its day was won!
We have surely set on Him our poor love,
To whose death-strong love we cling:—
Let them hear our "Ready! Ready!
Ay, ready for everything!"

In his secret place we are dwelling;
With his soft, strong feathers round:
Within the shadow of our God
A pasture green is the battle-sod:
There, may none afraid be found:
For the light that spreads our shadow-guard
Is the love unwavering.
Are we not "Ready," brothers,
"Ay, ready for everything?"

Ready, only in his changeless truth
Our fortress, and our shield;
No refuge-rock but the Most High:
"None other Name" for warrior-cry,
Where never a man may yield. [hymn
In the heart-sure prayer, and the heart-felt
To the Saviour's throne we bring,
Let Him hear our "Ready! Ready!
Ay, ready for everything!"

Humbly "ready," for the Victory-Cross,
When the battle-clash is still; [march
When we hear Heaven's "Halt!" to the weary
And the burst of her songs through her gate's
That the golden glories fill: [pearl arch
Through the might of that Name our hearts have
In the Home of Christ our King, [known
Ready—wonderfully, ready!
Aye ready for everything!

STANDING ORDERS.

(1) Exod. xx. 3—17; Ezek. ii. 6; Gal. v. 1; Joshua i. 9, xxiii. 10.

(2) Read your Bible every day, and Psalm xci. as often as possible.

(3) Pray at your cot or hammock night and morning, unless very urgent circumstances prevent.

(4) Always be leading another to Jesus.

(5) As one who must give an account, look after your comrades or messmates, especially those in your room or mess; be like Christ (John xx. 21), and a Bible (2 Cor. iii. 2) to them. Pray for them (the XCI. especially) every Sunday.

(6) Do nothing over which you cannot pray

(7) Go to no place where you must leave Jesus outside.

(8) Never be ashamed of your colours. If you confess Christ before men, He will confess you (Matt. x. 22—23).

For further information apply to the Secretary, care of Mr. Rundle, Hillside, Moseley, Birmingham.

A WORD OF WARNING.—Mr. William Catlin writes to caution persons who, out of kindness, are offering to lend magic lantern slides for the benefit of poor missions. He says that he has on several occasions lent slides and lost them; so the benevolent should inquire into the character of persons who propose to borrow slides.

CHRISTIAN EFFORT IN WHITECHAPEL.—A large number of evangelistic agencies are actively carried on in connection with the parish church, Whitechapel—a part of East London which is sadly in need of such effort. In a report just issued, giving an account of the work, we are told that mothers' meetings are held in every part of the parish, and "some of them may fitly be described as mass meetings." A somewhat unusual thing is a "fathers' meeting," which is attended by a very large number of men, many of whom never enter church or chapel. The common lodging-houses in the district are visited every week. One young man, who gained his first experience of mission work in this way, has recently gone out as a missionary to Africa. House-to-house visitation is regularly and systematically carried on by a band of working women. Friends wishing to know more of this work should write for a copy of the interesting report to Rev. Arthur J. Robinson, The Rectory, Whitechapel, E.

RECEIVING CHRIST.

Luke xix. 1—10.

I was once asked by a boy, "What do you mean by 'being converted' or 'being saved'?" We have what it means, in a nutshell, in three words—"He received Him" (verse 6).

Some years ago, before I could swim, I was down at the seaside for a holiday, with my two brothers, who were able to swim. We thought we would have a bathe; we got undressed, and entered the water, which was just up to my chest. Though I could not swim, I enjoyed the bathe, and as the sun was shining I felt very happy. I did not know, however, that the tide was running out, but as a fact it was, and in a few minutes the water was up to my neck. Thinking that I had better make for the shore, I turned to get inland; but the current was too strong for me, the water was soon up to my chin, and I found that I was drifting out to sea. Anyone in such a position as that, stands in need of "being saved." I wanted saving, and fortunately, in the mercy of the Lord, there was a boat near at hand, and I was rescued just in time to escape drowning. All that I had to do was to accept this saving. So, if ever you get puzzled, remember that "being saved" means to receive salvation.

I must tell you something about Jericho, the place where Zacchæus received the Saviour. It was an important centre of the trade in a valuable scented gum, called balsam, which was used for healing wounds, and sent to all parts of the world. Numbers of busy merchants lived in the town. With other articles this balsam was taxed by the Roman Government, the tax being collected by men called publicans. As traders entered or left the town they were given a ticket, and told how much duty they would have to pay. Unfortunately, these tax collectors did not go by any fixed scale of charges, but sometimes asked for as much as double the sum which was really due on the goods. The merchants were obliged to pay, for they feared the Roman soldiers. In this way the tax-gatherer soon grew rich. Sometimes, moreover, he increased his wealth by worse deeds. He would accuse a trader of smuggling, or bringing or taking away things without paying duty, and would say, "If you don't give me so much, naming a certain sum of money, I shall tell the governor about you." The poor trader, though quite innocent, was often glad to pay the money, in order to escape prosecution. Now Zacchæus was the chief of these tax-collectors in Jericho, and had made himself hateful to the people by false accusation, and putting on too high charges.

Another set of people living there were the priests, who, above all other men, ought to have received the Lord Jesus. But they thought they had no need of being saved, and it was of such that Jesus said, "They that are whole need not a physician, but they that are sick."

Now, which of these classes of people—the merchants, the tax-collectors, or the priests—did the Lord go to Jericho to seek? He went to seek Zacchæus, the greatest sinner, perhaps, in the whole place. No one thought that the publican would ever be saved.

Near the end of chapter xviii. we see what happened just before the Lord went to Jericho. He found blind Bartimæus sitting by the roadside, begging, and He had mercy on him, and opened his eyes. No doubt Zacchæus heard of this, and very likely he heard also of the son of the widow of Nain being raised from the dead, of the man with the legion of devils being set free, and of the daughter of Jairus being restored to life. So, probably, he had begun to think, "Jesus can save me."

We notice that there were difficulties in his way, but that he quickly got over them. He was only a little man; the crowd was large, and none of the people would make way for one who was so much disliked as Zacchæus. So he ran before the crowd, and climbed up into a sycamore tree, and there waited to see Jesus. Presently the Lord came up the road, for, as a fact, He was seeking Zacchæus! Perhaps you are sometimes told to seek salvation; remember that it is also true that the Lord is always seeking you and me, and what we have to do is to accept Him and to receive his salvation.

Zacchæus proved that he had received the Lord by giving half of his goods to the poor, and by restoring fourfold to those men whom he had falsely accused.

Twenty years ago an evangelist was holding mission services in the Temperance Hall, Bolton. One night whilst he was preaching, a man got up in the midst of the audience, advanced to platform, and confessed to the preacher that he had committed a robbery. It was found that he was liable to severe punishment, but the man was willing to suffer the imprisonment if he could only receive salvation. In the same mission a business man, through the words he then heard, decided to give back fifteen hundred pounds to a widow from whom he had received it, because he saw that in receiving it he had not acted in accordance with "the royal law"—"Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." And he gave back the money.

Some time ago there was a young lady anxious to find Christ, but she had been guilty of robbing several of her school-fellows. She had all sorts of things belonging to them, breast-pins, brooches, handkerchiefs, pencils, &c. She asked "What am I to do?" She was told in reply, "You must give them back." At once she set to work. It took her I don't know how long, but she did it, and received forgiveness.

We cannot expect to have salvation until we have given up anything we may have in our possession that does not belong to us, and which we have wrongly got. To be kind and helpful to those around us is a proof that we are Christians. Will you not make up your mind now to receive the Lord Jesus Christ? Then you will have Him in your heart, and He will keep you as long as you are willing to let Him stay there. "But as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God." (1 John i. 12.)

THE CURRAGH SOLDIERS' HOME.—The frequent change of regiments at The Curragh, co. Kildare, brings many soldiers under the sound of the Gospel at the Home, of which Mrs. William Perry is the hon. secretary and superintendent. During last year the meetings were more largely attended than ever before. The statement of accounts shows a balance on the wrong side.

BATH.—A very interesting meeting of this branch of the Evangelical Alliance was held on the 6th instant in the Friends' Meeting-house, York-street. It was the second of a series of monthly meetings which have been arranged to be held in connection with already established prayer-meetings in the city. The address was given by Mr. Benjamin Thomas, president of the Bristol branch, on 1 Cor. xii. 12, on the importance, not of endeavouring to make a unity in the Church, but of keeping that unity which already exists; not an ecclesiastical unity, but a spiritual one. It was the most numerously attended meeting that has been held for many years in connection with the Alliance.

WORK AMONGST HOTEL EMPLOYÉS.

It may not be generally known that a quiet but earnest endeavour has long been made to meet the spiritual need of a much-neglected class—the hotel employés at home and abroad. The absence of any effort on their behalf impressed itself painfully on the mind of a lady, whose travels some years ago brought her much in contact with this class. Warmly supported by her husband, the late Colonel Chancellor, a special Mission was commenced, and is still carried on.

Mrs. Chancellor began by speaking to the various hotel employés and servants who came under her notice, got their names, and supplied them monthly with Gospel papers. They were afterwards regularly visited, invited to Gospel meetings and Bible-classes, which were held either in mission-rooms, private houses, or in hotels, where the rooms were kindly lent for this purpose. Such meetings have been very successfully held in London, Brighton, Buxton, Clifton, Torquay, St. Leonards-on-Sea, Edinburgh, Dublin, Brussels, Geneva, &c.

As a rule, the workers have met with courtesy from the managers of the hotels, and many letters have been received from servants and housekeepers, testifying to the interest awakened and benefit gained. But much remains still to be done. It is with the earnest hope that some of your readers may be induced to take up this work in their own towns, or carry it on in connection with the Christian Associations for Young Men and Young Women that this notice is given. Any further information or hints will gladly be given by Mrs. Chancellor, 70, Princes-square, London, W.

EAST LONDON CHRISTIAN MISSION.

The annual meeting of the East London Tract Society and Christian Mission was held a few days ago in the Town Hall, Poplar. There was a large attendance of friends of the work, and, in the absence of Mr. Sydney Buxton, M.P., the chair was occupied by General Anderson.

The superintendent, Mr. George Fuller, gave an account of the year's operations. During the winter months 800 breakfasts, dinners, and teas had been given each week. Children were specially cared for, being, as the committee said, less able to bear the pinchings of hunger than their parents. A number of hot dinners, consisting of roast beef and potatoes, had been given to dock labourers. Poor widows and others had been supplied with free teas and other meals. Many workmen who lacked decent apparel had been supplied with old clothes which friends had sent, and had thus been enabled to obtain work. A Spectacles Mission has been started, the object being to provide the aged poor with such helpful articles free of cost. House-to-house visitation, open-air services, mothers' meetings, police, railway, omnibus, and tramway missions, and other adjuncts to evangelical work have been carried on. Providing temporary relief for the unemployed is an object the committee has very much at heart. A number of women can be recommended for plain needlework, charing and washing, if friends will communicate with the superintendent, whose address is "Welcome Hall," Culloden-street, Poplar, E. Through depression of trade and other causes, the subscriptions and donations have so fallen off that with much regret the committee have had to curtail their efforts.

SOLDIERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—A public meeting in connection with the Hounslow branch of this Association was held in Hounslow Congregational Church, on Friday, the 3rd instant. Bishop H. O. Meyers, Free Church of England, presided. Addresses were delivered by Colonel Young, Major Thomson, and members of the Society. Also by Rev. R. Mobbs, pastor-elect of the church. Much interest was evinced by Church members and others.

OUR EAST END FACTORY GIRLS.

WHAT SHALL WE DO?

SOME weeks since a notice appeared in the pages of "THE CHRISTIAN" of our work among the poorest class of Factory Girls in London. These are mostly the daughters of dock labourers, in whose surroundings there are not wanting the elements of the worst forms of vice, and the hardest conditions of poverty.

The premises forming our Factory Girls' Institute are amongst the most extensive and complete of their kind devoted to the care of these poor girls in the East of London. We are surrounded with the homes of girls working at Bryant & May's and other large employers, large numbers of whom are systematically "reached." We have a qualified Matron living on the premises, which include a Dormitory for Girls, and are situate 205—207, Devon's-road, Bow Common-lane, E. Suitable training is found for such as desire domestic service.

The recent Enlargements and Furnishing have cost close upon £200. Towards the large balance due, we regret to say we have received in reply to our recent notice only a few shillings. It therefore has become a serious question what we shall do to meet our heavy liabilities.

While we can all rejoice to see that so much has been recently done for the Factory Girls of the West End, is it too much to ask that the poorer and less-favoured Girls of the East End may not go unhelped and unblessed.

Mrs. FRANK BEVAN, 59, Prince's-gate, S.W., would thankfully receive Contributions for our Girls' work; or they may be sent to the Editors of "THE CHRISTIAN;" or to the Director,

Mr. WILLIAM CHORLEY,
2, Marquess Grove, Canonbury, London, N.

Bankers: Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN & Co. Hon. Auditors: Messrs. THEO. JONES, HILL & Co., Chartered Accountants, 1, Finsbury-circus, E.C. The Freehold of the premises might be purchased now for £700. Worn Shoes or Clothing of any description would be most acceptable. Voluntary lady workers would be much welcomed.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

A LADY who visits among young women in city warehouses and workshops received a letter from a young woman to whom she had been made a blessing.

The letter, sent unsolicited to encourage her in her work, tells that the writer was led to leave her Protestant home, when only fifteen years of age, that she might join the Romish Church. She remained in this evil system for some years, and was about to go into a convent; but, by the goodness of the Lord she was saved therefrom through what she considered to be "a plot."

She had told the priest of her desire, and after a little while he asked her to go to a convent in London (which she names in her letter) not far from his church, just to see it; and she writes, "I got to the convent just after they had dined. The old nuns made me welcome, and persisted in laying a lunch for me, and they placed a pale brown drink by the side of my plate, and left me alone to eat what I liked. I did not care to drink the mixture, because I did not understand what it was; but when they saw that I had not touched it, they would not be content until I drank a little. After doing so I felt uneasy, and said, "I must go." Then one began to show me over the convent, and afterwards played and sang some music; but I insisted on leaving, and I had hardly got home before I fell into a deep sleep, and slept for hours. When I told "Father"—— of the visit, he said, "Then, did they not say that they wanted to see me?" and I could see that he was disappointed; then I concluded that all could not have been right.

The young woman lost confidence in the priest; yet still attended the Romish Church, till she was converted to the truth of the Gospel by reading one of Messrs. Partridge & Co.'s little books, "Joy and Peace in Believing," which the Christian lady had given to one of her companions. From that time she saw how all her sins were forgiven; and she herself found joy and peace in believing and trusting in Christ as her own substitute and Saviour. She had been much troubled in consequence of the uncertainty of the pardon of her sins; and writes, "This is such a contrast to the Romish Church, where sins are split into four divisions; namely, original sin, venial sin, actual sin, and mortal sin." She wrote to let the priest know of her new-found joy, but he did not reply, nor ever afterwards call to see her.

For the past few years this young woman has been saving what money she could and devoting it to the service of the Gospel; she has sent one hundred and sixteen Testaments to Ireland for the poor there, and done other kind service for the poor in her own district. Further, she has opened her own room, and there girls and young women meet for instruction and prayer, and to plan other work for Christ; in this work all who assemble are encouraged to unite, and to visit cases of sickness and poverty, and to do other benevolent acts. This young woman gives her address, and writes: "Anyone may come and see what God can do with a factory girl's spare moments," which service she attributes to the example of the Christian lady worker. She has grown in grace and knowledge, and adds, "If I had the gift, I could explain much that might bring out many who now sit in darkness...and prove Roman Catholicism to be a lie from its origin to its end, as their own portions of Scripture show."

Here is a very pleasing incident to encourage Christian workers to go on writing and circulating precious Scripture truth, and to do kind service in the name of the Lord. One object that I have in writing this is to ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN who may know of other converts from the Romish Church from whom they could obtain any information that would be a warning to our sisters and others not to countenance this evil system, to put it into few words, and send brief accounts to the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN, for the compilation of a little book for general circulation. Alas! many of our sisters are decoyed, with the hope of obtaining salvation, into convents, where they lose their freedom for life, and where (humanly speaking) no Gospel light can enter. G. K.

NOTES FROM THE NORTH.

RETRENCHMENT IN MISSIONS.

THE Presbyteries of the United Presbyterian Church are busy discussing an overture from their Synod with reference to the Mission in Spain. The Mission Board desires to withdraw from that country, the expense being great, and the results small. Dr. Fergus Ferguson, in the Glasgow (South) Presbytery, thought the Church could sustain the work, but his counsel did not prevail. In Edinburgh Presbytery Rev. Gavin S. Muir advised that, instead of giving up the Spanish Mission, the Synod should make an effort to create greater interest in it.

THE HON. KEITH-FALCONER LIBRARY.

In accordance with the wish of the late beloved missionary, his widow, the Hon. Mrs. Keith-Falconer has presented upwards of four hundred of his Semitic books to the Free Church Foreign Missions Committee. The volumes, which form the most valuable Arabic library in Scotland, have been received by Dr. Davidson, and will have a separate place and name in the fine library hall at Edinburgh. Another portion of the library has been sent to the mission at Shaikh Othmân as the nucleus of a mission library there.

ARMY SCRIPTURE-READERS' SOCIETY.

As chairman of the annual meeting of the Scottish branch of this Society, the Earl of Haddington expressed the opinion that the efficiency of the army depended on the spiritual as well as the temporal well-being of our soldiers. As another reason for supporting the Society he declared that the army chaplains, however hard-working and earnest men they might be, were hardly able to discharge efficiently the duty of bringing before each individual soldier the Gospel appeal. The value of the Society to the young soldier exposed to the temptations of sin and vice in the barrack life of large garrison towns was incalculable. During the past year the Scottish branch has considerably extended the sphere of its labours.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

Falkirk U.P. Church Presbytery adopted last week a recommendation to the Synod to appoint a committee on Sabbath observance. It was suggested that such a committee might issue a pastoral letter on the subject, and, further, that ministers should exchange pulpits during the summer months, and preach a special sermon on the sanctity of the Lord's day. At Ardrossan a well-attended meeting was held to protest against Sunday labour there in the new dock extension works. At the last meeting of the Glasgow Town Council, Mr. M'Kellar, gave notice of a motion requesting the magistrates to give effect to the law for the suppression of Sabbath trading. In view of the greatly increased Sabbath trading in Glasgow, the fate of this motion will be watched with great interest.

SCOTTISH HELP FOR MISS DE BROEN.

An association has been formed in Edinburgh to relieve Miss de Broen of coming to Scotland to collect subscriptions. Lord Polwarth has accepted the presidency, and among the members of the committee are Drs. Moody Stuart, and Alexander Whyte. Friends willing to form districts in Scotland should communicate either with Miss Douglas, 1, Rosebery-crescent, Edinburgh.

CHRISTIANS AND AMUSEMENTS.

Rev. Robert Craig, of Edinburgh, has been endeavouring to decide what should be the attitude of Christians towards amusements, He said that he thought the Bible laid down the principle not of prohibition or discouragement of recreation, but of regulation and moderation of all amusements that were innocent. Two rules might be mentioned: Any kind of amusement contrary to godliness should be shunned by Christians; and, if a man could ask God's blessing on his amusement, it was good.

A SCOTTISH TRACT SOCIETY.

Some eloquent figures of tract distribution transpired at the annual meeting of the Scottish "Monthly Visitor" Tract Society in Edinburgh last week. During the year, 6,055,744 English tracts and 59,992 Gaelic have been distributed, giving an average monthly circulation of 509,647. Since the formation of the Society 175,503,150 tracts have been issued. In Edinburgh alone there are 900 monthly distributors.

WEEK OF PRAYER FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

During the whole of last week the Glasgow noon-day prayer-meeting was devoted specially to supplications on behalf of young women. Among the addresses delivered were two by Revs. James M'Caul and J. F. Daly, on "The Martyrs of Scripture" and "Lydia." So far as the West-end branches of the Y.W.C.A. were concerned a splendid impetus was given to the week of prayer, by sermons by Revs. James Stalker and F. H. Robarts. The former minister's discourse was based upon Ruth i. 14, "And Orpah kissed her mother-in-law; but Ruth clave unto her." In describing Naomi as a soul-winner, Mr. Stalker said that the two qualities of large-heartedness and thorough religiousness were absolutely necessary in those women who sought to win their sisters for Christ.

EVANGELISTIC.

Last week Rev. John M'Neill, of M'Crie-Roxburgh Free Church, Edinburgh, conducted a very successful mission in Aberdeen. Mr. M'Neill is exceedingly popular in Edinburgh, and has been the means of the conversion of vast numbers. His services in Aberdeen have been attended by crowded audiences, many of whom have been led to decide for Christ.—Mr. George Clarke has just concluded a ten days' mission in Inverness, where great blessing has rested upon his labours. This week he is conducting a mission in Aberdeen, shortly after the conclusion of which he hopes to sail for Australia.—Last Sunday, Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh began a series of evangelistic services in Govan-hill U. P. Church, Glasgow. The mission is being continued all through this week, and will probably be prolonged for another week.—A deputation of four students from Edinburgh University conducted an impressive service in the Glasgow Christian Institute on Sunday evening. The audience was limited to young men, but a service for young women was conducted at the same hour in Free St. Peter's Church, by Miss Ludwig. PURITAN.

THE SANCTIFICATION OF THE LORD'S DAY.—The Sabbath Observance Prayer Union Society is issuing its tenth annual call to prayer for this object. The circulation of the call last year, in many languages, amounted to 248,000 copies. It is intended now to circulate 300,000 copies in the Metropolis, and for this purpose £40 is to be raised. Subscriptions are being received by Mr. Joseph W. Leng, 337, Strand, W.C.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN BETHANY.—It is proposed to establish in Bethany ("the town of Mary and her sister, Martha," where the Lord raised Lazarus from the dead), a Home which shall form a centre of Christian work. The village has to-day about five hundred inhabitants, who live in squalor and die in ignorance of the Gospel. A piece of land has been secured, and Miss M. M. Crawford (care of the English Consul, Jerusalem), hopes that means will be forthcoming for the erection of the house.

THE LAND AND THE BOOK.—2.

REV. J. NEIL'S second lecture at Exeter Hall, entitled, "Jerusalem; or, Discoveries during Life in the Holy City," was delivered on the 6th inst., before a still larger audience than the first, the Hall being quite crowded. Mr. George Williams presided. The lecturer's first point was the modern recovery of which was regarded in the days of David as the Gibraltar of Palestine fortifications. The very blind and the lame, so said the Jebusites, could here turn David and his forces away. Josephus gives a magnificent account of the defences of the city, natural and artificial, in his day, and specially at or about this point. The first of the three enclosure walls ran round the summit of Mount Zion. It had sixty towers.

In 1874, Mr. Henry Maudslay, following the former work of Sir Chas. Warren, fully explored and laid bare the rock foundation of this wall on the south-west brow of Mount Zion, in all probability the famous Jebusite fortress, "the stronghold of Zion." It proved indeed a magnificent natural fastness, rendered by human art practically impregnable. The limestone crag at this point appeared as a perpendicular scarp, that is, cut smooth and straight as a wall, to an average height of thirty feet, as far as the Turkish authorities would allow him to lay it bare, a distance of some hundred and thirty yards. A base of a huge tower was exposed to view, in the shape of a projecting scarp forty-five feet square. Thirty-six steps were seen cut in the face of the scarp for the purpose of ascending the base of a second smaller projecting scarp, or square buttress, the base of a second tower. The bases of three towers were found to contain no less than eighteen beers, or water-cisterns, hewn in the rock. These "cisterns to receive rain-water," and these "steps" are specially described by Josephus. A number of fallen stones, from three to four feet long, were found at the bottom with marks indicating Roman work. A ditch twenty feet wide was found at the foot of this scarp with a steep rough rock slope below, and, in one place at least, a second deeper scarp beneath the other, giving a rock-cut perpendicular face of some fifty feet in height!

"Well might David, rejoicing in the security of God's people, allude in enthusiastic language to these remarkable features as fitting symbols of the Divine protection, and to the awe with which they struck the minds of those monarchs who came to besiege the city when they first beheld them."

> Beautiful for elevation, the joy of the whole land,
> Is Mount Zion. . . .
> For lo! the kings were assembled,
> They marched on together.
> They beheld, and so they marvelled,
> They were troubled, they hasted away.
> . . . . .
> Walk about Zion, and go round about her,
> Count her towers;
> Mark ye well her bulwarks.
> . . . . .
> For this God is our God for ever and ever,
> He will Himself be our guide over death.

"JERUSALEM! MOUNTAINS ARE ROUND ABOUT HER."

Equally striking, as viewed at the Holy City, are the words of the next verse:—

> Jerusalem! mountains are round about her;
> And Jehovah is round about his people,
> Henceforth, even for evermore.

Here I can very well imagine the sceptic exclaiming, "Do you call these slight elevations 'mountains'? Why, they are only very small hills! The loftiest of them, Mount Scopus, does not rise more than about 150 feet above the highest point of the city, and only some 400 feet above the deepest point of the valley at its foot. Is this the accuracy of the Bible?" To him I should reply that, though it has been generally overlooked, they are, indeed, in the fullest sense of the English word, "mountains," for each of these apparently small hillocks is the summit of a mountain mass that all must allow is indeed respectable. Scopus is 2721 feet above the level of the sea, the Mount of Olives 2641 feet, the Mount of Offence 2411 feet, and the Mount of Evil Counsel 2548 feet. Thus each of these comparatively slight elevations above the surrounding country is indeed a true mountain peak. Why, in the whole county of Kent, there is not a point of ground above 900 feet high! But this is not all. The Hebrew word "mountain" (har), is given in Scripture both to the highland, or mountain region, in general, and also to any hill or ridge such as Scopus or Olivet. Thus Ebal and Gerizim are each called a har, or "mountain." Zion, which is lower than most of the hills that stand round it, is repeatedly spoken of as a har, while Olivet itself is in one place actually called by this name. It is, therefore, literally and minutely accurate to speak of the Holy City as surrounded by harim, or "mountains."

"The mountains," in a most striking manner, are indeed "round about her." With their deep, narrow, intervening valleys, more or less precipitous on each side, they stand like vast earthworks and fosses—a natural fortification around "the city of the Great King."

So much for the light thrown on Scripture by some of the topographical features of the Holy City. Let us now turn to its life.

There is a very remarkable and regular provision of nature, peculiar to Bible lands, which may be observed in a first sight of Palestine on any night in the hot season, when a west wind is blowing. I allude to

THE SEA NIGHT-MIST OF THE HOT SEASON.

It explains in a very striking and hitherto unsuspected manner the numerous mentions of the Hebrew word tal, uniformly rendered "dew" in the Authorised Version of the Bible. Some of these mentions have presented hitherto insuperable difficulties, such as the statement of the wise man, that—which, if "dew" in the scientific sense of the word is understood, is just what they do not, no dew ever forming when clouds are about! Take the words in Isaac's blessing—

> The clouds drop down the "dew."

> God give thee of the "dew" of heaven;

in that of Moses—

> Blessed of Jehovah be his land,
> For the precious things of heaven, for the "dew;"

in the proverb which says of an Eastern king—

> His favour is as "dew" upon the grass;

and in the promise—

> The remnant of Jacob shall be,
> In the midst of many peoples,
> As a "dew" from Jehovah.

Such words as these, and those in many other passages, bespeak a peculiar excellence and value which dew does not possess even amongst us, and still less in Palestine, where it only occurs in the winter, the time of abundant sub-tropical rains, which render it comparatively useless!

From April till the end of October no rain falls; while each day, for some ten to twelve hours, the sun shines with great strength, unveiled by a single cloud. This fierce heat is in May and October intensified by a burning wind, the shirocco, which gathers its withering, scorching power as it sweeps over the vast sands of the Arabian desert, and is the awful "East wind" of the Scripture. During this period, but more especially at its close in September and October, the West wind, which then prevails, comes up laden with moisture from the Mediterranean Sea, which is condensed in low-lying clouds of mist as soon as it reaches the land. These cloud-masses sweep low down over the ground, leaving behind them an immense amount of what is misnamed in our version "dew," but which is really a very fine, gentle rain, in the form of a light Scotch mist.

This explanation exactly accounts for "the clouds" being said "to drop" it down, which is just what they do. Very beautiful are the silvery-shining mist-clouds which may be seen as the day dawns being drawn up and dissolved into thin air, the fugitive clouds to which Hosea compares Israel's brief and transient seasons of goodness—

> Your goodness is like the morning cloud,
> And like the night-mist (tal) which early goes away.

It also displays the naturalness of the great amount of tal, or "night-mist," which fell miraculously on Gideon's fleece. It adds a new intensity to our Saviour's pathetic appeal—

> Open to me...
> For my head is filled with night-mist (tal),
> And my locks with the drops of the night.

There is an icy chill often attending exposure to these "night-mists," which is not experienced on a dewy night; the latter being always fine. In a word, let "night-mist" be written in each of the thirty-three places where the word "dew" occurs, and it will be found to give a new meaning and a new force in every instance!

> I will be as the night-mist (tal) to Israel.

What an altogether new and appropriate meaning is thus given to those words of Psalm cx., which have so puzzled the commentators—

> Thy people are free-will offerings in the day of thy power.
> In holy beauties;
> From the womb of the dawn,
> Thou hast the night-mist (tal) of thy youth (or birth).

"The womb of dawn" seems an Eastern highly figurative expression for those night-mist clouds from which an autumn morning in Palestine seems to emerge. At Zion the night-mist comes in richest abundance at this season of autumn, which is the time of the Feast of Tabernacles, or Ingathering, the feast typical of that glad coming age when "all Israel shall be saved," and "the receiving of them back be as life from the dead."

Psalm cx. 2, the force of which has hitherto entirely baffled the efforts of commentators, is as much as to say, "The freshness of thy new birth dates and is derived from the dawn of 'the day of the Lord,' 'the day of Jesus Christ,' earth's seventh millennial day of rest after six millennial working-days of toil and sorrow. At that day, the day of Jehovah's power, Israel shall have those "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord," which like gentle, quickening showers—"the night-mist of their birth"—will bring about their new and glorious life at the commencement of the millennium, when "a nation (the Lord's ancient people) shall be born at once," and, converted, saved, and restored to their own land, shall begin a new, fruitful, endless course of peace and glory. Then, and not till then, will the people of Israel as a nation be all presented as freewill offerings before the Lord, and "in holy beauties," that is, in the glorious ceremonial services of Ezekiel's Temple, appear every one of them in Zion as true worshippers of the triune Jehovah. But from the very earliest breaking of that day shall commence their new life. "From the womb of dawn"—from its very first hours—the Spirit's influences, like a life-giving night-mist sweeping over a parched and barren soil, shall renew their youth.

The last lecture of this course, entitled, "More Similitudes; or, Further Light on the least-known Branch of Bible-study," will be given in Exeter Hall, on Monday, Feb. 20, at 8 p.m.

RESCUE WORK AT PORTSMOUTH.—The Portsmouth District Christian Rescue Association, in a report recently issued, gives an encouraging account of work done. As soon as the financial position of the Association justifies the step, it is intended to open a suitable Home, where the girls can receive training in surroundings such as may influence them for good. The treasurer of the Association is Mrs. Church, Burlington Lodge, Victoria-road, Southsea.

VIGILANCE WORK IN BIRMINGHAM.

A public meeting in connection with the anniversary of the Birmingham and Midland Counties Vigilance Association was held on the evening of the 6th inst. in the Birmingham Town Hall. The attendance was large, and Mr. A. M. Chance, who presided, was supported on the platform by many gentlemen of influence. Letters were read from Sir E. A. H. Lechmere, M.P., Alderman Kenrick, M.P., Mr. G. Dixon, M.P., and Mr. J. E. Spencer, M.P., all of whom expressed their sympathy with the Association and its objects. Fifty-four clergymen and ministers of the town had written to express regret at their inability to be present, and not one dissentient view against the object of the Association had been received. Mr. Kynnersley, the stipendiary magistrate, wrote that no society in Birmingham was doing a more useful work.

In the course of an address, the Chairman defined the objects of the Association as the repression of criminal vice and public immorality. The Association wanted to work hand in hand with other associations, and such was the case with the White Cross Army. He should be very pleased if the two joined together, and made themselves stronger in the one common cause.

Speaking to a resolution which commended the Association to the hearty and liberal support of all lovers of purity and justice, Rev. J. J. Brown remarked that two things were aimed at—one was to educate and train the moral feeling of the entire community, and the other was to afford some protection to those who were led astray by wicked and designing men. The Society had had nearly fifty cases brought before its notice during its existence. In several of them convictions had been obtained, and in others some redress had been secured.

Mr. Samuel James Capper maintained that the cause of public morality is making progress. There is, he said, no question of politics so important as the relationship between the men and women of the country. In Jamaica he had been co operating with some noble-minded men. Meetings are being held there in every church and chapel, and the members are joining the White Cross Army. He said he had been told that not a thousand miles from the Town Hall of Birmingham there were to be found mansions of the highest respectability, presided over by those whose social position gave them the name of ladies, where wicked sons made it perilous in the highest degree for any female servant to enter.

Mr. R. C. Morgan, of London, also supported the resolution, and, referring to domestic service, said it was necessary for a girl going to service to ascertain the character of her employers.

Mrs. Ormiston Chant made an earnest appeal on behalf of the work. She claimed that it belonged to the nineteenth century, and held that the present generation has every reason to be proud of it. Mr. A. J. Naish also spoke in support of the resolution.

"NATURE AND FAITH."—The poem under this title which appeared in our last issue was written by Miss Elizabeth Webb, Rose Cottage, Addlesdrop, Chipping-Norton, who supplies twelve copies post-free for 6d. It may also be had of various publishers.

THE SPANISH ARMADA.—The council of the committee formed for the purpose of promoting the commemoration of the defeat of the Spanish Armada in 1588, and of the accession of the Protestant dynasty in 1688, has suggested the formation of local committees to arrange commemorative meetings. To accomplish the objects of the council a fund is to be raised, and in the first instance a sum of £50,000 is called for. Information as to these objects may be obtained from the secretaries of the council, at 9, Strand, London. The central council will do its best to send deputations about the country to address public meetings.

MISSION WORK IN MOROCCO.

The following passages from Miss Herdman's diary of work in Morocco among the Kabyles will be read with interest:—

January 2.—Yesterday morning several parties of Jews came shouting New Year congratulations, singing a Spanish rhyme, wishing many years of life to the inmates of the house—playing timbrels and huzzahing. They expected a good deal of money, but did not even get in to see us; as on Sundays we always refuse all comers during the morning, in order to consider our house a church, and have our worship quietly. The Spaniards, of Larache, give a little present on New Year's Day to all who come to their house. We gave out that they were to expect nothing from us, as we give medicine and food to the sick poor.

We have not been visited by large numbers, but yet we have scarcely had the house empty all day—a few boys, a few girls, Moors; four or five Christian girls, that is, Roman Catholics, to sing hymns; people in for medicine, Jews and Moors, men and women. On Sunday afternoons we admit Moors and Christians, and on the other six days Jews, devoting Saturday almost entirely to them. The captain and mate of an English vessel and three Moors came in yesterday afternoon and had tea; they sang with us a great many English hymns from Songs and Solos. Detained as they are in the harbour by storms, any books are eagerly read, and much blessing will attend those who in England have cared for our sailors, and have given them the Bible and wholesome literature. A Roman Catholic young lady asked me yesterday for a Bible. I lent her a New Testament, and to-day I recommended her to buy a Bible for herself. She has come a great deal latterly with her young companions, to learn to sing Spanish hymns.

After performing various other duties, including visiting the sick, we were reminded this morning by guns and trumpets that this was to be the day of the entrance of the new governor of Larache, accompanied by two of the Sultan's sons, who were to come here for their education. So we followed the multitude who flocked through the market gate to see the procession enter. However, although we went back and forth visiting a family and marketing, we did not see the sight, as we could not spare so many hours, nor sit on the damp grass as many were doing. While we were at dinner guns announced the arrival, and a class of young girls who sat with us in the afternoon told us of the splendid horses and powder-play, and of the three young princes, each on a fine horse, led by two slaves and with a female slave each as servant. The boys are, from what we gathered, from eight to ten years old.

This evening Miss Carey visited a Jewish boy who had convulsions, and appeared to be dying. According to the Jews' custom, the mother left the room, so as not to see the death of the child, while a woman brought salt and sprinkled the child therewith; then, bringing a long bamboo cane, the woman first spoke to the child, and afterwards broke the cane in pieces and laid it on his chest. These doings are intended to exorcise demons, and those who practise them are called "wise women." The child's father, in the meantime, repeated Hebrew prayers, the neighbours having been first assembled. Everything is done in public in this country. There is no privacy. The child rallied, and may yet live.

January 6.—The boy died to-day, after repeated convulsions. These fine days have enabled us to walk up to the Moorish quarter to visit, and also to go and see several families of Jews. Almost every minute of the day has been occupied, in teaching either in the houses of the people or in our own house. Sometimes we go together, at other times separately so as to cover more ground. I sometimes wish a photo could be taken of the groups of attentive listeners. We have felt during this Week of Prayer that the prayers of fellow-Christians are being answered. The boys and girls, who are a little troublesome sometimes, coming when we would rather be studying, are certainly teaching their elders. Several mothers have said to us lately, "I am so glad my boy (or my girl) goes to your house. You teach them."

MISS HEDENSTROM'S HOME.

On Monday afternoon last the Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home, West India Docks, E., was opened by His Royal Highness Prince Oscar of Sweden and Norway. The building was gaily decorated within and without with bunting. The gathering included many friends of sailors, and ladies and gentlemen interested in religious and philanthropic effort.

The proceedings were presided over by Mr. T. A. Denny, who gave an account of the Home in its origin and its work.

The Prince was loudly cheered on declaring the Home open. His remarks showed a high appreciation of the efforts of Miss Hedenström.

In the course of a brief address, Miss Hedenström declared herself happy in realising that the Home had been built, and had entered upon its career of usefulness.

Mr. David Carnegie, who is engaged in large commercial transactions with Scandinavia, made a short speech, after which the Bishop of Bedford expressed pleasure at being able to show his sympathy with the work.

CONFERENCE AT SUNDERLAND.

A second annual Missionary Conference was held at Sunderland for three days last week. It is interesting as the effort of a young tradesman, Mr. Walter Price, who, not having been accepted as a foreign missionary, has done what he could to evoke missionary interest in the town where he resides.

This year's gathering was a great advance, both in interest and numbers. Two or more have gone to the foreign field, as the result of last year's meetings, and we shall be surprised if this year is not far more fruitful.

Mr. Baron supplied the place of Rev. J. Wilkinson who was ill, and deeply interested us by his openings of Scripture as well as his narative of personal work among the Jews in England and abroad. Mr. Radcliffe was as thrilling as ever. Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, in his calm and simple yet influential way, stirred the hearts of all to personal consecration and to foreign work.

Dr. Barnardo's presence necessitated a move to a larger place, and the neighbouring Wesleyan chapel was filled. He told of a family of tramps, the children of which were preserved pure and innocent, while a pretty little city girl, in one of his Homes, is obliged to be kept apart from the rest, her language is so terrible. The moral seems to be that children moving through the country are receptive of a ministry of nature from which the waif of the city is debarred. "God made the country; man made the town." Mr. Glenny described the North Africa Mission, and Mr. Bailey, secretary of the Leper Mission, told the story of his recent tour in India. Mr. Fyson spoke of Japan.

The Baptist Mission on the Congo, and Bishop Taylor's self-supporting Mission in Central Africa, were also deeply interesting.

Mr. Burn, and Mr. Seagram, who took part in this Conference, also visited York, and revived a dying Y.M.C.A. there.

Local Conferences of this kind are most desirable, and the experience at Sunderland shows how much can be done by one man who means it.

Notes and Comments.

IN our next issue we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. Nundo L. Doss, of the London Missionary Society.

Great interest is manifested in Rev. J. Neil's lectures at Exeter Hall. As only one more will be delivered to complete the present course, on Monday evening next, we counsel those desirous of obtaining some fresh thoughts on the written Word to make a point of being present.

Rev. John Wilkinson, in his important pamphlet, entitled, "The World-Wide Distribution of the Word of God," to which we referred in a recent issue, suggests that "the principal channel or agency should be the missionaries of all evangelical societies throughout the world," and says:—

> These existing missions in all parts of the world should be utilised to the utmost extent in Bible distribution, as the most economical in expense, and the most efficient as to agency. We humbly suggest also that the obligation should not be all on one side, but should be cherished as mutual—the missionary agencies, grateful for an abundant supply of Scriptures, at small cost to their funds, to be distributed widely and freely, not only at their stations, but by itinerant missions; and the Bible Societies, grateful for inexpensive channels for wide distribution, and by efficient agents, of those copies of the Word of God for which the Christian public have so willingly subscribed their tens of thousands of pounds.

This is a wise proposition, which deserves careful consideration, and we trust that the friendly discussion will lead to the world-wide circulation of the Word of God, which is given to us "without money and without price."

Dr. J. E. Rankin, writing in the New York Independent on the Andover controversy, says:—

> Some of us have come to think the great mistake of modern Congregationalists is that they have set up to be a denomination; when they are really a fellowship of kindred churches. Individual churches could protect themselves against heresy. And how shall they protect themselves against a Council which undertakes the furnishing of a theological judicature which publishes and claims quasi-authority for a creed, which was never asked for, authorised, or adopted; a creed, that covers into this fellowship, without the consent of its members, many who do not accept evangelical views? I recall the emphatic expressions of the venerable Dr. Hopkins, at the house of his son-in-law in Washington, that the creed was a great mistake: it was not needed. I believe it to be worse, even the source of all our present woes. We have thus made our boundaries so broad, that we dare not send to the heathen, men whom this luxurious, easy-going period accepts as evangelical.

This is worth consideration in connection with the present proposal for a creed. Every creed is partial and imperfect. The basis of the Evangelical Alliance excludes, by its articles on the Ordinances and Ministry, the Friends and the Plymouth Brethren, while it admits those who use the same term (e.g., Baptism) in totally different senses. The Apostles' Creed might be subscribed by those who deny the existence of the devil. Neither the Thirty-Nine Articles, nor the Assembly's Catechism, nor any other human formula, is accepted to-day by all Evangelical Christians. Only in Christ can we all be one.

We are increasingly indisposed to subscription to a human formula. No man, or body of men, can be expected to construct a formula which should maintain the proportions of the faith. Gases in given proportions form air and water; in other proportions they would produce neither air nor water. The food of the soul is the Word of God, revealed to us by our Father in Heaven through his Spirit. Why should we have forced upon us man's imperfect and faulty summary instead? "Will a man leave My fields for the snow of Lebanon? Shall the living waters be exchanged for the cold waters that come from another place?"

Rev. James Thew, of Leicester, writes to The Christian World:—

> I too believe in the atoning death, in the punishment of sin, in the work and power and personality of the Blessed Spirit, in the incarnation and deity of our Lord Jesus Christ, and in his glorious resurrection from the dead. If I ceased to believe one of these things I would go out of the denomination. They are my life, and the reason and inspiration of my ministry. But, except on matters of historic fact—on which, if we believe at all, there cannot well be difference of opinion—I do not hold these things as Mr. Spurgeon does.

What honesty is there in saying we believe the same things, but not in the same sense? Or, if there be honesty, what is the use of a form of words which does not mean the same to different persons; or which shifts its meaning as they shift their views?

The French Government having made a proposal for the re-opening of the Coolie labour traffic between India and Réunion, Mr. C. H. Allen, secretary of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, promptly addressed the British Foreign Office on the subject. This led M. Waddington, the French Ambassador in London, to forward to Mr. Allen, for the information of the Anti-Slavery Society, certain documents which the French Government hoped would remove the Society's objection to the course proposed. But the information went not a single step towards removing the serious objection which must exist to British-Indian subjects being imported into the colonies of a foreign country. So the Anti-Slavery Society continues its opposition. In a letter to M. Waddington, Mr. Allen says:—

> Even in British colonies where slavery had once existed—such as Guiana, the West India Islands, and the Mauritius—it was found that the proper protection of free immigrants was almost a matter of impossibility. Indeed, so great was the oppression in some cases, that the Indian Government, on hearing the reports of commissions sent out from England, peremptorily stopped any further exportation of indentured Coolie labour to British colonies. The re-introduction of this labour into British possessions has only been allowed after the enforced establishment of a rigorous system of inspection by officers appointed by the Government, and unconnected with the planting interest, by which means something like a fair treatment of the immigrants could be ensured.

An illustration of the misery arising from the convent system is furnished by a recent occurrence at Vigo, which has caused much excitement and indignation. A young lady of small fortune, but in very bad health, entered a convent against her father's wishes: religious excitement, and the severities of the régime, made her worse, and the doctors ordered her removal: this the "superior," supported by the Bishop, refused to allow. The father then obtained an order from the civil authorities, directing his daughter to be given up to him, but on the morning of the day fixed the sick novice took perpetual vows, thus rendering the order practically useless: eight days afterwards she died, leaving her property to the convent. What mingled subtlety and cruelty are involved in this transaction! Yet there are those among Protestants who see no harm in imitations of this soul-paralysing system, whose unhappy subjects are trained to suppress all the tender, God-given impulses of the heart, and unquestioningly to place their will, their liberty, and their conscience at the disposal of an erring, fallible mortal like themselves.

It is sad to hear every now and again of young Englishwomen being deceived and ruined by wicked foreigners. The other day it was reported that three more British girls who had married Frenchmen in England, had, on arriving in Paris, discovered to their sorrow and dismay, that their weddings were not valid,—that the law of France did not recognise English marriage contracts. In each case the husband "had omitted the necessary formalities in France" before the ceremony in England took place! The Echo remarks:—

> The danger lies in the number of young Frenchmen who come over here for their education. They board in respectable families; are impressionable themselves, while our maidens are susceptible. When they marry the English girl, they doubtless, in many cases, intend to behave honestly; but on their return to France their relatives protest, they yield, and the young wife is deserted.

Young women need to be constantly reminded of the dangers which beset them. Let those who have opportunity be ready at all times to speak a word of warning against these disreputable foreigners.

When the enemy begins to cry out, it is a sure sign that he is hit. The deputation of licensed victuallers which recently waited upon the President of the Local Government Board gave expression to the feelings of concern and alarm with which they view the prospect of the transfer of control over licences from the magistrates to an elective body which shall be a true reflection of the feelings of the people. We join issue with the assertion that the justices are the fittest persons to judge of the alcoholic requirements of a particular place. The inhabitants who live within a stone's throw of half a dozen public-houses, and are subject to all the annoyances directly and indirectly consequent thereon, are surely better qualified to deal with the question than the magistrate who lives in the quiet suburb, away from all the demoralising sights and sounds.

Mr. Ritchie has also been waited upon by a deputation from the United Kingdom Alliance, but his reply to their statements did not throw much additional light on the proposals of the Government. The immediate duty of temperance reformers seems to be to secure that the new licensing authority should be one really representative of local views.

In a leader on the latest "turf scandal," The Times naïvely admits that that institution is "not as pure as it might be," that "the temptations to dishonesty are endless," and that betting is "at the least a demoralising pursuit"; yet, in the same issue, five columns are devoted to the report of some alleged dishonest practices among the shining lights of the racing world. The latest attempt on the part of a nobleman to purify the race-course will only result, as did the efforts of the mythological Sisyphus with his stone. The matter will be a nine days' wonder, and then things will go on as before. "The turf" is an Augean stable, which can only be cleansed by pulling it down. As has before been insisted upon in these columns,

THE GOVERNMENT versus GOD IN INDIA.

THE following is another of Mr. Dyer's terrible letters from India. We have so printed it that it may be removed by any who think it necessary to do so. It will no doubt appear, in larger type, in The Sentinel for March. We deplore the necessity of publishing these facts, but we prefer to sacrifice our own feelings, and to accept the consequences, rather than shrink from a God-given responsibility (Ezekiel xxxiii. 1—11), and be found with the blood of souls upon our skirts. A contemporary says these facts are too vile for a family journal. But is not the Bible a family journal? There is nothing protested against here that is not denounced there in much stronger language than is here employed. It is suggested that a meeting should be called of men only, that the Missionary Societies and the Churches should be urged to move the Government, and that if all this fails, the last appeal must be to God and the people. It is no use taking these steps one by one; they are all good, except the exclusion of women. It is their subject at least as much as ours, and nothing will be done unless they do the most. But all these methods, and every other that can be devised, are all needed to combat this tremendous evil, which must bring the judgments of God upon this guilty nation. For if it be declared emphatically that those who thus sin "God will judge," how much more intolerable will be his judgment on the Government, and the people it represents, who are really and practically the procurers, the bawds, the panderers, the Balaams, to these supra-Midianitish crimes, which exceed in horror the infamies of Baal-peor. (See Lady ——'s letter at the end.)

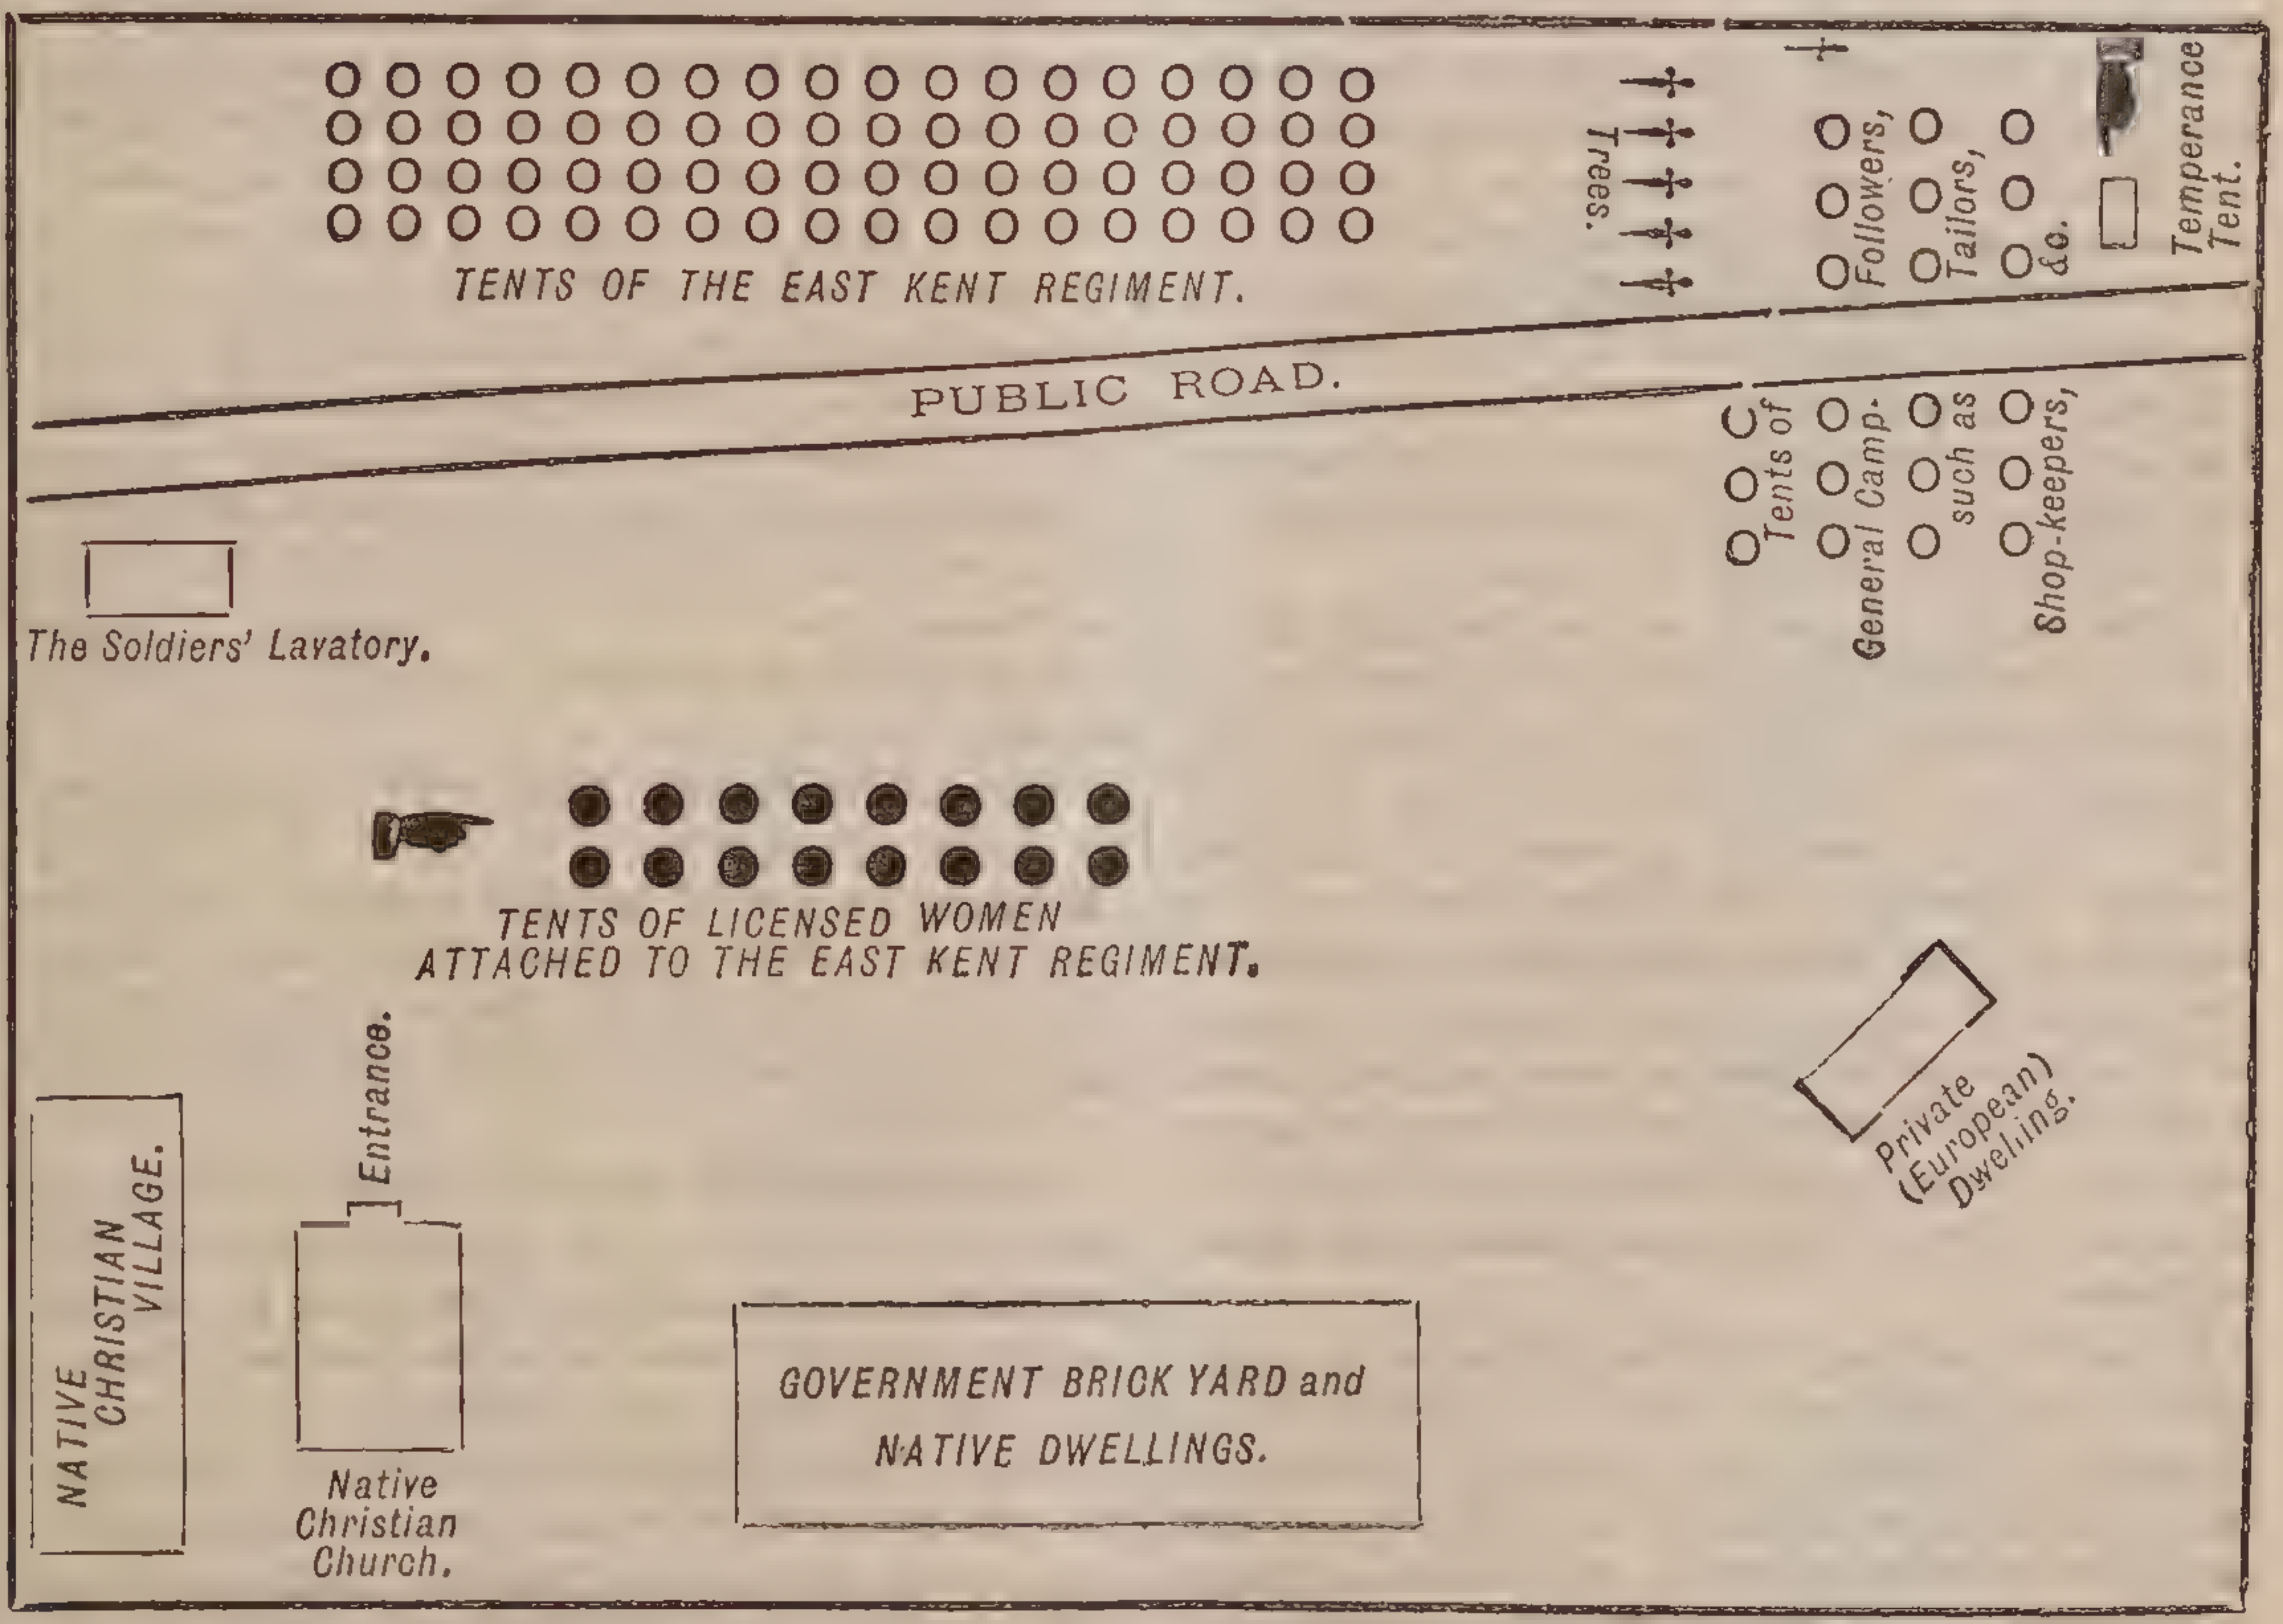
SITUATED between the great cities of Allahabad and Delhi, from 150 to 200 miles from each, on a newly made loop-line of railway, is the town and military station of Sitapur (sometimes written Seetapore). Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Lawson, devoted missionaries of the American Methodist Episcopal Church, reside there. The district assigned to them to labour in is 80 miles long by 40 broad, and contains a population of nearly two millions. They are the only foreign missionaries to this great multitude—one to a million souls. They have six valued native pastors, it is true, and Mr. and Mrs. Lawson in the cool months itinerate, pitching their Gospel tent from village to village; but, notwithstanding all this, there are still hundreds of villages in their district in which the people are in the densest heathen darkness, no preacher of the Gospel ever having penetrated into their midst. The churches of Great Britain are doing nothing for these people. Permit me to call attention to what the British Government is doing.

At Sitapur there are three bazaars of Government certificated women. Soon after noon, on the day following that upon which the Christian Church throughout the world celebrates the birth of Him who came to save his people from their sins (Matt. i. 21), Mr. Lawson accompanied me to see one of the above-mentioned establishments which the Government of a Christian nation has set down in the midst of a vast heathen population. There was no difficulty in reaching it. In India this thing is not done in a corner. Soldiers were going in and out of the large open enclosure, without any appearance of shame, where the licensees reside. One beardless youth, probably fresh from some English country home, who entered before we could speak to him, did not appear to be more than seventeen years of age. Native lads and men were lounging about (some of them doubtless connected with neighbouring native shops); and little children were playing near the entrances to this vestibule of hell.

One soldier with whom we conversed was on patrol duty to keep order there. We asked him whether he thought that that was a proper occupation for him. He answered that he had no option. That the authorities consider that this soul-destroying business should be systematised and facilitated is illustrated in their last issued official report for the North West Provinces and Oudh, where it is stated with satisfaction in regard to Sitapur, that "the houses of these registered women are well kept, and provided with requisites for the maintenance of cleanliness." It appears from the same document that at Sitapur there is one licensee to every eleven soldiers.

While we were talking to the soldier on patrol duty, two of them came boldly out and joined the group. Mr. Lawson addressed the most forward of the two on the sinfulness of her life, and earnestly pointed her to Him who is able to save to the uttermost. She saucily asked if there were two gods. The Hindoos have a popular, but hideous god, named Mahadeo, which is the personification of sensuality. What the exact thought was that prompted the question, I shall not endeavour to determine, but if it was the supposition that Mahadeo is the god of the British authorities, from whom she received her certificate to sin, I would not question its suitability.

Two days after, a number of these women were on the march to Lucknow, by order of the officer commanding the troops at Sitapur, as an escort to a part of his regiment en route for the camp of exercise there. They pitch their tents near those of the soldiers, night by night, on the march; they encamp close to them at Lucknow, and presently return with them to Sitapur. While Mr. and Mrs. Lawson itinerate for God, and the advancement of his kingdom, these women, under the auspices and by command of the Imperial Government of India, itinerate for Satan and the damnation of souls. The officers commanding regiments say they have no alternative. In arranging such a provision they only obey orders. Like certain soldiers of old, with a perverted obedience, they crucify the Lord, and sit down and watch Him there, under the awful illusion that they can shift their responsibility to another (Matt. xxvii. 35, 36). But there is no authority higher than God.



The day following the march of the 2nd Battalion of the Norfolk Regiment from Sitapur to Lucknow, I visited the barracks and camp at Bareilly. The ordinary garrison at Bareilly includes the 2nd Battalion of the Seaforth Highlanders and the F Battery of the 4th Depôt of Field Artillery. There is a permanent barrack or bazaar of licensees for each of these, and a third bazaar in the native city, where the women are licensed, both as to soldiers and natives.

In addition, there are at Bareilly, for winter manœuvres, the 2nd Battalion of the East Kent Regiment and the 2nd Battalion of the Scottish Rifles (late the 90th Foot). Each has brought with it a complement of women. The tents of those attached to the Scottish Rifles are sixty-four yards from, and in full view of, the Serpentine-road, a favourite drive of the inhabitants of Bareilly. The foregoing plan of the encampment of the 2nd Battalion of the East Kent Regiment will speak for itself. It is an illustration and sample of how the system is forced upon the British soldier, and how the native population is corrupted by the British Government in India. While the temperance tent is in a comparatively obscure corner, the tents of the Government women confront the troops from morning to night, separated from their own tents only by a public thoroughfare, without any buildings or trees intervening.

Their encampment, as shown in this plan, is in full view of the entrance to the native Christian church. A school is also held in that building. I asked Mr. Thomas, the native pastor (the translator of a work by the Bishop of Oxford), if he knew who occupied the tents in question. Yes, he knew. I then inquired what he thought about it. He answered in a tone of hopelessness, "What can I do? It is the action of the Government." He said that Mr. Jermyn, a former chaplain at Bareilly, had protested in writing against this monstrous evil, but there had been no change. Mr. Thomas also said that, when preaching in the streets of the city, his fellow-countrymen had resisted him with the remark, "You preach to us to be pure, but look at what your Christian Government does."

Of course the natives mark the contrast between Christianity as taught by Christian ministers and as practised by the Government, which in their eyes authoritatively represents Christianity. A regiment which is now at Bareilly, was some time since on the march from Calcutta to Cawnpore, accompanied as usual by an establishment of licensees. But when Gya was reached, in consequence of an outbreak of cholera, the troops were ordered to take train. A number of respectable Bengalese witnessed the embarkation, and were astonished to see provision made on the train for this escort. A discussion arose among the Bengalese as to whether they were really there under the sanction of the Government. It was an aspect of Christian rule with which some of them were not familiar. A Christian Englishman who was present was appealed to. He was obliged reluctantly to acknowledge the sin of his Government.

Scotch regiments, such as the Seaforth Highlanders, now stationed at Bareilly, have Scotch chaplains attached to them, who, unlike other chaplains, move with the regiments from place to place. It will painfully interest the Christian churches of Scotland to know that representatives of hell are also moved with Scotch regiments, sometimes, of course, through districts missioned at the expense of the churches north of the Tweed. A chaplain who has been thus called upon to march with such a company has recently expressed to me his sense of the incongruity and humiliation of the position.

I wish I could say that the shameless arrangement of the temporary camp of the East Kent Regiment at Bareilly (see plan) is exceptional. The permanent situation of the official marts of infamy at Bareilly and other places I have visited has been equally shameless. Those for the Seaforth Highlanders open directly upon the regimental canteen, the sergeants' mess, the orderly room, and the gymnasium, within a few yards of each. At Delhi they are in Esplanade-row, a leading thoroughfare facing the fort and barracks, and within eighty paces of the entrance to the Baptist Chapel. At one end of Esplanade-row is the Baptist College.

The official report, referred to in the third paragraph of this letter, demonstrates that the licensed houses which the Holy Scriptures describe as "the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death," are not placed right across the path of the British soldier in India by accident, but by design. In that report there are repeated suggestions for making such houses still further "attractive" and "convenient" both "to soldiers and prostitutes" (pages 5, 13, 15). The report shows that in some places considerable progress has been made in that direction. At Muttra a portion only of the women licensed to sin by Government "live in specially-built quarters." The medical officer suggests that the others "should have special quarters provided for them." He then complains "that the regimental matron lacks energy, and does not take trouble to attract good-looking women," and he asks that she "be got rid of, and a more suitable woman appointed." The medical officer at Jhansi goes a step farther, and, in order to tempt the soldier to sin by providing greater variety, puts forward the ghastly thought of "a limit" being "fixed for the stay of the same women in the regimental brothels, others being substituted for them at intervals."

The result of the increasing temptations to vice provided by the Government is, of course, an increase of disease among the men. The statistics of the fourteen districts embraced in the report in question show that in two of the fourteen places cursed by licensed sin, the Government certifies one licensee to every six soldiers. Those two places, and another where the proportion is one to ten, stand highest on the disease list. On the other hand, at the three places where disease is lowest, the ratio is one to twenty-one, one to twenty-two, and one to thirty-seven. Of course a great deal of ingenuity is displayed to explain away the significance of these figures, but the results remain, a startling commentary upon the fact that God has made the moral and physical laws which relate to the human frame to work in unison, and that what is morally wrong can never be physically beneficial.

The head official who sums up the fourteen divisional reports above mentioned (Surgeon-Major J. Richardson, Officiating Sanitary Commissioner, North-West Provinces and Oudh) is obliged to confess that, notwithstanding all the degrading expedients that have been adopted to bring about a different effect, "the ratio [of disease among the European troops] is still higher than the mean of the previous five years, and also than the mean of the five years prior to the opening of the Lock Hospitals." That is to say, there is more disease among the soldiers, resulting from immorality, than there was before the perfecting of the machinery of State-regulated vice by the opening of prison hospitals for the enforced seclusion of diseased women.

The results for the whole of the British army in India are similar. The report of "Sanitary Measures in India" for 1885-6 shows that there was a progressive rise from 1871 to 1885. In the former year the ratio of disease among the European troops was 196 per 1000, and in 1885 it was 342 per 1000.

The awful moral depravity which overtakes the officials engaged in the administration of this machinery of sensuality is illustrated by the last words of this Surgeon-Major Richardson. Instead of proposing that the Government should retrace its steps, by lessening the temptations to vice among the troops, and increasing the agencies for their moral and spiritual elevation, he suggests that as "the soldier is a rational being, he might be put in possession of some practical hygienic knowledge which, if made use of, would assuredly enable him to escape, in a great proportion of instances, the consequences of the risks" of impure practices. He adds that "medical officers know the direction which such special teaching should take, and would have no more difficulty in communicating to the soldier a knowledge of the art of preserving his own health, than they have in training him to be helpful to his comrades when they are hurt."

It is difficult to find words sufficiently strong adequately to characterise such a hideous, wicked, and infidel suggestion. No wonder that under the régime of functionaries like Surgeon-Major J. Richardson, and the higher officials who countenance and foster their unholy expedients, the British army in India is rotting away, and that the British soldier is being made into a half brute and half devil. Because God is true to his word, and to the law of cause and effect which He has set in the human body, such remedies must necessarily be as futile as they are abominable.

At the expiration of their term in India, multitudes of these short service soldiers, bearing in their bodies the marks of their vices, return to England to infect the population with the ideas and habits with which they have here been indoctrinated by authority.

I am confident that the churches of Great Britain only need to know the facts concerning this abuse of British rule in India to demand the immediate stoppage of its calamitous course. The number of Christian missionaries that are sent to India by the Churches of the world (Great Britain and Ireland, United States, Canada, Australasia, Germany, Switzerland, Sweden, Denmark, &c.), is exceeded threefold by the emissaries of hell who are here licensed by the British Government. Add to this the disastrous moral influence of the majority of the fifty thousand European troops whom the Government has debauched, and the blight, antagonistic to the reception of Christian teaching, which a knowledge that the Government licenses sin produces among the natives, and some still inadequate idea will be formed of the gigantic barrier that confronts missionary progress among vast masses of population through the action of a Government for which the people of Great Britain are practically responsible.

This matter of the legalisation of sin must become a burning question with everyone who desires the salvation of the millions of India. The missionaries sow their grain. The Government sows broadcast the tares which choke it.

Let a sense of the wrong which we have inflicted upon India in this respect appeal to Christian hearts to render abundant compensation. Christian missionaries in our Indian Empire ought to be at once multiplied tenfold, and still the needs of the teeming population would be insufficiently met. The question is not only, Who will cast into the treasury of the Lord for this purpose, and who will consecrate their lives to the work? but, Who will do both? There are in the home country hundreds of true disciples of the Saviour who possess sufficient means to support themselves in the foreign mission field, and who would be unspeakably happier through thus presenting their "bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God." Who among the readers of this letter will practise consecration in the spirit of Miss Frances Ridley Havergal's well-known hymn, as well as sing it?

Ever, only, all for Thee.

Any missionary society's secretary can doubtless advise as to vacant fields; or my friend, Mr. Wallace J. Gladwin, Bombay, will gladly point out where missionary volunteers (men or women) possessing an income of from fifty to eighty pounds a year, can advantageously locate themselves.

ALFRED S. DYER.

Umballa, India, January 14.

A LADY OF TITLE, an earnest working Christian, writes us concerning Mr. Dyer's former letter, "The Black Hand in India":—"Feb. 9, 1888.—I have been talking with a gentleman connected with the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society, this afternoon, about the awful revelations of Mr. Dyer, which you published in THE CHRISTIAN. We agree that they ought to be made widely known. Would it be possible for you to reprint his paper as a small quarto volume, in large type? It ought, we think, to be sent to every member of both Houses of Parliament, and circulated broadcast. But the first thing is to reprint it, so as to be able to buy it for circulation, in an attractive, readable form. I venture, therefore, to trouble you with this note. The guilt is national, and ought to be brought home to the national conscience."

THE POOR;

AND WHAT GOD'S WORD SAYS ABOUT THEM.

BY PASTOR A. G. BROWN.

The great problem of poverty attracts more attention than ever. Every newspaper has an occasional "leader" on the subject. The magazines contain articles by those who are supposed to be "experts" in the matter. The theme comes up for discussion in drawing-rooms, lecture halls, and railway carriages, and all kinds of authorities are quoted to demonstrate the cause, and point out the best ways of dealing with the perplexing evil. We have noticed, however, that amid all the authorities quoted there has been one strangely ignored. It might almost be thought that God has nothing to say upon the matter, and that his book was "out of court" as a volume of reference. This omission is not surprising on the part of the world. It would be a strange thing if those careless about God's mind in greater matters were anxious to know it upon the question of their attitude towards the poor. It is, however, both strange and sad that many professed Christians seem to forget that they have a book in their possession which deals largely with the question agitating their minds and troubling their hearts. We have thought it well to gather a collection of Divine utterances concerning the poor and our relation towards them. He cannot act wrongly who has a "thus saith the Lord" for his action. Let us be guided by infallible authority.

THE WORD BY MOSES.

Sympathy with poverty must not pervert justice:—

> Thou shalt not wrest the judgment of thy poor in his cause (Exod. xxiii. 6).

The rights of rich and poor to be equally respected:—

> Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment; thou shalt not respect the person of the poor, nor honour the person of the mighty (Lev. xix. 15).

The poor are not to be plundered by usury, or stripped of home and garments:—

> If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor by thee, thou shalt not be to him as an usurer, neither shalt thou lay upon him usury.
> If thou at all take thy neighbour's raiment to pledge, thou shalt deliver it unto him by that the sun goeth down:
> For that is his covering only, it is his raiment for his skin: wherein shall he sleep? And it shall come to pass, when he crieth unto Me, that I will hear; for I am gracious (Exod. xxii. 25—27).
> When thou dost lend thy brother any thing, thou shalt not go into his house to fetch his pledge.
> Thou shalt stand abroad, and the man to whom thou dost lend shall bring out the pledge abroad unto thee.
> In any case thou shalt deliver him the pledge again when the sun goeth down, that he may sleep in his own raiment and bless thee: and it shall be righteousness unto thee before the Lord thy God (Deut. xxiv. 10—13).

The poor are not to be kept waiting for wages due:—

> Thou shalt not oppress an hired servant that is poor and needy, whether he be of thy brethren, or of thy strangers that are in thy land within thy gates:
> At his day thou shalt give him his hire, neither shall the sun go down upon it; for he is poor, and setteth his heart upon it: lest he cry against thee unto the Lord, and it be sin unto thee (Deut. xxiv. 14, 15).

In all ages there are to be poor, and the wealthy find in them their opportunity for kindness:—

> The poor shall never cease out of the land: therefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy, in thy land (Deut. xv. 11).

THE WORD IN SAMUEL.

There is a Divine sovereignty in the distribution of this world's wealth. He that hath it may well walk humbly, for God can reverse positions:—

> The Lord maketh poor and maketh rich, He bringeth low and lifteth up. He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dung-hill to set them among princes...for the pillars of the earth are the Lord's, and He hath set the world upon them (1 Sam. ii. 7, 8).

THE WORD IN JOB.

Those who eat all and leave none for others are on the high road to want:—

> Because he hath oppressed and forsaken the poor, he hath violently taken away an house which he builded not. Because he knew no quietness in his greed, he shall not save aught of that wherein he delighteth. There was nothing left that he devoured not; therefore his prosperity shall not endure (xx. 19—21, R.V.)

Can we all say this without any fear of losing our arms from the shoulder blade?—

> If I have withheld the poor from their desire, or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail; or have eaten my morsel myself alone, and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof...If I have seen any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering; if his loins have not blessed me, and if he were not warmed with the fleece of my sheep; if I have lifted up my hand against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate: then let mine arm fall from my shoulder blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone (xxxi. 16—22).

THE PSALMS.

He who catches the poor, shall catch more than he bargains for:—

> In the pride of the wicked, the poor is hotly pursued.
> The wicked lieth in wait secretly as a lion in his den: he lieth in wait to catch the poor: he doth catch the poor, when he draweth him into his net.
> He croucheth, and humbleth himself, that the poor may fall by his strong ones.
> Thou hast seen it; for thou beholdest mischief and spite, to requite it with thy hand (x. 2; R.V. 9, 10—14.)

He who requites those who catch the poor, remembers those who consider them. God makes the bed of those who soften the lot of others:—

> Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the Lord will deliver him in the time of trouble.
> The Lord will preserve him, and keep him alive; and he shall be blessed upon the earth: and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies.
> The Lord will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing: thou wilt make all his bed in his sickness (xli. 1—3).

No deliverer of the poor like unto the Lord:—

> All my bones shall say, Lord, who is like unto thee, which deliverest the poor from him that is too strong for him, yea, the poor and needy from him that spoileth him (xxv. 10).

These shall be the glories of the reign of Christ. "Thy kingdom come":—

> He has judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with judgment.
> The mountains shall bring peace to the people, and the little hills, by righteousness.
> He shall judge the poor of the people, he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor.
> For he shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also, and him that hath no helper.
> He shall spare the poor and needy, and shall save the souls of the needy.
> He shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence: and precious shall their blood be in his sight (lxxii.)

Here is something we may be certain about:—

> I know that the Lord will maintain the cause of the afflicted, and the right of the poor (cxl. 12).

THE PROVERBS.

Poverty pitied is Christ crowned:—

> He that oppresseth the poor reproacheth his Maker; but he that hath mercy on the needy honoureth Him (xiv. 31, R.V.).

Yet many would rather be seen with a well-dressed liar than an ill-clad saint:—

> A poor man is better than a liar (xix. 22).

Yes, and with a bonus into the bargain:—

> He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and his good deed will He pay him again (xix. 17, R.V.).

Rich and poor are on the same level in birth; in death; at the cross; before the throne. Then let them meet more often between these points:—

> The rich and poor meet together (xxii. 2).

> She stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy (xxxi. 20).

ISAIAH.

Cruel competition is a mill that grinds many a face. It grinds health out, haggardness in:—

> The spoil of the poor is in your houses. What mean ye that ye crush my people, and grind the face of the poor? (iii. 14, 15, R.V.)

Feeding others is the fast that God prizes; but with gifts bestowed there must be a "drawn out soul":—

> Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke?
> Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?
> And if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul; then shall thy light rise in obscurity, and thy darkness be as the noonday:
> And the Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought, and make fat thy bones: and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not (lviii. 6, 7, 10, 11).

JEREMIAH.

God save our garments from this stain:—

> Also in thy skirts is found the blood of the souls of the innocent poor (ii. 34, R.V.).

AMOS.

We do not buy men and women now, but we buy their labour, and I have often seen the toil of a day bought for the value of a pair of shoes, and those old ones too:—

> Thus saith the Lord; for three transgressions of Israel, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they sold the righteous for silver, and the poor for a pair of shoes (ii. 6).
> Hear this, O ye that swallow up the needy, even to make the poor of the land to fail,
> Saying, When will the new moon be gone, that we may sell corn? and the Sabbath, that we may set forth wheat, making the ephah small, and the shekel great, and falsifying the balances by deceit? That we may buy the poor for silver, and the needy for a pair of shoes (viii. 4—6).

THE GOSPELS.

Christ's answer to the question—"Art Thou He that should come?"—

> The poor have the Gospel preached to them (Matt. xi. 5).

Christ was pre-eminently the poor man's preacher :—

He hath anointed Me to preach the Gospel to the poor (Luke iv. 18).

Guests that bring a blessing and meals that God will pay for :—

When thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind, and thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just (Luke xiv. 13, 14).

THE EPISTLES.

"This grace also." Let us remember the "also" :—

Therefore, as ye abound in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also.

I speak not by commandment, but by occasion of the forwardness of others, and to prove the sincerity of your love.

For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich (2 Cor. viii. 7—9).

Paul was as broad in sympathy, and deep in compassion, as he was high in doctrine :—

They would that we should remember the poor, which very thing I was also zealous to do (Gal. ii. 10, R.V.).

The Lord help us to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, "how He Himself said, It is more blessed to give than to receive" (Acts xx. 35, R.V.).

Thus we close with what "He Himself said" :—

Whoso hath this world's goods, and beholdeth his brother in need, and shutteth up his compassion from him, how doth the love of God abide in Him? (1 John iii. 17).

Friends who desire to possess the foregoing in separate form will find it in the current report of Mr. Brown's work.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIBLE SOCIETY circulated during the ten months ending December, 1887, over one million seven hundred and forty-seven thousand copies of the Scriptures. These numbers do not include the concurrent circulation going on from those agencies abroad which print and circulate versions for their own fields.

MANCHESTER POLICE-COURT MISSION.—At the annual meeting of the Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association and Police-court Mission, held a few days ago, it was shown that much good work had been accomplished during the past year. Numbers of pledges had been taken, and an encouraging proportion of them kept; also, many women and girls had been helped to a better life. Information as to the Society's operations will be gladly given by the honorary secretary, Mrs. Gamble, Hilton-lane, Prestwich.

THE ENGLISH EGYPTIAN MISSION.—Miss M. L. Whately writes commending this Mission to the prayers and help of Christians. She says in her letter :—"I cannot let the first month of the new year close without a few lines to express my sense of the kindness with which appeals from Egypt have been answered during the past year by your readers, and offering the thanks of the Mission to you and to them. They would have felt rewarded, could they have seen the troops of poor sufferers last autumn who came to our medical mission, especially those affected with eye maladies which were peculiarly prevalent after the excessive inundation."

In his annual message to the legislature, Governor Larrabee of Iowa, declared that the enforcement of the Iowa prohibitory law had been so efficient in reducing crime that he recommended the consolidation of judicial districts, so as to reduce the number of judges from 44 to 40.

The following figures are official, and show the success (?) of high licence in Chicago. In 1882, the last year of low licence, the number of arrests was 32,800; the number in 1887, after four years of high licence, was 45,400, an increase of 38 per cent. The growth of population during the same period, taking the very highest figures claimed, was not over 35 per cent. In 1882 Chicago had 38 breweries, now there are 41. In that year she consumed 872,000 barrels of beer; last year, 1,374,188, an increase of 57 per cent.

The Book World.

The Psalter Interpreted.

STUDIES IN THE BOOK OF PSALMS. By John Forbes, D.D., LL.D., Emeritus Professor of Oriental Languages, Aberdeen. Edited by Rev. James Forrest, M.A., Lonmay. T. & T. Clark. We regard this book as an exceedingly valuable contribution to Biblical literature. The design of the writer has been to show that the Psalms are not to be regarded merely as isolated productions; but that they have been carefully arranged in systematic order, so as to emphasise important truths. It is the contention of the author that we shall never adequately understand the Psalms until we study them as a liturgical whole in the order in which they now stand in our Bibles. In support of his argument Dr. Forbes brings forward an amount of learning and study which throws fresh light on many important passages. The method of interpretation laid down is certainly an original one, and the book will be found to supply deeply suggestive teaching. We commend it to the notice of all students of Scripture.

The Lord's Prayer Expounded.

THE PATTERN PRAYER PLAINLY PUT. By John Herridge Batt. This is an excellent exposition of the prayer which our Lord taught his disciples. The treatment is in nine chapters; the arrangement is helpful, and the expression clear. The author is a minister of the Bible Christian Connexion, and in the spring of last year he presented the substance of these chapters to his congregation at Great Torrington, Devon, in a series of sermons. Premising that the Doxology is dealt with as part of the prayer, we will make a brief extract from the concluding chapter :—"The Pattern Prayer begins with God, 'Thy name,' 'Thy kingdom,' 'Thy will'; and it ends with Him, 'Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory for ever. Amen': our earthly wants, material and spiritual, intervening, 'our bread,' 'our sins,' our trial. The Pattern Prayer, therefore, like its Author, came from God and returns to God. Its first petitions are bound about the Eternal Throne; then become fastened by the Teacher of prayer around our earth-born life, whose needs it links in sympathy of communion with the things of God; then it is carried back to God again, and ends in Him." (F. W. Bourne, 26, Paternoster-row. 1s.)

A Treatise on the Lord's Day.

DIES SACRA.—This is the title of an essay on the institution and observance of the Lord's Day, by Rev. Robert Gumley, B.A., rector of Killadeas, diocese of Clogher. (Elliot Stock, London.) The author argues that, in relation to man, the day on which God "rested from all his work" was the first day; that the day of the Sabbath observance was afterwards changed to the seventh in commemoration of the redemption of the children of Israel from Egypt, which took place on the seventh day; and that "under the dispensation of grace, the restoration of God's favour is characterised by a return to the day sanctified in Paradise, which was for man the first day of the week." The inquiry is conducted in an interesting manner, but it can hardly be said that the author sustains all his points. The social advantages of a day of rest are considered in their relation to the duty of the State, and the religious objects of the institution of the Lord's Day are duly enforced. "The great thing is to preserve the religious character of the day, and at the same time to provide for those who are confined or labouring during the week the recreation which a beneficent God intended they should enjoy, and which is necessary to their healthy development in body and mind."

Studies on Great Themes.

THE WORD. Addresses delivered at the Believers' Meeting for Bible Study, held at Niagara, Ontario, July 19 to 28, 1887.—In the year 1875, a few brethren met by agreement in a country cottage not far from Chicago, U.S.A., to spend a week in Bible study. The little party only numbered six or seven, but their meeting was blessed to them, and indirectly to others, with whom, as Christian leaders, they subsequently came into contact. As year by year other such conferences have been held, and as the interest in them has increased, the attendance of students has become larger; and last year, at Niagara-on-the-Lake, which is now regarded as the "home" of this annual meeting, the gathering numbered several hundreds, all men and women of Christian character and superior intelligence. The addresses delivered on the occasion were on many subjects, covering such great themes as these: The names of God, Christ as Saviour and Judge, the Holy Spirit and His Operations. Other addresses dealt with Vicarious Atonement in the Old Testament, Christ in the Old Testament, the Church and the Kingdom, the Old Testament and the "Thousand Years," the Inspiration and Authority of the Scriptures, and Christian Work and Testimony. One important result of last year's conference is this very useful book of nearly 200 pages. Some of the addresses are profoundly interesting, and altogether they constitute a body of sound teaching on glorious topics. That the treatment is reverent as well as thorough need hardly be said, in view of the fact that the principal speakers were, Rev. Drs. N. West, S. H. Kellogg, J. H. Brookes, A. T. Pierson, and A. Erdman. (Willard Tract Depository, Toronto, Canada.)

MISCELLANEOUS.

HYMNS AND OTHER VERSES. By Canon Baynes, M.A. This little book contains some forty hymns and other poetical compositions. Some of the hymns are of considerable merit. (Sampson Low & Co. 1s.)

THE STORY OF SMYRNA MEDICAL MISSION, in connection with the Church of Scotland, is a pleasantly-written account of faithful work done among Jews, Greeks, Turks, and others. (6d. Edinburgh: R. & R. Clark.)

HOW TO GROW STRAWBERRIES. This is No. 1 of the Fruit-Grower's Library, published at the office of The Horticultural Times, 127, Strand. Four writers contribute information sufficient to guide any who may wish to engage in strawberry culture, either for pleasure or profit. (2d.)

OUR MOTHERS' MEETINGS. By Mrs. R. D. Bolton. 1s. 6d. National Temperance Depôt. These short readings are admirable. Mrs. Bolton has large experience of and deep sympathy with the class she here addresses. She has, too, the happy knack of correcting household faults without causing needless pain.

FIFTY ANSWERS TO INFIDEL OBJECTIONS. By W. R. Bradlaugh. 6d. John Snow & Co., 2, Ivy-lane, E.C. This is part i. of the Artisan Series of publications, by the editor of The Anti-Infidel. It is much to be hoped that these "Answers" will be read by thousands of the class for whom they are now brought together in a compact and cheap form.

MILTON'S PARADISE LOST. Cassell & Co. have commenced a re-issue in serial form of their large edition of this famous epic. The typography is beautiful, and, in addition to being illustrated by Doré, the work is enriched with a life of Milton and notes on the text by the late Rev. Dr. Vaughan. The work is to be completed in twenty-five monthly parts, at 7d. each.

THE COMING OF THE KING. Rev. J. Robinson Gregory. 1s. T. Woolmer. A series of thoughtful papers from a post-Millenarian point of view. If the prophecies of Messiah's reign do not apply to Palestine and the Millennium, the Bible becomes a hopeless riddle. Apart from controversy, the writer seeks to fix all hearts on a risen Saviour, all eyes on his promised return.

THE PROPHECIES OF JEREMIAH AND EZEKIEL, arranged in chronological order, together with notes on the transfer to the Christian Church of the New Covenant, and on Ezekiel's Temple Vision. By E. S. Elliott. (6d.) This pamphlet embodies a careful analysis of two portions of the Old Testament, of which but few popularly written expositions are accessible. Every page is rich in suggestion. (Morgan & Scott, London.)

"A 1," edited by Mrs. Stephen Menzies, has many attractions, literary and artistic. In the February part, containing the January numbers, there are some very readable articles, by Phyllis Browne, on "Love, Courtship, and Marriage." Rev. Dr. J. Hiles Hitchens writes well on "Anatomy Spiritualised," and there are other contributions to meet the varied tastes of different classes of readers. (S. W. Partridge & Co.)

ARROWS OF TRUTH. By the late Marcus Wright, Birdsgrove. With short biographical sketch. 2s. 6d. Norman & Sons, Hart-street, Covent-garden. These fugitive papers on plain texts and deep Scriptures are well named "arrows." They are pointed and winged by one of God's choice marksmen. The most interesting memoir tells how, after nearly fifty years of worldly success and happiness, Mr. Wright's heart and abilities were yielded entirely to the Son of God. By lip, life, and pen he magnified the Saviour for twenty-two years, and these posthumous papers will, we firmly believe, lead many sinners to Christ, and enlighten many a saint.

gambling and betting are the be-all and end-all of its existence, and so long as these vices are encouraged by the daily published betting lists of the newspapers, spasmodic efforts of reform are useless.

The following are extracts from a leading daily newspaper's critique on a play written by a lady, and recently brought out before a crowded audience (including the Prince of Wales):—

> This is an essentially disagreeable play: its tone throughout is immoral...If one could find a redeeming point in the story it would be only a too welcome task to make the most of such a relief from the prevailing unhealthiness of the play...A thorough revision might make it a better acting play, but could not alter the deep-rooted disregard of social morality with which the whole story is impregnated.

When a professional critic uses such terms, can it be wondered at that earnest Christian men and women should look askance at the theatre?

Archdeacon Earle, the Bishop-Designate of Marlborough, has lost no time in making known what position he means to occupy with regard to London society. With the Bishop of London he has driven through the crowded thoroughfares of the Metropolis, in which were to be seen brazen, flaunting, public-houses, all more or less crowded with poor people. From thence he passed to wider streets where luxury and plenty dwelt. He says:—

> I found myself arguing with myself in this way: How terrible it is that, from two such different stand-points, so much of all that is best, and noblest, and truest, in humanity, should be injured, depraved, and ruined! On the one hand true manhood and womanhood are being crushed out by luxury and idleness; on the other, true humanity is being depressed and disgraced by adversity, misery, want, lack of work, and by this terrible intemperance, which seems to accompany those other evils in the awful degradation of the human race. I mean to be plain in my speech to the rich. They will surely come to realise that it is far nobler to stand in the midst of sorrow, and misery, and shame, and to try and raise, and relieve it, than to stand (as I read, with a blush, of one standing the other day) with three hundred dead pheasants at his feet.

We wish the new Bishop all success in his endeavour to link Belgravia with Bethnal-green in closer bonds of sympathy and help.

Dean Perowne, in a sermon on "Apostolic Succession," preached recently in Peterborough Cathedral, made some statements which merit the attention of many who, while professing Christian enlightenment, are labouring under counsels of darkness. He said:—

> The doctrine of Apostolic Succession, as it is now put forward—the exclusive claims that are now asserted for Episcopal government—are entirely novel, so far as the Church of England is concerned, and date from Oxford between the years 1830 and 1840....I desire that an entirely novel view of the claims of the Church, one which has obtained currency only within the last fifty years—one which I believe is opposed alike to Scripture and the Church of England—should not be accepted without a single word of protest...For myself, I would think and act the spirit of the High Church prelate, Archbishop Sancroft, who enjoined the bishops and clergy of his day "that they warmly and most affectionately exhort" our brethren, the Protestant Dissenters, to join with us in daily, fervent prayer to the God of Peace, for the universal blessed union of all Reformed churches, both at home and abroad, against our common enemies; that all they who do confess the holy name of our dear Lord, and do agree in the truth of his holy Word, may also meet in one communion, and live in perfect unity and godly love.

These are seasonable words from an Episcopalian whose judgment is widely respected. Sentiments like these, and those set forth by the Dean in his sermon on Christian Union (see p. 18), should do something towards promoting Christian liberality at least where no point of Scripture doctrine is involved.

As an evidence of the aggressive efforts of the Romish party in England, it may be mentioned that a new church, of cathedral-like proportions, is at present being erected at Cambridge. The object, no doubt, is to present a gorgeous ritual and its usual musical accompaniments for the purpose of attracting the young men who go up to study at the University. It is to be hoped that the project will defeat its own ends, by calling the attention of the members of the University, and the visitors to Cambridge, to the attempts which Romanism is now making to extend its influence in quarters essentially Protestant.

The re-opening, the other day, of Southwell Cathedral, after restoration, appears in some respects to have rivalled that of Truro a few weeks back. We read of crucifers bearing aloft a cross, of silver maces, of trains supported by boys in scarlet cassocks, of the "altar" vested in rich cloth of crimson and gold, and bearing candlesticks and vases containing "choice arum lilies," and of a throne having been set up for the Archbishop. It is, therefore, remarkable that after so elaborate a ritual the Bishop of Lichfield should in his sermon on the occasion have taken the opportunity to decry the present day as being one in which men find delight in "sensuous worship" and "emotional experience," and in "running after ornate services."

Some of his words, however, were full of power, as, for instance, when he stated that the preachers of to-day—

> Had need to ask themselves if we were as bold as Christ would have been in rebuking vice, even when it sat in high places; if they were as faithful as He would have been in our day in denouncing the vices of the fashionable world, and the thinly veiled immorality of society, the dishonest luxury of those who defrauded the poor, the tricks of trade, the frauds of commerce, and the grosser sins of all sorts and conditions of men and women. If not, would they be held guiltless, that with smooth words and pleasant pictures they delighted the ears of men?

And perhaps it was not out of place that he should conclude his sermon by warning his hearers, clerical and lay alike, that their efforts in the direction of "adding to their spiritual agencies" should not be allowed to hinder the winning of souls to Christ, and that "the highest triumphs of his Church would be found in the multitude of the saints."

We would call the attention of our lady readers to an interesting paper in the current number of Eastward Ho, on "Lady Visitors in Workhouses." Dealing chiefly with an admirable movement for which we have to thank the Countess of Meath, and of which we cannot speak too highly, it points to more than one way in which, in connection with workhouse visiting, those who have spare time may utilise it in God's service, and to the advantage of the unfortunate pauper classes. The question which the Countess of Meath puts so forcibly, "Have those who think it right to attend three or four Sunday services given much thought to less favoured souls, who would gladly welcome anything approaching to one service on this holy day, but for whom not any are provided?" may be put to themselves by many to whom the Sabbath is a day of almost luxurious spiritual enjoyment. We trust that the answer may come in an increase to the number of those who are doing something to make the Sunday indeed a Lord's Day to those who are within the four walls of our workhouses.

Another movement, too, in connection with our workhouse poor, the "Brabazon Pauper Employment Scheme," deserves careful consideration at the hands of all who are anxious to ameliorate the condition of the poor, and the Hon. Secretary, at 83, Lancaster-gate, W., will be happy to give information to guardians and others who wish to introduce and develop the system in their districts. From the Kensington workhouses there come pleasant reports of workers now maintaining themselves after a short period of training, who formerly were "those crippled, blind, disabled ones, whose time, until the Countess started her benevolent scheme, hung heavily on their hands." As Miss Blanche Medhurst, the writer of the paper to which we have referred, says, it seems as if "the day of workhouse reform has dawned."

The importance of the subject of the Housing of the Poor has just been illustrated by a statement made by the Chairman of the Dublin Artisans' Dwellings Company, to the effect that amongst the persons who occupy the Company's dwellings the annual death rate is 17·4 per thousand of the living, against the average mortality of 30·5 for Dublin taken as a whole. Admitting the accuracy of Sir Richard Martin's consequent argument, that the difference represents the effect upon the public health of good and bad sanitation, &c., it follows that in the localities of Dublin occupied by the labouring classes no less than 3000 preventible deaths occur annually. Looked at in this terrible light, the question, "Am I my brother's keeper?" seems capable of very wide application.

Pastor Robin, of Paris, well known for his works of philanthropy, has hit upon a very sensible way of helping unemployed workmen. On condition that they pay a franc and a half as entrance fee, and work every afternoon, men are received into a house in Belleville; during the morning they are allowed their liberty in order that they may look for situations. Only a short stay in the house is guaranteed—a week or two. The plan is a good one, and capable of being worked on a large scale. Pastor Robin shelters in this way about fifty men per month, and all expenses are covered by the money received and earned.

Under the title of "Our Church," a letter from a correspondent appeared in our issue of December 30, describing an attempt to force priestly confession upon a sick man in "a Convalescent Home in the South of England." Two correspondents, to whom we privately communicated the name of the Institution in question, have, however, on the authority of the Chaplain and one of the Sisters, denied the truth of the story. One declares that "no such conversation has ever taken place." The other is "prepared to take his oath" that such an expression as "There is no salvation for your soul" (i.e., without such confession) "was never uttered by any clergyman of the Church of England under circumstances such as these." In fairness to the parties concerned, we are glad to state this view of the case, but our first informant maintains the assertion originally made.

"SECULARISM UNMASKED."

On Friday evening last, at Exeter Hall, the first of a series of anti-infidel lectures was delivered by Mr. H. G. Picton, an Australian gentleman. The audience was for the most part made up of people holding Christian principles, but there were a few "Secularists" present. Nevertheless Mr. Picton was accorded an attentive hearing throughout, and, doubtless, this was owing to the fact that he was careful to attack principles, and not persons.

Mr. Sydney Gedge, M.P., occupied the chair, and in a few words explained the object of the four lectures which Mr. Picton had arranged to deliver on successive Friday evenings. That object is twofold—the confirming of Christians in the faith, and the bringing of atheists and others over to the faith of Christ.

At the outset of his lecture, Mr. Picton showed that the term Secularism means "a doctrine or system of teaching pertaining to this world," and proceeded to deny that Secularism is what it pretends to be. He asked, "Where is Secularism, and what is it?" For an answer to this compound question he appealed to Secularist literature, but no coherent reply was forthcoming. In fact, it was shown that there is no accepted definition of the word Secularism; and that, whatever the word means, the agitation is one which deals largely with religion, which it seeks to involve in contempt. The claims of Secularism to be "the light of the world," to be "the liberator of humanity" from what it regards as the incubus of religion, were referred to, and then its origin was explained—how that it was a name given to infidelity by Mr. E. J. Holyoake, but whether the name included atheism had from the first been disputed by men in the secularist ranks. The lecturer proceeded to deal with the moral tendencies of Secularism, and by quotations from the writings of its leaders, and on other indisputable evidence, showed that the marriage tie had been attacked, and immorality not only countenanced, but openly advocated. He allowed that it is possible for a man to be superior to his creed, and that, therefore, some Secularists may be superior to the teachings of Secularism, but he pointed out that the relation of Christians to their creed is quite different. If a Christian goes wrong, commits an immoral act, his religion condemns him. If a Secularist goes wrong, commits an immoral act, does Secularism condemn him? If it does, where? The lecturer proceeded to ask what Secularism had done for the world during the forty years of its existence. Where is the man or woman who has been raised by the principles of Secularism from the depths of vice and degradation to nobility of life? He impeached Secularism, (1) as being unnatural. Denying the supernatural, it maintains that religion is natural in its origin; yet it endeavours to destroy religion! He also impeached it (2) as coarse and revolting, destitute of reverence; it produces scoffers, carpers, and men who do not hesitate to offend against the sensibilities of religious people. In conclusion, the lecturer maintained that Secularism is a curse and not a blessing, and tends to that which is debasing, demoralising, and pernicious.

In concluding the proceedings, the Chairman spoke a few words on the historic basis and supernatural sanctions of Christianity. There was running through his remarks a feeling of loving pity for unbelievers. As to Mr. Bradlaugh, he said, that he did not despair of his becoming a convert to Christianity, and devoting his abilities to the building up of the religion which he has hitherto sought to pull down. He added that he had often prayed that Mr. Bradlaugh might, by God's grace, take upon himself the Christian name, and he hoped others would also pray so. The remark was greeted with a fervent "Hear, hear," followed by "Amen."

THE JOY OF CONVERSION.

Paragraph ninety-two in "Grace Abounding" furnished Dr. Alexander Whyte, of Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh, with the theme of his Bunyan lecture last week. He also took as a parallel text, Ps. xxx. 11: "Thou hast turned for me my mourning into dancing: thou hast put off my sackcloth, and girded me with gladness." Dr. Whyte began his lecture by a quotation from an article written by Miss Frances Power Cobbe: "Solitary religious emotion produced by lonely prayer and communion with God is the climax of purest joy vouchsafed to man." That passage, he said, ought to be added to "Grace Abounding" as a foot-note, for there never was more lonely prayer and closer communion with God than Bunyan's had been. In a previous paragraph of his book, Bunyan had recorded how, when "comforting time was come," he had heard a comforting sermon preached. He recognised that there was a season for everything; a time to kill and a time to heal; a time to weep and a time to laugh; a time to mourn and a time to dance. Bunyan had passed through his time of sorrow, and now the healing, laughing, dancing time has come. His dolefulness was as Divine as were his compensation and joy. Indeed, the one is the measure of the other; the depth of dolefulness is the gauge of the height of joy. Had his sense of sin and misery been only skin deep, then his comforting would have been only skin deep too, and he could easily have told it to the crows he saw sitting on the ploughed fields. Passages like this in "Grace Abounding" are a crux and a condemnation to some of Bunyan's literary critics. A man may be in the front rank of the literature of his time and yet his soul be as to sin and salvation as shallow as a child's toy saucer.

In the "Pilgrim's Progress" Honest is made to ask, "What should be the reason that such a good man should be all his days so much in the dark?" Greatheart replies that there are two reasons for it, one of which is "the wise God will have it so; some must pipe, and some must weep. And for my part I care not at all for that profession that begins not in heaviness of mind. The first string that the musician usually touches is the bass." The heavenly musician has been touching the bass notes of Bunyan's nature up to now, and now He lays his hand upon some of the sweeter notes. Weeping like that of Bunyan's may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. How sad is the lot of those whose joy is a thing of the day and whose weeping will begin with that night which knows no end!

Bunyan does not give us the name of the preacher who preached the sermon that comforted him. He was a strange minister; his own minister had been sent away because he could not preach the sermon Bunyan needed just then. John Gifford could do the harder work, but he was not good at preaching comforting sermons. But John Gifford and that strange minister are rejoicing together in glory now over John Bunyan. One gave him the dolours, and the other comforted him. A London merchant who travelled through Scotland in Bunyan's day made this entry in his diary:—"I went to St. Andrew's, where I heard a sweet, majestic-looking man, and he showed me the majesty of God. I afterwards heard a little fair man preach, and that man showed me the loveliness of Christ. Then I came and heard at Irvine a well-favoured proper old man with a long beard, and that man showed me all my heart." Most of you know that Robert Blair and Samuel Rutherford were at St. Andrew's in those days. I fancy I can see that "little fair man," Samuel Rutherford, running up to London, and sanctifying the assembly where he sat. I have tried to bring the dates together, so that I might have shown you John Bunyan sitting in the pew while the "little fair man" preached. But it would not do; I could not squeeze the dates. If it was not Rutherford whom Bunyan heard that day, it was one of his school of preachers—the Solomon's Song school of preachers.

Observe that it was not in the church under the sermon that light came to Bunyan. It was on the way home that the Holy Ghost showed Christ to Bunyan's soul. We may depend that the wicked one was waiting at the door of the church for Bunyan; but he was off like a thief with treasure in his hand, and the Holy Ghost and he made a conversion of it that afternoon. Oh how joyful Bunyan was then! You see here a believer beside himself with joy, and he could not tell how to contain himself till he got home. Happy man that he had a home where he could tell such joyful news! On his way to church that afternoon he had seen the crows sitting on the ploughed land, and could have wished himself one of them, because they had never sinned as he had. He looked for them when he came home again, and his state of heart was so altered now that he says, "I thought I could have spoken of his love and told of his mercy to me even to the very crows that sat upon the ploughed lands before me, had they been capable to have understood me." But there was a woman's heart at home waiting to receive the glad message he had to impart, and Bunyan and his wife sanctified that Sabbath evening with the theme of redeeming love, and began to be merry because comforting time had come.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT.

The tenth anniversary of the introduction of the Gospel Temperance Movement into England was celebrated on Saturday last, at Hoxton Hall, Hoxton-street, London, N. There was a large attendance of friends from all parts of the city and suburbs.

After tea and conversation, a Conference of workers was held. Mr. William Isaac Palmer presided. A long report was read by Mr. J. T. Rae, secretary. Much testimony was borne therein to the usefulness of the movement, and much was advanced that was suggestive as to methods of work.

In the course of the Conference the Chairman maintained that the temperance side of the movement should ever be kept to the front. It was not a Gospel movement that had been started from Hoxton Hall, but a temperance movement on Gospel lines. Mr. Edward Whitwell concurred in this. Friends of the movement ask people to sign the pledge, and then to look to the Saviour for strength to keep it. Major-General Tulloch (Ealing), urged that those who advocate total abstinence should work in the faith of God, never doubting that their labours would be blessed. Mr. Ivey remarked upon the disappearance of the Blue Ribbon from the coats of many who once wore it—anyhow in the City of London. Mr. Green (Stratford), advocated the formation of Mizpah bands, the members of which wear the blue button.

A working woman, who owed her present comfortable position in life to the Blue Ribbon movement, bore a vigorous testimony to the blessed character of the work, and asked teetotal advocates to "preach out." She pronounced benedictions on Mr. Noble, praying that his life might yet be spared for many years. A police constable and other gentlemen having spoken, Mr. Noble delivered a short address, in which he declared that he intended to continue the work on the same lines as he had conducted it thus far. The proceedings were agreeable throughout.

A public meeting was afterwards held, when several representative members of the movement made speeches, to the pleasure and encouragement of a crowded audience of workers.

THE "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

On Wednesday last week the foundation-stone of the new mission-house, laundry, and night shelter, was laid by Louisa Lady Ashburton. A number of visitors were present to witness the interesting service, and amongst those on the platform were Miss Steer (Hon. Superintendent of the Mission), Rev. Harry Jones, Rev. C. H. Turner, and other members of the council, Miss Annie Macpherson, Miss Lowe, Mrs. Frank Bevan, Mr. T. A. Denny, and Mr. Percy Bunting.

We have known this work from its commencement. Steadily and quietly it has grown from the one room to its present wide dimensions. Undaunted by difficulties, Miss Steer pioneered her way step by step, starting alone, and gradually gathering round her those whose hearts are knit with hers in this effort to prevent evil, as well as to rescue those who have erred. No girl or woman entering the "Bridge of Hope" can ever fall into the error that Christianity is a mere sentiment. They are taught that "turning over a new leaf" means a radical change.

The inmates were present to witness the laying of the foundation stone; we were especially interested in seeing the children from the Preventive Home (Ashburton House), and Lady Ashburton must have felt gratified by the sight of those who through her kindness have been sheltered and trained, during the past five years, in the house she has lent Miss Steer for this purpose. We understand that only about £1500 is needed for the completion of the buildings, but we also learned with deep regret that the preventive work has to be curtailed, because the necessary means for carrying it on are lacking. Surely we shall not allow funds to be wanting for this many-sided work. The training of these young girls means constant expense, but such an investment will bring an interest which will only be known in "that day." No one can plead for practical sympathy on behalf of this work so eloquently as the faces of those girls and women pleaded on Wednesday, but more eloquently still pleads the Master as He says not only, "Inasmuch as ye did it," but "Inasmuch as ye did it not."

We cannot notice at length a part of the work to which Miss Steer is giving special attention. The night shelter will, perhaps, be one of the most interesting as well as most needed additions to this Mission. We are glad to see that one of its wards is to bear the honoured name of the late Mr. Samuel Morley, who was a member of the council and a generous friend to the work.

Looking over the present Refuge and the buildings now in progress, we are reminded at every step that the whole site was once, and not long since, in the possession of those only seeking to entrap and ruin those who now find shelter and help in the "Bridge of Hope." Miss Steer's address is 26, Princes-square, St. George's-in-the-East, London, E.

BISHOP GREGG, D.D., of the Reformed Church of England, has just brought to a finish arrangements for a Protestant Church to be established at Birkenhead, where Ritualism is very busy. It would be a great blessing to many a small town where Romanism is being forced upon the people, if they would communicate with this honest and fearless Protestant, at Southend, Essex.

WALWORTH MEDICAL MISSION.—In his report of the first quarter's work in connection with the Medical Mission at Walworth, S.E., Dr. H. Marston, the missionary in charge, says that, as a result of the medical work in the district, the Sunday service has an increased attendance. Many have been gathered within sound of the Gospel by this agency, who formerly never came to the mission services. There is much reason to thank God for the way in which He has blessed the work. "May He grant that we shall have still further cause for praise, in seeing the souls of many, who come for physical healing, cured of that most hopeless and most terrible of all diseases—the disease of sin."

PREPARATORY WORK in CALCUTTA.

The New Year has opened very blessedly for us. The Holy Spirit is working in the hearts of my girls, twelve of whom have consecrated themselves to Christ. As they are the oldest and most influential girls in the school, their example is being much felt among their companions. These young people are being educated to go out by-and-by to teach among the heathen. Being one with them in habits, manners, and speech, they are much better adapted to reaching them and doing them good than we with our foreign accents and manners. My heart is therefore filled with joy and thankfulness that they are getting that one preparation without which all the rest of their training would be useless—that preparation that shall make them vessels unto honour, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work.

"REACHING THE MASSES."

The United Committee for Special Religious Services in Theatres, Halls, and Mission-rooms, established under the presidency of the late Earl of Shaftesbury, has entered upon its twenty-ninth winter course. Since the institution of these services many of the early and more wealthy friends of the movement have "finished their course," and the Committee has been compelled, year by year, to seek a broader constituency of subscribers. In the report of last year's work we read:—

"The aim of this Committee from the very commencement has been to utilise any and every building for the preaching of the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ which was sufficiently popular with the people during the week to secure their attendance on the Sunday. Churches and chapels, it is true, exist in abundance in the localities worked by this Committee, and are often a world too wide for their shrunken congregations, but they represent a form of Christian life and worship the mass of the people have never reached; unless, therefore, the Church of Christ is altogether to lose her hold on the population, other methods of influencing the people must be adopted. And when we read that there are in the Tower Hamlets nearly 100,000 persons within measurable distance of starvation; that the population increases at a rate of 75 per cent. more rapidly in Bethnal Green than in St. George's, Hanover-square, chiefly due to the crowding of families on each other in poor parishes; and that the great 'Joyless City' of the East-end, and not of the East-end only, but of many other parts of our Metropolis, is left to its own dead level of poverty and morality, 'without a gentleman among them, or a rich man, or a nobleman, or an artist, or an author, or anybody at all lifted above themselves by culture and education, except the clergy,' can we wonder, we say, that people thus 'stranded,' and 'deserted' by those who should be their 'betters' and teachers, should have but low views of the beauty and dignity of religious worship."

During the past series of meetings, 749 services were held, attended by about 355,000 persons, making in all, from the commencement of this effort, 8712 services, attended by 7,123,000 persons. The report gives a detailed account of the work. Mr. Charles M. Sawell is the secretary of the Society, whose office is 3, Bridewell-place, New Bridge-street, E.C.

MISSION IN ST. LUKE'S, LONDON.—The twenty-second report of the Gee-street Christian Mission and Ragged Schools (late Bell-alley), Goswell-road, carried on by voluntary workers, states that the agencies clustering around 5, Gee-street, are in successful operation. The work is among the poor, and support looked for from outside.

The "CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW."*

On life's sea, beneath its tempest,
  Wrecked ones sink and die:
Lo, we man the Gospel Lifeboat,
  Summoned by their cry!

    Launch away! the signal rises!
      Face the stormy wave!
    Jesus watches o'er the billows,
      Jesus waits to save.

Who will cross the stormy waters?
  Who for Christ will go,
Braving fear and deadly danger,
  Saving friend and foe?

Brother, at thy side we linger,
  Hailing, warning thee:
Leap for life! 'tis now, or never!
  God thy Saviour see!

Leave the wreck! it sinks beneath thee!
  Leave thy worthless all!
Life is better far than riches,
  Leap at mercy's call!

Must we pass thee, clinging, dying?
  Brother, trust this hour!
Praise the Lord! He grasps thee! saves thee!
  Rescued by his power.

William Luff, One of the Crew.

PHILADELPHIA Y.M.C.A.

The thirty-third anniversary of the organisation of the Philadelphia Young Men's Christian Association was recently celebrated with appropriate exercises.

An interesting address was delivered on the occasion by Rev. Dr. Phillips Brooks. The work of this Association, he said, illustrates the new largeness and freedom with which men can now work for Jesus Christ. Such work is especially important in view of that peculiar characteristic of modern life, the gathering of men into cities. We may see that such a phase of society has its dangers, but it is not for brave men to hesitate. There is a growing broadness in the conception of these associations of the way in which they should work for God.

The year just past was made memorable by the completion of the building enterprise. In November the 200,000 dollars remaining unpaid were covered by subscription. The mortgage fund represents 389 subscribers of amounts varying from 1 dollar to 50,000 dollars. Philadelphia has been for thirty-four years among the leaders in this particular branch of union Christian work; but every large city in America has now come to regard a Young Men's Christian Association as a necessity. The American Association now owns, including 121 buildings, property amounting to 6,500,000 dollars, and increasing at the rate of 1,000,000 dollars a year, though their current expenses involve the outlay of another million.

HOMES FOR WORKING GIRLS IN LONDON.—The sum of five hundred pounds has been given by Thank-offering towards the extension of "Victoria House," by adding to it the adjoining house, 137, Queen's-road, Bayswater, thus providing, in the dual house, accommodation for sixty young women.

KIRKLEY RUN MISSION.—During the past year a good work has been in progress at Kirkley Run, near Lowestoft. The building which it was found necessary to erect is not yet free from debt. The cost was £100, and of this £80 has been paid; an effort is being made to raise £15, as then a friend of the movement will give £5, and clear the work from financial burden. There is a Sunday-school, which is well attended. The mission is conducted by voluntary labourers, and is unsectarian in character. Mr. J. Goldsmith will furnish particulars to interested readers.

UNIVERSITY MISSION at CAMBRIDGE

THE mission for which prayer was asked in a recent issue was commenced on Thursday week by a preliminary service in Holy Trinity Church. On subsequent evenings the meetings for undergraduates only were held in the Guildhall, and were well attended. God has been graciously pleased to answer prayer on behalf of this effort, and the result has been the experience of much blessing.

The Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, M.A., the mission preacher, declared "the old, old story" with much power and acceptance. The chief feature about the services has been the quiet way in which they have been conducted, and the solemnity produced in consequence. No attempt was made to work upon mere feeling, or to move the men by emotional efforts. But God's presence has been felt, and many of the undergraduates have taken a definite stand for Christ, in the face of no little opposition. We are praying that the work may be a permanent one in the souls of all who have been led to decision.

In addition to the evening services, Mr. Webb-Peploe delivered addresses in the afternoons on "The Spiritual Life," in Holy Trinity Church. R. C.

THE YOUTHS' LABOUR HOUSE.

ON Friday last, Dr. Barnardo entertained a thousand tramps, vagabonds, and unemployed youths, under twenty-one years of age, to a hot supper in the Edinburgh Castle. The majority of the guests were from seventeen to twenty years old. All were rough and penniless, and entering upon manhood with miserable prospects. The meal was soon over, and an entertainment which followed was highly appreciated. The combined treat put the motley company into a very happy frame, and then Dr. Barnardo introduced a more serious subject. He spoke of employment, and the reasons why many were without it; and then he told the familiar story of the Youths' Labour House, and expressed himself desirous of helping still more lads into useful courses of life. An apt incident of successful reclamation and subsequent prosperity on the part of one lad who had emigrated, led to an explanation of the conditions of admission to the House, and a description of the life of its inmates. None who had been convicted of crime could be admitted, and no one need volunteer who was afraid of work, or was vicious in character or practice. But any who were ready to exert themselves in working out a good reputation in the House might, after being carefully tested and trained, have the offer of an emigrant's berth to Canada, where, at least, the miseries of the lodging-house, and an empty pocket, need never trouble them again.

Dr. Barnardo's words were listened to very attentively, and the Labour House lads present, who had acted as waiters, stood up during the address as an object lesson. Ned Wright and Mr. J. B. Wookey having made some remarks of a practical character, the process of sifting and dealing with a number of applicants commenced. Then, if not before, the real value of the supper was apparent, for over a hundred young fellows presented themselves for admission to the House. If only three parts of this number are ultimately transferred from the loss to the profit side of the social ledger, surely the end will have more than justified the means. The issue of the meeting may well awaken the gratitude, and stimulate the thanksgiving, not merely of Christ's servants, but of all men who have any love for their neighbours.

QUEBEC.—The Presbyterian Church here is making an effort to reach the rough element of the population. It has now eleven French evangelists. Rev. T. Z. Lifebare meets with encouraging success; fifty people and upwards attend his evening services, some of them professing to have received Christ. His mission school has an average attendance of twenty-seven, the children of Roman Catholic parents.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Paisley.—Mr. Richard Weaver has been holding a mission here, and good results are being rejoiced in.

Kensington.—A successful five days' mission has been held in Hornton-street Chapel by Mr. William Forbes. Earnest appeals have been made to the unsaved, and the Lord's people encouraged.

Hawick, N.B. — Mr. Malcolm McKinnon, evangelist, has laboured here in the Gospel for the last three weeks with success and apparent blessing. Nearly every night souls have been saved and the saints have been much encouraged. J. H. H.

Australia.—Rev. D. Shearer, of Perth, Western Australia, asks the prayers of God's people for a large blessing on the efforts that are being put forth in that colony. He wishes to thank those kind friends who sent him supplies of tracts for distribution.

Rev. W. Humpstone, an Englishman who went to the United States twenty-three years ago, expecting to return in the course of a short time, found so much work to his hand that he could not think of the old country and its ties. He has travelled over several of the States, and his ministry has been greatly blessed by God.

Whitehaven.—Rev. R. Balgarnie has concluded a week's mission at the Congregational Church here. The senior classes from other schools in town were invited to the Sunday-afternoon service, and the invitation was largely responded to. Much blessing has been experienced; among the young the mission has had marked success.

Taunton.—Mr. G. C. Norrish has conducted a mission at Norton Fitzwarren which has been a most happy success from beginning to end. The work has shown that there is an attraction in the quiet intelligent presentation of the Gospel, which wins the attention, and takes a deep and lasting hold upon the hearts of the people. The mission is being continued at Bishop's Lydeard. J. R. D.

Railway Institute, Willesden Junction.—In connection with the work of the Willesden Presbyterian Church at this institute, Mr. W. R. Lane has concluded a week's special services. Great interest was awakened, the audience growing steadily in numbers, until, on the closing night, it entirely filled the hall. It is hoped that the impression made by Mr. Lane's powerful and searching addresses will be permanent, and that not a few were added to the Church of such as shall be saved. Those who took part in the work, and other Christian people, assuredly felt it to be a time of refreshing.

Streatham, S.W.—A twelve days' mission, conducted by Mr. Wm. R. Lane, was commenced in Trinity Presbyterian Church, on Sunday, Jan. 22, and brought to a close on Friday, Feb. 3. The meetings throughout were well attended, especially the two services on the Sunday evenings, and from the first the presence and saving power of the Lord were manifested. Over forty persons have given in their names as having been brought to Christ at the meetings, and it was a time of refreshing and reviving to many believers. This has proved the most successful mission that has ever been held in connection with the church.

Mr. Henry Lakin in Glasgow.—Many of your readers over the land have been praying for Henry Lakin's mission at Garscube Hall, Glasgow, during the past month: will they now unitedly give thanks to God? Large numbers of men and women have come out night by night to hear the glorious Gospel message from the fire-touched lips of the ex-publican. Many of these have heard the voice of the Son of God, and have come forth from the grave of sin to walk in newness of life. Backsliders have been restored, halting ones have been brought to full decision, saints have been blessed, and the work of God generally has received a healthy stirring-up. D. J. F.

Sherborne, Dorset.—A seven days' mission has been successfully conducted in the Congregational Church here by Rev. W. A. Meaton, of Acton. The pastor, Rev. J. Ogle, rendered cordial help at each service. At the children's meetings the attention of the little ones was perfect, and at the close about ninety professed to be anxious to find the Saviour. The adult services, in spite of very severe cold, snow, and sleet, were well attended, and the power of the Holy Spirit was manifest. A large number of undecided ones closed with the offers of mercy, while Christians were led to entire consecration to the Master's service. Mr. Meaton visited the silk factory, which, by the earnest efforts of the Rev. J. Ogle, has been reopened, and addressed the toilers during the dinner-hour.

Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey have been holding meetings in Louisville, Kentucky. The tabernacle specially erected for the purpose, capable of holding about five thousand people, was crowded daily, and the inquiry meetings were well attended. Ministers of all denominations have been cooperating with great heartiness.

Tunbridge Wells.—On Monday evening Mr. J. M. McAuliffe closed a fourteen days' unsectarian mission in the John-street Mission-room. The Bible-readings and Gospel meetings were well attended. The number of those who have professed to receive definite blessing is such as to greatly cheer Christian workers in the district.

Devonshire.—The inhabitants of Seaton and neighbourhood have enjoyed a season of great spiritual refreshing during an eight days' mission in connection with the Congregational Church, held by Mr. and Mrs. Leach, of Bristol. The afternoon drawing-room meetings, for "the deepening of spiritual life," were made a means of blessing to believers who resolved to be more fully consecrated to the Lord and to his service.

Belfast.—Evangelistic services on a gigantic scale have been going on in Belfast during the past week. A nightly service was held in every Presbyterian church in the town, and forty-five ministers from the country co-operated in conducting the services. Three meetings for conference and prayer were held, at which the following subjects were considered, namely, (1) "How to deal with our young men;" (2) The Sabbath-school, its management and relationship to the Church;" and (3) How to secure that families and individuals coming to town shall be got into Church connection." The services and meetings were all well attended, and it is believed that much real spiritual good has been done.

Woodstock, Oxon.—A fifteen days' mission has been conducted by Messrs. Newell and Hall, of the Evangelistic Mission, London; the Baptist, Wesleyan, and Methodist Free Churches all uniting. Prayer-meetings, children's services, and open-air meetings were all well attended, and the meetings in the chapels increased nightly, so that at the closing meetings on the 7th and 8th inst. they were crowded. Nearly all the houses in the place were visited by the evangelists. Backsliders have been reclaimed, and souls converted. About twenty young people have confessed Christ, and a teacher who had decided to give up her class of boys because she "could do nothing with them," was cheered to see several of them saved: she will not give up now.

CALIFORNIA.—Messrs. Moody and Sankey are expected at San Bernardino, California, towards the end of February. The prayers of the Lord's children are asked, that great blessing may result from the meetings. Mr. Philip Hannington, who writes thus, also says:—"We are very fortunate in having an excellent minister in the Presbyterian church here, Mr. Morrison. I feel sure he would gladly co-operate with anyone who loves the Lord Jesus, and is willing to give his or her time to his service."

"FIGHTING POVERTY AND SIN IN EAST LONDON."—Rev. W. Evans Hurndall's work, which was recently noticed in these columns, is carried on in the neighbourhood of Bow. Those who desire details may communicate with Mr. Hurndall, whose address is 16, Cottage-grove, Bow, E. In a letter a few days ago, he said:—"I have just met all my missionaries, and they give appalling accounts of the distress in their districts. The sufferings of many of the people are intense, and the poor children are having a very sad time."

THE CHRISTIAN MEDICAL MISSION, Southend, for the sick poor held its third annual meeting on Thursday, the 9th instant, in the mission-room, Clarence-road, Southend, Essex. This work began in January, 1885, and is self-supporting. The number of cases seen during the three years of its existence have been respectively, 1706, 4296, and 4397. This Mission is entirely unsectarian, and is open every Monday for the sick poor of every name and of any place, many coming long distances to receive benefit. The physician and all the workers give their services gratuitously, the money received from patients being used in defraying the expense of medicine, interest on mortgage, and paying off the amount due upon the mission-house which was built last year, the debt upon which has been reduced from £671 18s. 7d. to £450. The treasurer is Mr. T. M. Eastwood, 10, Prittlewell-square, Southend, Essex.

PERCIVAL'S PICTURE GALLERY

By A. L. O. E.

With Attractive Frontispiece in Colour.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"We have walked through 'Percival's Picture Gallery' with great pleasure, admiring the chaste productions of a rich fancy, and the skilful interweaving of the moral with the picturesque. We would recommend our readers to follow our example."—Footsteps of Truth.

"Percival is a bright, gifted, true-hearted young artist. His 'Picture Gallery' consists of representations of Scripture incidents from the Old and New Testaments, which are here delightfully narrated, and no less clearly expounded. For the young the volume will prove deeply interesting and instructive."
The Baptist Messenger.

PEARLS OF WISDOM FROM THE PARABLES.

By A. L. O. E.

Illustrated with Twenty-four full-page Original Drawings.

Cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 4s.

"This unique volume is sure to be popular. What the 'Schönberg Cotta Family' is to the Reformation; what the 'Prince of the House of David' is to the days of Christ; and what the 'Pillar of Fire' is to the Israelites in the Wilderness—this book is in a certain sense to Christ's parables."
The Christian Commonwealth.

"These are 'Pearls' indeed. The gifted authoress has added a rare volume to her already large stock of books, and the reading public will thank her for this delightful work."—The Christian Treasury.

"OUT OF EGYPT."

A Series of Discourses and Bible Readings on the Exodus of Israel, and its Spiritual Lessons.

By Rev. Dr. G. F. PENTECOST, M.A.

Presentation Edition: Cloth boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"A truly living and freshly suggestive book; scriptural in teaching, and enriched everywhere with suitable anecdotes and apt illustrations. A most practical commentary on the portion of the Word with which it deals."
British Messenger.

"A capital book, full of both mental and moral force, and all aglow with evangelical sentiment."—Primitive Methodist.

"A powerful and brilliant work. Dr. Pentecost is not only a man of marked ability and scholarship; but he is also a pulpit orator of the highest order."
Oldham Chronicle.

Cheap Editions: Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth, 2s. 6d.

CHOICE SAYINGS.

By ROBERT C. CHAPMAN.

Presentation Editions: Cloth, gilt edges, 2s.; morocco, gilt edges, 3s.

"Here we have gold-dust; 'and the gold of that land is good.' We hardly know a man more noteworthy for abounding grace and deep piety than Robert C. Chapman. This name has never been sounded abroad; but those who know him value him beyond expression. Some of these brief 'Sayings' contain whole sermons. Personally we expect to gather many discourses while studying this little book. A dew from heaven rests upon Mr. Chapman's expositions."
The Sword and Trowel.

Cheap Editions: Tinted covers, 9d.; cloth limp, 1s.; cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

RUTH, THE MOABITESS.

A Series of Bible Readings on the Book of Ruth.

By HENRY MOORHOUSE.

"Containing many fresh and original remarks, all tending to practical usefulness. A capital sixpennyworth of commenting on a favourite book."
The Sword and Trowel.

Cheap Edition: Tinted covers, 6d.

NEW BOOK by ANNA SHIPTON.

"THE LORD WAS THERE."

Incidents from My Journal.

Extract from Author's "Preface":—

"I have extracted the following leaves from my Journal to show forth, though in little measure, the faithfulness and patience of Him 'who fainteth not, neither is weary'; who 'giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might He increaseth strength.'"

CONTENTS.

I. The Walk to Emmaus.
II. The Shepherd's Voice.
III. A Strength to the Needy.
IV. The Master's Message.
V. The Shadow of a Great Rock.
VI. The Pavilion of Jehovah.
VII. A Friend that Loveth at all Times.

"A work of great interest. The author's gracious spirit is well known, and it is refreshing to be in contact with her strong faith."—British Weekly.

"Rich in devout meditations, and such narratives of experience as cannot fail to strengthen the faith of believers, and lead them to greater trustfulness in the love of their Heavenly Father."—Primitive Methodist, Jan. 5, 1888.

ELIJAH: AND THE SECRET OF HIS POWER.

With Nine Original Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

The Source of Elijah's Strength.
Beside the Drying Brook.
Ordered to Zarephath.
"The Spirit and Power of Elias."
The Test of the Home-Life.
Obadiah—A Contrast.
The Plan of Campaign.
The Conflict on the Heights of Carmel.
Rain at Last.
How the Mighty Fell.
Loving-kindness Better than Life.

"Go, Return!"
Naboth's Vineyard.
The Old Courage Again.
Evensong.
The Translation.
A Double Portion of Elijah's Spirit.
The Transfiguration.
"Filled with the Holy Ghost."

"We spoke in terms of most decided approval of the companion volume of the above, namely 'Israel: a Prince with God.' This present work, as in the case of the former, contains lessons of the most practical character; hence its value. It may well commend itself to the attention of all such as wish to be instructed as to the nature and operations of that grace which can alone counteract the propensities and practices of poor fallen humanity. The book is well worthy of close and attentive reading."—The Gospel Magazine, Jan., 1888.

ISRAEL: A PRINCE WITH GOD.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

The Story of Jacob Re-told.

With full-page Illustrations of the River Jordan and Jacob's Well.

Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Exceedingly good. Not only spiritual, as everything from our brother Mr. Meyer would be, but also thoughtful, fresh, suggestive, and thoroughly practical. We rejoice at every remembrance of the good work done in Melbourne Hall, Leicester, by this laborious worker, and we are glad to see that Mr. Meyer is likely to be useful with his pen, as well as useful with his tongue. Oh that hundreds of our younger men gave signs of such real godliness, such true devotion, and such clear knowledge of the Gospel, as we see in this pastor."
Sword and Trowel.

NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS.

A Record of the Life of a Beloved Sister.

By FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s.

"A book that may be safely put into a young lady's hands, with the assured confidence that it will serve to strengthen and deepen all influences for good."
The Christian.

"The young girl whose short life is here portrayed by a sisterly hand was a charming character, and exemplified the graces of a Christian experience. The pages of her diary are a revelation of the writer's bright heart and keen observation of her surroundings. The portrait and pictures are capital. A delightful biography."—The Christian Commonwealth.

D. L. MOODY AT HOME.

"It is impossible to speak too highly of this volume, which is the result of immense labour and consecrated talent. To the Bible student, the Sunday-school teacher, or local preacher, its aid is indispensable, for it is the most able condensation of larger and numerous works, which places it within the reach of all who aspire to become mighty in the Scriptures.
The Christian Age.

"For those who aspire to have a thorough knowledge of the Bible, this volume will be an invaluable help."—The Sword and Trowel.

"In a compact form, the work contains more valuable and varied information as to the Word of God and its connective teaching, than we have seen in any volume of a like size. We would earnestly urge every lover of the Word to procure and carefully read the book."
Word and Work.

"SEARCHING THE SCRIPTURES is a scholarly, accurate, suggestive, and wise work on the study of the Books of the Bible; how best to get at their teaching, and how best to turn their teaching to practical account. Preachers and teachers will find it a treasury of thought, beautiful expositions, and fruitful suggestions. It is nicely got up, and is suitable for a prize or a present. The author has rare analytical skill, a profound knowledge of the book, and a graceful literary style."—Oldham Chronicle.

"This book, written by a well-known Biblical student and scholar, will be found of very great help to all who wish to know the Word better. The books of Scripture are chronologically arranged. There are brief but lucid introductions to each book, and much interesting information. The book is cheap, and worthy of being in the hands of every Bible-reader."—Presbyterian Messenger.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

PLEASING TESTIMONY from MALVERN.

My correspondent is a gifted Christian lady, well known as an earnest worker on behalf of missionaries and ministers, for whom she has established a "Home of Rest" among the glorious hills of Malvern.

(If any desire to help an excellent Christian institution, let them send to Miss Anna Boobbyer, Dulwich House, North Malvern, Worcestershire.)

Writing me Nov. 22nd last, she says: "Your medicine, under God, did wonders for Miss Graham, for whom I wrote you some time ago."

It was nearly three years before this that Miss B. sent me a statement of Miss Graham's case. The illness had commenced with a chill, and the cold settled on the lungs; severe hæmorrhage followed; then acute pains (slightly relieved by iodine), shortness of breath, and hectic fever. Strength for more than twelve months gradually declining. General loss of flesh, especially the chest had become very sunken. Cod Liver Oil, which had seemed of some benefit at first, had failed to be of any service. Two physicians, who had before this said that "a cold at any time might seal the patient's fate," now pronounced it to be "a most critical case."

Consumption had been very fatal in the family, six aunts on the father's side having died. Knowing this, Miss Boobbyer was very anxious that Miss Graham should commence my treatment.

She did so, and in three months Miss G., writing me herself, says: "I have derived much benefit. Shall I continue your prescription for Liniment with the Balsam?"

Some symptoms of dyspepsia having arisen, I advised her thereon, also as to diarrhœa at a later period; and for some months there was a fluctuation in her general state of health. Her chest, however, was carefully examined by a doctor at Malvern, who told her that her lungs had become very much stronger. After this, improvement went on. She was the more encouraged to persevere by seeing a gentleman then staying in Malvern, who (she says) "told my sister last week that he had been kept alive for years, and able to attend to his business, through taking your medicine."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

MR. VARLEY AT THE CAPE.

In a private letter, dated Jan. 16, Mr. Varley writes;—I have paid a visit to the Paarl and French Hoocke. In each place numbers gathered to the meetings, and many confessed Christ. At the Paarl the people were joyfully grateful for the meetings, and at the last one thirty-six rose to confess their trust in the Lord. The French Hoocke, which means "Corner of Fastness," is about twenty miles from Paarl, and quite in among the mountains. The day I drove there was deliciously cool, and in the Cape "cart" were two famous ponies. We followed the valley round the mountain mile after mile, until we came to the lovely spot to which, more than 200 years ago, some of the French Huguenots fled for refuge. They seem to have gone as far away as they could from their pursuers, until the encircling mountains seemed to say to them, "You must stop here," for certainly they could not climb their precipitous and rocky sides. We had service in the Dutch Reformed Church at four p.m., and twenty-one confessed the Lord that lovely afternoon.

I returned to Cape Town next day, and on Sabbath morning preached in the Congregational Church. It is good to see the leading politicians and well-to-do folks at the services. The deepest interest prevailed. Hundreds could not get into the building at night; it was a blessed time, and twenty-nine confessed the Lord.

I next went to Simons Town, the naval station. The place was well awake concerning the service, and the Dutch Reformed Church was filled, numbers being outside listening through the open windows. Many rose to take for the first time the Lord Jesus as their personal Saviour. One old man, a Dutch farmer, clasped my hand and said, "Oh! thank you, thank you, sir. Oh, dese are 'glad tidings of great joy.'" The tears were in his eyes, as he with many others thanked me again and again.

THE COUNTESS DE GASPARIN writes to us emphatically denying the statement (made recently in the letter entitled "Mob Rule in Lausanne") that she had declared the Salvation Army to be "the only power that can oppose Socialism."

THE COW CROSS MISSION spent about £120 more, and received about £100 less in 1887 than in 1886. In communicating this fact, Mr. William Catlin points out that the Metropolitan charities in the aggregate show a falling off of more than a hundred thousand pounds last year as compared with 1886.

OUR OPIUM TRADE.—On February 6, Rev. Goodeve Mabbs lectured in the school-room of Boston-road Chapel, Brentford, on "Our Opium Trade with China; a Crime, a Blunder, and a Disgrace." Rev. W. Edwards presided. The room was quite full, and the numerous questions asked at the close showed the interest taken in the lecture. On the 9th Mr. Mabbs gave a short address at the West-end Lecture Hall, Hammersmith, at the week-night prayer-meeting.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY.—A most interesting meeting was held in the Library of the Bible House, Queen Victoria-street, on Wednesday evening last week. Special invitations had been issued to about three hundred young men connected with the Y.M.C.A. Half an hour was spent in visiting the warehouse and issue department, and in inspecting some interesting Bibles displayed in the Committee-room. After the opening devotions in the Library, Mr. George Williams gave an address, marked by his usual hearty geniality and earnest Christian zeal. Mr. John Haffenden, the Society's agent in Malaysia, spoke with much spirit and persuasive force on the claims of his field for more labourers to spread throughout it the Word of God in many tongues. After a few impressive words from Rev. George Wilson, recently appointed to the superintendence of the Literary Department, Rev. T. Aston-Binns, of Reigate, gave some most interesting details of the Society's work upon the Continent. The meeting was thoroughly calculated to interest young men in the Society's noble work abroad, and to bear fruit, one may hope, in offers of personal service to proclaim it.—Record.

SALVATION ARMY SLUM WORK.

On Monday evening the first annual "Slum Review," in connection with the Salvation Army, was held in the Great Western Hall, Lisson-street, Edgware-road. Mr. T. A. Denny presided over a large attendance. Among those supporting him on the platform were Colonel Nicol and staff, Staff-Captain and Mrs. Cooke, superintendents of the Slum Mission, and forty "slum sisters." In the course of a brief address the chairman expressed his opinion that the lowest of the poor are neglected by the churches.

The history of the work was narrated by Staff-Captain Cooke. It was commenced in November, 1886, with one Home; now there were seventeen Homes in London. There are forty-three officers—young women who have devoted their lives to the welfare of the poor. Many of these young women are of good education, but they do not hesitate to scrub filthy rooms, and clean dirty children. The poor are nursed and instructed; the weak and erring are befriended and reclaimed. A woman who had lived a life of sin at Woolwich for eighteen years was got hold of by one of these "slum sisters," and is now, through the exertions of this agency, a respectable member of society. There had been thirty or forty cases of rescue work. Colonel Nicol stated that in the past three months 96,983 houses, and 3312 public-houses had been visited; 717 persons had professed conversion; 2120 had been relieved; and 2783 garments, and 200,000 tracts and newspapers had been distributed.

Thank God for such workers as Staff-Captain and Mrs. Cooke, and Captain Clinton, whose whole-hearted service is shown by the fact that they are willing to live on 10s. a week. All of us cannot go and do likewise, but let us see to it that the work is not retarded for want of support.

WEST KENSINGTON HALL.—This branch of the Evangelistic Mission celebrated its anniversary last week, when addresses on Christian life and labour were delivered by Messrs. W. R. Lane, Jas. L. Stanley, C. Russell Hurditch, R. Paton, John Short, and Dr. Popham. The last-named gentleman, who has charge of the branch, said that the work is not superficial, but quiet and genuine, and some who have been converted in the Hall are now exerting themselves in distant places in the Lord's cause.

THE CONGO.—The traffic in ardent spirits in the regions of the Upper Congo has at last been brought under legal regulation. Anyone desirous of carrying on the traffic is now required to obtain a licence from the Governor-General, or some official designated by him. Special conditions may be enforced for the prevention of abuses by means of licences. Every licence is to cost two thousand francs yearly, while in respect of vessels carrying on the traffic outside the permanent factories a sum of five thousand francs per annum is to be paid. This decree affects all the territory beyond the river Iskissi, which falls into the Congo below Stanley Pool.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission to be held at Ealing, from Feb. 26, by Mr. John Wood.——For blessing on a week's mission for young women, at Cairns House, Brandram-road, Lee, commencing Feb. 20, to be conducted by Miss Hull, of Eastbourne.——For the work of the Mission to the Kabyles and other Berber races in North Africa.——For great blessing on special services at Baptist Chapel, Hampton, near Stroud, by Mr. Opie Rodway, to commence Feb. 18 to 22.——For blessing on an eight days' services at the Medical Mission Hall, Edward-street, Brighton.——For special blessing on the Word, carried to cottage homes, and meetings in and around Stonehouse, Gloucestershire, during the next few weeks.——For blessing to follow Mr. Richard Weaver's meetings at Hawick, N.B.——For blessing on a united mission in Newry, Ireland, by Mr. George Clarke, to be commenced on Feb. 24.——For blessing on Rev. F. B. Meyer's meetings in Edinburgh, from March 6 to 9.——For great blessing on a mission at Wortley, from Feb. 25 to March 7.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

In Scotland 157 post-offices are in houses licensed for the sale of drink—viz., 28 inns, and 109 grocer's shops.

"A magistrate," writing in The Manchester Guardian, commends the use of the lash for habitual drunkards.

"A small, bigoted, fanatical, and puritanical set" is the description a liquor organ applies to the temperance party.

The Irish Temperance League entertained about seventy deaf mutes to tea recently at Belfast; sixty-three took the pledge.

Plebiscites taken in "the five exempted towns" in Ireland show large majorities in favour of entire closing of public-houses on Sunday.

The Dublin Licensed Grocers' and Victuallers' Association, Mr. J. Jameson, distiller, in the chair, recently protested against the increase of licences beyond public needs.

Dr. Norman Kerr suggests a mixed commission of legal and medical experts to consider the laws for the punishment of drunkenness with a view to their revision.

A vigorous temperance sermon was preached by Rev. David M'Queen in Edinburgh on Sunday week. It was the first of a series under the auspices of the Scottish Temperance League.

Mr. Evan H. Llewellyn, M.P., hopes hobby men and faddy men will not be elected on the expected county boards. He regards total abstinence as a monomania which blinds its victims.

At a conference on the subject at the Town Hall, Manchester, the Mayor presiding, resolutions were passed declaring more stringent legislation for the treatment of habitual drunkards desirable.

The arrests for drunkenness in Ireland in the Sunday Closing Act districts, during the last three years, averaged 2711, a reduction of 40 per cent. from the number in the year prior to the passing of the Act.

The temperance committee of Buchan U.P. Presbytery has recommended that all the ministers within its bounds should draw the attention of their congregations to the enormous evils resulting from the liquor traffic in British India.

Rev. John M'Neill says he fails to conceive what notion drink-sellers have of the religion of Jesus Christ and at a recent temperance meeting he advised those who had come from behind their counters never to go back again, or to go back and put an end to the traffic.

Miss Weston's work is being followed by gratifying results in the navy. H.M.S. Lizard was commissioned for foreign service the other day. As the rum ration was being served out the first day, a number of the crew avowed themselves "Miss Weston's boys," and refused to receive it.

Mr. George Blaiklock, of Hoxton Hall, has lectured during the past week at Swansea, Llanelly, New Milford, Pembroke Dock, and Haverfordwest. The audiences have been large and enthusiastic. This week Mr. Blaiklock is lecturing at Neath, and returns to Swansea for three days' meetings.

The Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association held its annual meeting in the Town Hall, and there was a large attendance. The report gave facts showing great success. Mrs. Bradley held forty-five meetings in November and December. The Police-court Mission is increasingly valuable.

The honorary secretary of the Liverpool and District Off-licence Holders' Association writes, disputing an assertion of Bishop Ryle's, that intemperance amongst women is increasing. The Committee of the Association have resolved that the Bishop be requested to justify his depreciatory remarks concerning grocers' licences.

It is surely a step in the right direction that has been taken by the guardians of the Holborn Union, in allowing temperance work to be carried on in the various workhouses under their care. A beginning has been made at Mitcham, where twelve hundred adults are located. At the first meeting eight hundred voluntarily attended and at the close the pledge was taken by fifty-one men and seventeen women.

Members of the committee of a drawing-room Band of Hope, in connection with the Society of Friends in Bristol, have sent a circular to the local clergymen and ministers, suggesting the formation of such associations in religious congregations. The circular states: "The meetings of our band are held monthly on Saturday afternoons. A drawing-room is always available. We have recitations and singing, sometimes an address sometimes a black-board temperance lesson. The children like to attend. Those who are members wear a badge in the form of a rosette; and a year after they have signed the pledge, they are entitled to a medal. They may not take the pledge unless they bring a form of consent, signed by one or both of their parents. Once a year the children are taken into the country, and have tea together out of doors." Mary A. Gayner, Chalfont, Napier-road, Redland, Bristol, is honorary secretary of the committee.

FOREIGN.

"Father" McGlynn has been chosen president of the Brooklyn (N.Y.) Central Temperance Alliance.

It is said the "horrible dens of iniquity in Antwerp are the worst of the kind in the world, "except, perhaps San Francisco."

New Haven, Conn., has 425 licensed saloons; 233 of the licensees are of Irish birth, 111 are Germans, and 56 are Americans.

The American Brewers' Journal, in view of temperance action, urges as mottoes to be placed in every brewery "earnest talking" and "efficient working."

Rev. W. G. Carstens, who is employed by the Texas W.C.T.U. as missionary among the foreign population of that State, since October 7, has visited nine counties preached 30 sermons and delivered 28 lectures; visited 400 families and five prisons; scattered 4000 pages of literature, and secured four ladies and six gentlemen persons of education and influence, as local workers.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

Rev. Dr. J. J. S. Perowne, Dean of Peterborough, preached on this subject lately in Peterborough Cathedral. Taking for his text, "That they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they all may be one in us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me" (John xvii. 21), he said:—

It is, perhaps, one of the most encouraging and hopeful symptoms of our times that there is on all sides a growing desire for union among Christians. Men are beginning to be weary and ashamed of their divisions; they are beginning to feel the need of co-operation. Instead of arraying themselves in opposite and hostile camps, they are beginning to stretch out hands of amity. In sight of the great moral evils of the world; in sight of the many assaults that are being directed against the Christian faith, those who love Christ are beginning to say, Why should we waste time in quarrelling one with another and exaggerating and magnifying our differences? Our differences, after all, are nothing compared with the differences which separate us from infidelity at home or from idolatry abroad. How can we hope to recover the masses in our own country from indifference and secularism; how can we blunt the polished arrows of a sceptical criticism or a sceptical science; how can we hope to throw down the altars of Paganism and conquer a world for Christ, when we are squabbling among ourselves as to the true form of Church Government, or the precise statement of a doctrine, or the exact ritual of a service? We need to escape into a higher atmosphere. We need to approach more nearly to Him who is the fountain of love and life. We need afresh the Pentecostal baptism that shall kindle in us such a supreme love to our one Lord and Master, that jealousies, strifes, divisions, animosities—all that hinders a godly union and concord, may cease in the light of his presence.

Is that a beautiful dream? Can it never be realised? Certainly the history of the Church hardly encourages us to hope that it will be fulfilled. How strange it is to look back upon that history; what a sad and dispiriting retrospect it is! For one golden moment, indeed, following closely upon the Pentecostal gift, we read that "the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul," but that "clear shining after the rain" of heavenly grace was as brief as it was glorious. That vision of peace and concord was as beautiful as the rainbow upon the cloud, and, alas! vanished as quickly away. Within a quarter of a century after the ascension the picture of the church at Corinth was one of rivalries and dissensions. Christians were arraying themselves under party leaders, and St. Paul had to rebuke them for their schisms. Nor was this a solitary instance. The exhortation "to be of one mind," "to speak the same thing," is found in many of his Epistles. Heresies sprang up; even cardinal doctrines were denied; men sensual and not having the Spirit vexed the peace of the Church. Even the Apostolic Church was not free from reproaches such as these, whilst the Apostles were still alive to guide and direct it. In the succeeding ages the same want of unity manifested itself.

Now, at least, we may be thankful if we are beginning to form a larger and truer conception of the Church and of what constitutes Christian unity. It is good always to take a wide view and not a narrow one; good always to seek for comprehension rather than exclusion, and, therefore, it is a thing to be thankful for that so many men of earnest mind, are, from different quarters and with different intentions, looking again at the question of Christian unity, and asking themselves in sober seriousness whether unity is impossible.

If the world is to be converted to Christ, it must be by the spectacle of Christian unity. In the minds of many men, Christian union has come to mean simply union under some particular organisation. An excellent and venerable Bishop of the Church of England said not long since, "There can be no union except in the recognition of Episcopal Government." Surely an utterance like that is absolutely fatal to union. For who could believe for one moment that the great Presbyterian churches of Scotland or of the Continent, or the powerful bodies of Nonconformists in England would so abjure their principles or surrender their independence as to acknowledge the necessity of Episcopal ordination for their ministers? We must abandon all hope of union if we look for it on terms like those. Men will and must differ in externals; men must and will have different opinions about Church Government and worship, and even the precise mode of stating doctrines, and it would be a miserable thing if we could force all men to take the same views exactly on such matters; we should have a stinted, impoverished, narrow, shrivelled-up Church, instead of a healthy, vigorous, free, living community.

Perhaps some will ask, How is it possible to have unity without a uniform ecclesiastical organisation? Why should we not? If in one empire there may be many peoples, each with their own several administrations, while acknowledging one sovereign, why may there not be many churches having each their several organisations, and yet acknowledging the one Lord and Master, Jesus Christ? No doubt the spectacle of Christian divisions, heartburnings, and contentions is saddening enough. No doubt there is in these things a terrible obstacle to the conversion of the world. But let us take care that we acknowledge where the real offence lies. It does not lie in the fact that our churches have different forms of worship, different systems of government, differences even of doctrine. The real offence is in the bitterness, the jealousy, and the alienation. And what does this prove? Not the need of outward uniformity, but the need of a larger spirit of Christian charity. Divisions abound, not because we have different ecclesiastical systems, but because our faith is weak and our love cold; our profession of Christianity a name; our holiness but a feeble gleam amidst the darkness of sin and evil which surrounds us; because we love our party more than our Church, and our Church more than our Christianity, and our Christianity more than truth. We may condemn schism and sectarianism, but we are all of us more or less schismatics and sectarians.

I plead for a larger sympathy and a larger toleration, and a freer recognition of all that is good. Until you obliterate the nature of man, or make him the mere slave of a system, there must be differences. Let us gladly recognise the sacred freedom of intellectual conviction. Let us hold what we believe to be the truth, not hesitatingly, coldly, feebly, but earnestly and with all our hearts, only let us hold it in love. Large-mindedness is a Christian virtue, and thus we must acknowledge that the love of Christ and work in the name of Christ is greater than all ecclesiastical symbols. Let all who are working for Christ, even if they follow not with you, receive your hearty sympathy and co-operation. Do not keep them aloof as if they were heathen men and publicans. God, perhaps, has revealed something to them which He has not revealed to you. They may be nearer to Christ than you are, though they are Nonconformists, and you orthodox Churchmen. And whether they think with you or not, whether they worship with you or not, let your prayer for them be that sharing with you the love of a Common Father, and the grace of a Common Saviour, that they and you may be one even as the Father and the Son are one. So you shall help forward the fulfilment of this Divine prayer, and enter at last into the perfect and consummated unity of all those who, having washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, shall hereafter join in the same worship, and the same work, in his eternal and glorious kingdom.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

MR. ANTHONY COMSTOCK, says an American contemporary, has been raiding the scandalous anatomical museums in Broadway and the Bowery, New York city. Cart-loads of indecent figures in wax and clay were seized, and fourteen of the proprietors arrested.

SEAMEN IN ROUEN.—A mission hall and sailors' reading-room and institute is being erected at 36, Quai de Paris, Rouen, the ancient capital of Normandy. It is estimated that 19,000 English-speaking sailors visit this port yearly, for whose benefit no Home or Refuge of the kind has hitherto existed.

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION.—Pastor Thümmel, of Reimscheid, who had been condemned to nine months' imprisonment for having shown up Romish errors, appealed against this decision, and the case was again tried at Cassel, with the result that M. Thümmel is now sentenced to six weeks', and his printer to ten days' imprisonment. "Decidedly," says the Evangéliste, "the Pope ought to be pleased with Germany; he is taking his revenge on Luther."

TUNIS.—Mr. J. Bureau, one of the agents of the Mission to the Kabyles and Berber races of North Africa, is translating Matthew's Gospel into the spoken dialect of Tunis, which differs greatly from the Arabic of the Bible and the Koran, also from the dialect spoken in Syria. About eighteen Arabs attend a day-school, conducted by Mr. Bureau, who instructs them in French, and reads the Gospel to them. Among the scholars is a priest from a neighbouring mosque.

SWEDEN.—Madame de Ramsay writes from Wilhelmsro, Jönköping:—As to the Christmas Letter Mission and Bible and Prayer Union, I may tell you that we have been much encouraged. Both were begun at Wilhelmsro about the same time as the English Unions. The Christmas letters were sent to many prisoners, and never have we known more grateful recipients. The Bible and Prayer Union counts 3000, and is much valued by all members. It has branched out into Denmark and Finland.

BOHEMIA.—A Protestant Church was opened at Kutná Hora, Kuttenberg, on January 8. The event was one possessing great interest, not only for Protestants in the land of Huss, but also for many Christians in other lands. More than twenty years have passed since Dr. Moody Stuart, after a visit to this country, said that he would strive before he died to see a church erected near the silver mines, into which so many thousands of confessors of the truth were thrown in early times. Gradually hindrances were removed, and the church was opened amid great rejoicings.

OPIUM SMOKING IN CHINA.—Miss Ellen A. Barclay, of the China Inland Mission, writing from Lan-chau, the capital of the Kansuh province, says:—The opium-smoking in Lan-chau is something fearful. It is said that eight or nine out of every ten smoke, and really I do not think it can be an exaggeration. I never realised so much as during this last few weeks what an awful thing it is, day after day, to see women—and I believe it is still worse among the men—with that tell-tale look upon their faces, and to know that they are helpless slaves to a habit that is ruining body and soul; it is almost unbearable! And then to be reminded again and again that "Your country sent it here!"

MRS. ADA M. BITTENBENDER, a successful lady lawyer, of Lincoln, Nebraska, is in Washington, where she has begun her work as superintendent of legislation and petitions of the National W.C.T.U. As a lawyer Mrs. Bittenbender holds high rank. She has never lost a case in the Supreme Court, where she has had considerable practice as well as in the District Courts of her State. She has won many cases growing out of violation of the liquor laws, and has made a specialty of that class of practice. Through her management and leadership the Bill providing for temperance instruction in schools, the anti-tobacco measure, and other statutes have been passed by the Nebraska legislature. She was the originator of the Bill which passed the last Legislature, providing for an Industrial Home for Women.

BRITTANY.—There are not enough workers amongst the 25,000 Bretons here. M. Le Quère does his best, and is much loved by the people. Our new place out at L'Eure is all too small. Last Monday a hundred persons were packed in the room, as tight as figs in a box. Nearly a hundred more are trying to get in. What is wanted is a large wooden hall. It is so delightful to see the people bursting their bonds, and coming out of darkness; at any rate, they are wishful to listen to the truth, in spite of two furious curés here, who do not love M. Le Quère. But the Bretons laugh at the curés, as, thank God, they are free to do as they like. Mary E. Bonnycastle.

Le Havre, France.

"RESCUE WORK IN BRIXTON."—It was with much pleasure that I read Rev. W. H. Richards' letter in your last week's issue. The self-sacrificing labours of Mrs. Cunningham should be better known. This lady, almost single-handed, has in twelve months taken twenty-four of our poor fallen sisters into her own house, and given them a new start in life. Almost every evening Mrs. Cunningham is to be seen in her mission-room, surrounded by her rough (very rough) diamonds. In addition to all this, she has a crèche at her house (Hope Cottage, Bellefields-road, Brixton), where weary, struggling mothers may leave their children during the day, knowing they will be carefully tended.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY FEBRUARY 19.—DANIEL VII.

THIS vision of the four beasts is parallel to that of the image of chap. ii. The kingdoms represented by the beasts are the same as those represented by the four parts of the image, and the ten horns of the last beast correspond to the ten toes of the image.

8.—Another little horn.—The likeness between the Papacy and this little horn is most striking. It has been but a small kingdom, a "little horn." Its farseeing policy and statecraft correspond to "eyes like the eyes of a man." Its proud and blasphemous pretensions to "a mouth speaking great things," and "whose look was more stout than his fellows." Its "making war with the saints and prevailing against them" is a matter of history. The uprooting of three horns before it has had a historical fulfilment in the overthrow successively of Vandals, Ostrogoths, and Lombards, to make way for the development of its temporal power.

25.—He shall speak great words against the Most High.—The Chaldee (the language of this chapter) for "against" is literally "by the side of," and denotes rather identification with than opposition to. "It denotes that he would use language by which he would, setting God aside, regard and give himself out as God" (compare 2 Thess. ii. 4).—Keil. The Greek version of Symmachus (A.D. 230) renders it thus, "Shall speak words as God." The Benedictine editor of Origen's Hexapla, renders it "ex parte Altissimi," "on the part of the Most High," which happens to be the very expression used by the Popes in their bulls of excommunication, as for example in Pope Pius V.'s bull "in Cœnâ Domini." "We excommunicate and anathematise on the part of (ex parte) Almighty God...all Hussites, Wicklifites, Lutherans, &c."

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 20.—DANIEL VIII.

"The two great visions of chap. ii. and vii. are in Chaldee, the dialect of the chief Gentile power. In this chapter Hebrew is resumed, and is used in all the visions that follow. It is natural to infer that in the former prophecies, the Holy Spirit reveals the course of Gentile dominion; and in the latter describes mainly the fortunes of the Jewish nation."—Birks.

3.—A ram which had two horns.—The Medo-Persian Empire.

5.—An he goat came from the west.—The Grecian or Macedonian Empire, "the notable horn" being Alexander the Great.

8.—Four notable horns toward the four winds of heaven.—Alexander's successors and their respective kingdoms, the Syrian, the Egyptian, the Macedonian, and the Thracian, including Asia Minor.

9.—Out of one of them came forth a little horn.—Not to be confounded with the little horn of vii. 8. That springs from the fourth, or Roman kingdom. This from the third, or Grecian. This little horn seems to be Antiochus Epiphanes, one of the Syrian successors of Alexander, whose persecution of the Jews, and profanation of the Temple (A.D. 168) are matters of history, and are related in the Apocryphal books of the Maccabees. Many regard him as a type of Antichrist. Others consider Mahomet to be the little horn.

14.—Unto two thousand and three hundred days.—R.V. better, "evenings and mornings," referring to the twice daily offered sacrifice, and so equivalent to 1150 days.—Delitzsch. This is not far from the period of the profanation of the Sanctuary, as related in 1 Macc. Others take it of 2300 years on the year-day system, the end reaching to the final cleansing of the Sanctuary, or deliverance of Jerusalem from Gentile profanation.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 21.—DANIEL IX.

24.—Seventy weeks are determined.—Although just upon the close of the seventy years' captivity, seventy weeks (or heptads) of years must elapse before real blessing comes in the person and work of the long-promised Messiah. To finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, &c.—Six purposes to be effected within 490 years from a specified date. Some refer these to final Jewish restoration, but to do this the last week of the seventy has to be separated from the rest and postponed till "the end of the age." It is more natural to understand the passage as describing here Christ's finished work, and thus avoid destroying the definiteness of the prophecy by indefinitely prolonging it. Anoint the Most Holy.—"Anoint" is the very word from which "Messiah" (spoken of in the following verses) comes. The anointing of the Most Holy One to his priestly office may well be the last and crowning blessing of the six.

27.—He shall confirm the covenant with many for one week.—This is best understood of the Messiah. There is no ground for introducing Antichrist, who is not named in the prophecy, and whose manifestation is long afterwards. "The prince that shall come" is clearly the Roman Emperor, whose "people" destroyed Jerusalem. He is so called, because the Jews who rejected "Messiah the Prince," said, "We have no king but Cæsar." In the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and oblation to cease.—The shadow ceases when the substance is fulfilled. For the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate.—Better in R.V., "Upon the wing of abominations shall come one that maketh desolate." The reference is to the Roman army with their idolatrous standards. Both in this verse and the last the reference to the siege and consequent desolation of Jerusalem are mentioned as results following the rejection of Messiah, the Prince; but they do not fall chronologically within the seventy weeks. Inattention to this led, in early times, to the postponement of the last week, in order to include the siege of Jerusalem, and later on to its postponement to the end of the age, in order to include Antichrist, thus destroying the chronological definiteness of one of the most important prophecies in Scripture.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 22.—DANIEL X.

"Chaps. x.—xii. form a section of themselves. They occupy the position naturally assigned to them by their date (x. i.) and by their contents; in the latter point being a development of the prophecies contained in chaps. viii. and ix. The section is in three parts. First an introduction (x. 1., xi. 1) giving details of the vision and of the mode of its communication. The second (xi. 2—45) the revelation of leading events in the history of the great southern and northern powers (Egypt and Syria) and of the Old Testament Antichrist (Antiochus Epiphanes). The third (xii.) the victory and deliverance of God's people in Messianic times, accompanied by some words of comfort to Daniel himself."—S.C.

1.—But the time appointed was long.—R.V. renders this "even a great warfare." It seems to be a brief summary of the subject of the vision in chap. xi., which is the warfare between the kings of Syria and Egypt leading up to and including the times of Antiochus Epiphanes and the Maccabees.

5.—A certain man clothed with linen.—The description which follows "points to the revelation of the 'likeness of the glory of the Lord' (Ezek. i.) and shows that this 'man' seen by Daniel was no common Angel-prince, but a manifestation of Jehovah, i.e., the Word. This is placed beyond doubt by a comparison with Rev. i. 13—15."—Keil.

13.—The prince of the kingdom of Persia.—"There are actual celestial powers which correspond to the powers and kingdoms of earth. Behind all that is visible is that invisible and higher power which is necessary to, and the connecting link of, all human things."—Ewald.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 23.—DANIEL XI.

This chapter contains a prophetic anticipation of the leading events of Persian and Macedonian history bearing upon the Jews. The fulfilment in the events no one can dispute. The rise of Alexander the Great, and division of his kingdom into four parts after his death (4, 5), and the subsequent wars between the Syrian and Egyptian dynasties (respectively "north" and "south" of Palestine), 5—20, are matters of history. At ver. 21 Antiochus Epiphanes, the Antichrist of the third kingdom, comes upon the scene as "a vile person," and the history of his acts, and their results, is continued to the end of ver. 35. Then there seems a break, marked by the words, "to the time of the end; because it is yet for a time appointed," and ver. 36 contains at once a transition to the greater Antichrist of the times of the fourth kingdom, or from the little horn of Dan. viii. to the little horn of Dan. vii. St. Paul's reference to ver. 36 (2 Thess. ii. 4) favours this.

36.—Shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods.—The distinction here made between the Most High God and "every god" is brought out in 2 Thess. ii. 4, "All that is called god or that is worshipped," where apparently earthly rulers are meant. Ps. lxxxii. 6.

37.—Nor the desire of women.—"All the early writers, whether Jews or Christians, seem to have understood by this phrase a pretence of chastity, or a contempt for marriage, or some kindred idea."—Birks.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 24.—DANIEL XII.

1.—And at that time.—These words link the destruction of the wilful king, as described in the last chapter, with the deliverance of Israel, "every one that shall be found written in the book," and the resurrection (2).

2.—Many of them that sleep.—"Aben Ezra's opinion that the words are 'many out of' is grammatically defensible."—S.C. Dr. Tregelles strongly upheld this view (which he shows was held also by Rabbi Saadiah in the tenth century), reading the passage thus: "Many from among the sleepers of the dust of the earth shall awake; these shall be unto everlasting life; but those (the rest of the sleepers) shall be unto shame and everlasting contempt. Just so in Rev. xx., after the first resurrection has been mentioned, we are told, 'the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished.' It is at the coming of the Lord Jesus that Israel is delivered; it is then that the first resurrection takes place."

7.—When he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people.—This definition of the period of time, times, and a half, agrees with another (Rev. xi. 2), "the holy city shall they (the Gentiles) tread under foot forty and two months." As the seventy years of the Babylonish captivity had more than one beginning and ending, so has this period of 1260 mystic days or years, as has been well shown by H. G. Guinness in his "Light for the Last Days." It is the latter half of the great mystic "seven times" of Gentile bestial power, during which Israel is in the dust, from which she is at last to "shake herself" (Isa. lii. 2).

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25.—HOSEA I.

The Book of Hosea carries us back about 250 years, to the days when Isaiah prophesied in Judah, to whom Hosea was called to be a contemporary prophet in Israel. He began to prophesy, it is generally thought, about forty or fifty years before the carrying away of the ten tribes by Assyria, B.C., 721.

4.—I will avenge the blood of Jezreel on the house of Jehu.—Dr. Pusey thinks that this was the blood shed by Jehu when inflicting judgment on the house of Ahab; but, as that was done by direct commission from God, it seems rather to be "that blood-guiltiness of Ahab which brought such terrible retribution upon his house, and also that whole course of bloody persecution of Jehovah's worshippers (1 Kings xviii. 4; 2 Kings ix. 7), as well, no doubt, as other oppressive tyrannies of which Jezreel, as the court residence of Ahab and Jezebel, had been the centre."—S.C. Jehu's house, though rewarded for his zeal (2 Kings x. 30) had apparently themselves followed Ahab's ways.

10.—In the place where it was said unto them.—Israel was to be scattered among the Gentiles, and, as such, disowned as God's people, but there (among the Gentiles) would there be gathered in "sons of the living God," and that by reason of a sowing of God, which is the meaning of the word "Jezreel" (Rom. ix. 25; 1 Pet. ii. 10). See also Matt. xiii. 3.

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, February 26.

Matt. xix. 16—26. Golden Text: Matt. vi. 24.

The Rich Young Ruler.

Ver. 17. Why callest thou Me good? None good but one...God.—Jesus would remind him that, in using the word "good," as he does, he either uses it idly, or he takes Jesus to be God, and He seems to say, "If you take me for a merely human teacher, do not honour me with the honour that belongs to God only." He suggests that in the great question of eternal life, God was the only real teacher.

Keep the commandments.—"If you mean to save yourself, and to win heaven by doing good works, you must simply obey the commandments."

Ver. 18. Which?—He fancied that he had kept the Ten Commandments, and that Jesus would give him something new, and more difficult still, and thought it was enough to keep from outward acts of sin, whereas God looketh at the heart, the thoughts, wishes, words.

Ver. 20. All these have I kept, &c.—He thought he had, because he knew so little of God. Had he really known God and his love, he would have been ashamed that he was not more like Him. It is easy to think that a dusty room is clean so long as it is really dark. But open the shutters, and then you will see the dust. We never can know how sinful we are till we know God and feel his love. What lack I yet?—He was dissatisfied in spite of all. Could get no real peace by trying to be good. We get that when we are forgiven freely, for nothing.

Ver. 21. Go and sell, &c.—This was putting him to the test; for the love of money was his weak point. Jesus knew that this man's wealth was a special temptation to him, a "right hand, or foot, or eye," causing him to stumble (Matt. xviii. 8, 9), so He bids him cut it off, pluck it out. The Lord can trust some of his people with riches, but not all. To some, as in this case, He says, "Sell all...and give." Give to the poor.—"You say you love your neighbour as yourself; then prove it." See how He desireth truth in the inward part.

Ver. 25. He went away sorrowful.—Yes, but he "went away." How he felt mattered little; what he did was the great question. He turned from Jesus: he chose the world.

Ver. 23.—A rich man shall hardly enter.—"Hardly"—with difficulty. It is hard for any man to repent of sin and feel spiritual need; how much harder when wealth and power and honour make him outwardly comfortable, and draw him from God. Few of us know how solemn a thing it is to be rich.

Ver. 25.—Who then can be saved?—A cry of amazement and alarm. Jews thought wealth a sign of God's favour. If, then, the rich could not be saved, what chance for the poor!

Ver. 26.—With men . . . impossible.—In case of rich and poor alike. The rich are in greater danger; but no one can save himself. With God all things . . . possible.—It needs his almighty power to change any man's heart. But He can change it, and He loves to do so.

As the chief interest of the lesson centres in the person of this young ruler, teachers should study his character very carefully. Observe: (1) His beautiful frankness, how he tells the truth, so far as he knows it, and boldly faces the truth, as far as he understands it. He is fair-minded, and transparently honest. (2) His purity and concern for spiritual things. He was in the prime of life, very rich, honoured, and powerful, must have had many great temptations to injustice and impurity, also every opportunity. How tempted, too, to live in pleasure without thought of eternal life. In spite of all, he is pure, just, and deeply concerned about eternal life. (3) His noble earnestness and courage. At this time the feeling against Jesus was such that to be one of his disciples was a disgrace, perhaps a great danger to a man of means. Yet he comes to Jesus in the open street (how much bolder than Nicodemus!), running, kneeling to Him, and speaking to Him with the deepest reverence. (4) His deep longing for something not yet attained. He could rest neither in his wealth nor in his righteousness.

LESSONS.

(1) How much we may be, or have, and yet lack the "one thing." So long as we lack sincere and whole-hearted surrender to Jesus, no beauty of life will avail.

(2) It is not enough to seek Jesus, even earnestly, bravely, and reverently. It is yielding all to Him, trusting Him, that alone can save. We may have deep desires, fine feelings, "and do many things," and still come short of possessing Christ as our own Saviour and Lord.

(3) Nothing is freer than the love of Jesus, and yet nothing so searching. It is offered to everybody; yet nobody can really receive it into his heart who does not give Jesus everything, and "crown Him Lord of all." He will receive anyone, but He cannot accept anything short of a whole heart.

(4) Reluctance to do wrong is no excuse for doing it. This ruler's sorrow in going from Christ does not in any way atone for his sin in refusing Him.

(5) The great refusal—of eternal life! What a pitiful, awful spectacle, this man turning away from Jesus! Yet how easily done! Apply this.

ILLUSTRATION.

There is a plant found in the Brazilian forests which men call the matador, or murderer. It first sends out a slender shoot, which creeps along the ground till it reaches some tree. This it grasps, climbs, embraces, for it grows very rapidly, and is ever throwing out tendrils, which clasp the tree like arms. As it mounts higher, each tendril and branch grows thicker, and holds with a tighter grip. On it goes, day by day, up and up—100 feet, 200 feet—crushing and strangling the forest tree as it grows, till it has reached the top. There, as in triumph, it spreads itself out in a huge flowering crown, which soon sends forth a multitude of seeds, with which it does again its deadly work. What "the murderer" is to the tree, the love of this world is to us.

FROM TOWN TO SEA.

Two Homes in connection with the Y.W.C.A. at Southend-on-Sea are engaged in important work.

In 1866 the Holiday Home was founded, and it speedily proved a successful institution. Indeed, the demands made upon it could not be fully met, and so, last year, the Alexandra Home was established. The young women engaged in shops have made good use of these Homes, especially during the spring and summer months. At the Alexandra Home accommodation is made during the autumn and winter months for six or eight girls who desire to leave factory life, and to undergo training for domestic service or laundry work. At present six young women of this class are being trained, and it is proposed in due course to draft them into service either at home or in the colonies, through the agency of the Y.W.C.A. or the Factory Helpers' Union. The latter agency takes care that the Alexandra Home is always full.

The reports of these Homes give interesting details as to methods and results. Information respecting both institutions may be obtained from Mrs. Amand Routh, 6, Upper Montagu-street, Montagu-square, W.

Y.W.C.A., CONVALESCENT AND HOLIDAY DEPARTMENT.—Should any of your readers know of small or private convalescent or holiday Homes suitable for young women in any sea-coast places in Great Britain or Ireland, they would render valuable assistance by sending us prospectuses and full information as to terms, railway orders, class of inmates received, and management, whether distinctly evangelical or not. We also want to hear of a small holiday Home for factory girls, quite near London, to accommodate six or eight girls, for Whitsuntide and the summer months, free of expense as regards rent, matron's salary, and girls' board and lodging. Could any friend supply this need before next holiday season? Answers to hon. sec., Miss F. M. Fraser, 30, Onslow Gardens, London, S.W.

Letters to the Editor.

BLIND CHINESE.

Dear Sir,—I heartily thank you for recommending my pamphlet in aid of Rev. W. H. Murray's work among the blind Chinese. Messrs. Nisbet & Co. have just issued a little shilling book containing the pamphlet, with photo of Mr. Murray and of a blind Chinaman, my paper on "The Last Commandment" (i.e., missions), and the diagram showing Britain's expenditure on missions and drink.

Since their return to Peking, Mr. and Mrs. Murray write very cheerily, full of hope for their work, and much pleased that the one blind woman whom he was allowed to instruct has now, with the full consent of her family, come to Mrs. Murray to be trained for work as an evangelist in the zenanas—the firstfruits of blind female work for sighted women. Mr. Murray had also heard from a missionary in Manchuria that he was forwarding two very hopeful blind men to be trained. So the little leaven will spread.—Yours faithfully,

Constance F. Gordon-Cumming.

Glen Earn House, Crieff.

DR. CLIFFORD ON THE SACRAMENTS.

Dear Mr. Editor,—Permit me to express my sincere thanks for your kind and most generous estimate of my treatment of the "Sacraments." May I add a word in explanation of two points, with which, I think, my reviewer will agree:—

First: Such phrases as "the cousin of our Lord," "the young man of Galilee," "the boy Jesus," "the babe of Bethlehem," signalise, in my judgment, one of the most precious and revealing facts of the New Testament—i.e., the manifoldness and completeness of our Lord's humanity; the entireness with which his Deity enters into and transfigures all our human life. They serve to bring Jesus Christ before the mind as a living, historical being, sharing our human experiences in their whole range, and so quicken trust and love, and inspire adoration and hope, as we bow before Him, saying, "My Lord, and my God."

Again, I accept the exposition given by my reviewer of the "intent of baptism," if it be remembered that the basis of it is found in germ only in Matt. iii., but in full and explicit statement in Rom. vi. Again thanking you,

I am, sincerely yours, John Clifford.

31, Castellain-road, Maida Vale.

[We must respectfully but decidedly differ from Dr Clifford. The assertion of what the Holy Spirit does not assert; the emphasizing of what He does not emphasize; tends to throw the parts of the revelation He has given us out of proportion; and when this is done in relation to our Lord, the effect is, so far, to give us a human conception, instead of the Divine revelation, of the great mystery of godliness, God manifested in flesh.—Ed.]

POLICEMEN'S SOCIAL MEETING.

The Gospel Hall at Wood Green has celebrated its twenty-second anniversary. A number of policemen and their wives or friends were invited to tea by Mr. Morgan, and were afterwards addressed by friends of the Policemen's Gospel Association. Miss Miller said her life-work was to be one of the Lord's remembrances, and related many striking answers to prayer.

Mr. Reader Harris, barrister-at-law, said he was the son of a constable, who retired with the rank of commissioner. Mr. Harris gave a highly interesting account of a mission work he had carried on amongst the men of the V division (Battersea district) for some time, in the course of which his experience has abounded in facts of thrilling interest, illustrating the power of "the faith of Christ" in the case of those who accept Him; and on the other hand the uncertainty of life, and reason, and opportunity to "seek the Lord," if not done in God's time, which is Now—To-day.

Ned Wright, in a few vigorous and characteristically eloquent words, solemnly pressed home the immediate and hearty acceptance of "the grace of God that bringeth salvation."

Inspector Lock testified that he was not "ashamed of the Gospel of Christ," and told how he and fourteen other men of the force had renounced years ago the service of the devil, as the result of attending a Bible class, and how he ofttimes realises his solitary walks on his rounds of duty in the small hours of the morning to be a time of communion with God.

It was resolved to commence at once a Bible-class for policemen, their wives, &c.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

St. Paul's Cathedral is to be illuminated by electricity before next winter.

It is stated that the Bishop of Rochester is moving for the appointment of a Suffragan-Bishop for his diocese.

Dr. Walsham How, Bishop of Bedford, has been appointed to the newly-constituted Bishopric of Wakefield.

A new mission church has been opened at Shabnall, Burton-on-Trent; the cost of erection has been borne by a local firm of brewers.

Rev. Philip Norton, for four years curate of St. Nicholas, Worcester, has relinquished that post, and has been appointed Deputation Secretary of the Italian Mission.

In connection with the Church Missionary Society, a special service was held on Tuesday evening in St. Paul's Cathedral, when a sermon was preached by Rev. E. A. Stuart, of St. James's, Holloway.

The consecration of Dr. Earle, the new Suffragan-Bishop of London, under the title of Bishop of Marlborough, and of Sir Lovelace Stamer, the Bishop-Suffragan of Lichfield, under the title of Bishop of Shrewsbury, will take place in St. Paul's Cathedral on March 24.

Rev. H. Armstrong-Hall, Incumbent of Brunswick Chapel, W., has been appointed Organising Secretary of the Church of England Parochial Missions Society, in succession to Rev. S. W. Darwin Fox. Rev. F. S. Webster, late Principal of the Church Army Training Home, has been appointed a missioner of the Society.

Miss K. Tristram, a daughter of Rev. Canon Tristram, of Durham, has been accepted for mission service by the Church Missionary Society, and appointed to Japan. The C.M.S. College at Fourah Bay, Sierra Leone, is sending another helper into the mission field in the person of Mr. J. Grant, who will work in the Niger country.

During Lent, at the Church of St. Andrew Undershaft, Leadenhall-street, E.C., the Bishop of Bedford (Vicar), proposes giving, on Wednesdays, a series of addresses on "St. Peter's Fall and Penitence." The service commences at a quarter past one, and is over by two o'clock. The attendance of merchants and others engaged in business in the neighbourhood is earnestly invited.

BAPTIST.

At the annual meeting of the Sunday-schools in connection with Lake-road Chapel, Portsmouth, it was stated that there are eighty-nine teachers, and 1675 scholars in the schools. Fourteen scholars joined the church last year, and eighty-seven of the teachers are members.

At the annual meeting of Upton Chapel, Lambeth, the pastor, Rev. W. Williams, gave cheering reports of work among the young. The Sunday-school has been much blessed, and during the year two new schools have been started in neighbouring mission halls. The pastor has engaged a missionary to labour amongst the poor.

In connection with the Metropolitan Tabernacle there are, in good working order, thirty-seven mission stations, with sitting accommodation for 4900 adults; twenty-two Sunday and ragged schools, 584 teachers, 7731 scholars; besides every variety of mission work, Gospel temperance meetings, open-air and indoor services, singing in the streets, 130 evangelists, house-to-house visitation; besides which Mr. Spurgeon's students regularly employ a part of their time in taking the Gospel to the homes of the people in the neighbourhood. The church has been the means of raising up from eighty to 100 churches which were once missions, but are now self-supporting.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Sir Peter Coats has presented Algiers with a neat little Presbyterian church.

Dr. Horatius Bonar's ministerial jubilee is to be celebrated next month, and an urgent effort is being made to make the testimonial fund up to £1000.

A daughter of Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson was recently married in Philadelphia to Rev. F. S. Curtis. Mr. and Mrs. Curtis have sailed for Osaka, Japan, where they go to work as missionaries of the American Presbyterian Board.

Through the generosity of Mr. Samuel Stitt, of Liverpool, each of the students of the Theological College of the English Presbyterian Church, has been presented with a copy of the late Dr. John Ker's "Lectures on the History of Preaching."

The rumours respecting the withdrawal of members from Dr. Andrew Bonar's church in Glasgow on account of the introduction of hymns, to which we referred in our issued of February 3, were much exaggerated. Only one elder has left, and the twenty-eight members who objected have returned.

A legacy amounting to £400 was left to the United Presbyterian Church, for a mission on Lake Nyassa, Central Africa, but that Church, having no mission there, and not contemplating the establishment of one, has handed the sum to the Foreign Missions Committee of the Free Church, to be used as they may think most suitable in the region indicated.

The annual report of Prospect-street Church, Hull (of which Rev. J. G. Train is now minister, in succession to the late Dr. W. P. Mackay), shows a membership of 622, being an increase of thirty-five during the year. There are no pew-rents, and the chief sources of income are the weekly offering and the "envelope system" for ministerial support. There are four Sunday-schools connected with the church, and numerous evangelistic agencies are carried on.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

A deeply interesting meeting of young Friends was held at the house of Rutland Saunders on 7th inst. The subject of consideration was early decision to work for Christ.

As population moves westward in America so do Friends. As a result two new Quarterly meetings have just been opened, one at Newburg in Oregon and one in Wildomar, California. In both cases revival services were held with much blessing.

John T. Dorland, of Canada, has been holding Gospel meetings at Poughkeepsie, N.Y., before coming to England and Ireland, for which he was liberated some time ago. Wm. and Susan Thompson are coming over on similar service, expecting to sail at the close of next month.

In Kansas revival meetings are resulting in many conversions, renewals, and additions to the Church. The same may be said of Indiana, Iowa, North Carolina and Ohio. Great Christian activity prevails, and men's hearts are reached and won by the preaching of Christ crucified.

A blessed time has been that of the past week at the Meeting House, Croydon, for Bible-readings by Henry Stanley Newman, of Leominster, on the "Epistles to the Seven Churches." Never have Church of England, Baptists, Wesleyans, and Protestants of all denominations been so brought together in loving fellowship.

SALVATION ARMY.

The Junior Soldier work was commenced in Sweden two months ago and has now 4000 junior soldiers.

Work was commenced at Carlstadt, Germany, at the beginning of December, and since then 210 souls have professed conversion.

The holiness meetings held in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, were considered a great success. Similar meetings have been held at Bristol this week.

Staff-Captain Young, of Manitoba, is anxious to commence work among the inhabitants of the Indian Reserves, and has recently paid them several visits.

Commissioner Tucker, writing of progress in Ceylon, reports that in Colombo he found the barracks packed to overflowing with a large congregation of Singhalese.

All the World is partly produced by five of the inmates of Mrs. Bramwell Booth's Rescue Home at Whitechapel. The binding is wholly done by these young women, and others are learning the trade.

A Prison-gate Home, opened in Sydney, New South Wales, about twelve months ago, has now become far too small, and a new one has been taken, which provides accommodation for twenty men. The comptroller-general of police has promised to assist the work in every way possible.

METHODIST.

Rev. Dr. Dallinger has resigned his position of Governor and Chaplain of Wesley College, Sheffield.

Rev. George Warner is meeting with much success and encouragement in his evangelistic labours in Australia.

Rev. Thomas Wakefield, Primitive Methodist missionary from East Africa, is stirring up much interest in the Primitive Methodist churches in foreign missions by his addresses on "The Galla Country."

At the annual meeting of Dr. Stephenson's Children's Homes, held on Tuesday, last week, in Great Queen-street Chapel, Dr. Stephenson stated that 2265 children had been admitted during nineteen years. The financial report showed liabilities amounting to £6786.

At the request of a Christian lady, who is much interested in the moral welfare of the service, a portion of the gallery in St. James's Hall will be appropriated on Sunday evenings for soldiers. The soup kitchen at Wardour Hall will shortly be open every day of the week.

A ten days' mission has recently been conducted at the Wesleyan Chapel, Cheadle, by Mr. Charles Garnett. Large congregations were attracted, the church has been greatly revived, and many have been converted to God, some seventy of whom have already joined the Society classes.

At the annual festival of the Louth Wesleyan Circuit, Rev. T. Haslam said the circuit covers an area of 200 square miles, and every chapel is free from debt. There are more than 1500 members, seventy-seven local preachers, nine mission bands, two evangelists, and three travelling ministers.

Rev. G. W. Clutterbuck reports the opening of two new churches at Byculla and Igatpura, in connection with the Wesleyan mission at Bombay. At Colaba such satisfactory progress has been made, and the attendances at the meetings have become so large, that the church has had to be considerably enlarged.

Rev. Olla B'n Alayomi, a West African Wesleyan minister, a convert from Mohammedanism, and whose father is a Mohammedan priest in the Soudan, has been addressing large gatherings in the North of England. Mr. Alayomi has been set apart by the African Conference for the purpose of securing aid for the establishment of technical and industrial schools among his own people.

The Primitive Methodist missionaries in Fernando Po, West Africa, have recently passed through considerable perils. Mr. Luddington, returning to Santa Isabel in the open mission boat, was exposed to the full fury of a terrible tornado, while at George's Bay an epidemic of small-pox has been raging among the natives; but, up to the latest date, none of the mission families had been attacked.

CONGREGATIONAL.

During the past year the congregation at Queen-street, Leeds, have raised nearly £290 for foreign missions.

An Oxford University Auxiliary of the London Missionary Society has been started with much promise of success.

Rev. C. A. Berry's congregation at Queen-street, Wolverhampton, have decided to elect two assistant ministers, so as to free the pastor for more general work.

Miss Nannie Jones, a normal graduate at Fisk University, is to go, under the auspices of the American Board, to the south-eastern part of Africa, about 600 miles from Natal. She is the first single coloured woman sent out by the American Board.

At the annual meeting of the Congregational Church at Blackheath, the sixth anniversary of the settlement of Rev. Charles Wilson as pastor was celebrated. Mr. Wilson gave a detailed account of the mission work carried on at the different centres, and a very cheering record it was.

At the annual meeting of Queen's-park Church, W., it was stated that the year's work, under the pastorate of Rev. Charles Leach, formerly of Birmingham, was most encouraging. Several societies have been formed, and are doing useful work. The pastor has recently commenced a theological class, with the object of teaching Christian doctrine, and training young men for active service in mission rooms or in the open-air.

Rev. Thomas Hall, who has been doing deputation work in Great Britain on behalf of the Colonial Missionary Society, announces that the "Great North-west" is to be invaded by Congregationalism. Rev. Hugh Pedley, a man of experience and power, has gone to British Columbia, and will, it is expected, found a church in Vancouver City; and Rev. A. W. Gerrie has gone to Manitoba, and is expected to render similar service at Brandon or Portage.

At the church at Bowdon, under the pastorate of Dr. Mackennal, the whole of the morning service on the fourth Sunday in the month is specially adapted for the children, and the evening service on the first Sunday in the month is of a simple evangelistic nature, lasting about an hour, and followed by a prayer-meeting in the lecture hall. There are in connection with the church five rural missions, having a united membership about equal to that of the number of members resident at Bowdon.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Presbyterian General Assembly's Committee on the state of religion and evangelisation is considering the propriety of appointing an experienced minister to act as an evangelist in Ireland.

Special evangelistic services have been held at Broughshane. The meetings were largely attended, and much good is believed to have been the result. Successful mission services have also been held at Clonmain, on the Charlemont Circuit.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. James Cleland, of Risley, Warrington, "the father of the Presbyterian Church of England."—Rev. Dr. Peter Macleish, of the Free Church, Dunlop, N.B.—Rev. Dr. David Chrichton, senior minister of Inverbrothock Free Church, Arbroath.—Rev. Thomas Dymock, senior minister of the Free Middle Church, Perth.—Rev. Frederick Watkins, rector of Long Marston, near York, and formerly Archdeacon of York.—Rev. Joseph F. Hone, for sixty years vicar of Tirley, near Tewkesbury.—Rev. John M. Dawson, for upwards of fifty years a faithful minister of the United Methodist Free Churches.—Rev. Samuel Oliver, pastor of the Congregational Church, Great Wakering, Essex.—Rev. J. Jenkins, of Rhyl, a prominent minister of the Calvinistic Methodist body.—Rev. George Burnett, parish minister of Overtown, N.B.—Mrs. Tyler (wife of Rev. Josiah Tyler), who has for thirty-nine years laboured under the American Board as a missionary among the Zulus in Natal.—Mr. Joseph B. Geake, of Launceston, an earnest Christian, and beloved by all who knew him.—Rev. Alex. Gray, LL.D., minister of College-square North Presbyterian Church, Belfast, and Presbyterian Chaplain of the County Antrim Prison, in the 59th year of his age and 38th of his ministry.—Rev. Robert Irwin, vicar of Laracor, diocese of Meath, in the 80th year of his age.—Rev. James Buck, for thirty years pastor of the Seamen's Friend Society's chapel at Liverpool.

FRIENDLY LETTERS.—Miss Skinner's latest letter is addressed to lamplighters and lighthouse keepers. In sending us a copy, Miss Skinner writes:—"I should be glad if ladies and others would circulate this letter amongst the lamplighters in their own towns. They are a class of men who have few opportunities or means of grace; and they are difficult to reach, except by those living on the spot." Miss Skinner's address is 5, St. James's-square, Bath.

HOMES FOR THE AGED POOR.—The 18th annual report of this charity, which has eight Homes in London, presents some very interesting facts and figures. From its commencement the charity has sheltered and cared for 295 inmates; at present 111 persons, many of them advanced in years, are in residence. There are over 60 applicants now awaiting admission, but as yet there is no chance of the charity being enlarged to any extent. Miss Harrison and Miss S. A. Harrison, 5, Grandacre-terrace, Anerley, are the honorary secretaries.

Mission Appeals.

Chiswick.—Mrs. Ginever's recent visit to the Mission Hall, with her orphan girls, who gave a service of song, was for the purpose of benefiting the funds of Mr. R. T. Smith's crèche. Assistance will be thankfully received by Mr. Smith, whose address is 13, Barrowgate-road, Chiswick.

Anglo-Indian Protestant Mission.—At a meeting recently held in the Protestant Hall, Portsmouth, on behalf of this Mission, a gentleman promised ten pounds, provided four others gave a like amount. The Mission is designed to extend the principles of the Protestant Reformation among our own countrymen in India. Help may be sent to Mr. J. N. Foley, general secretary, 18, Paternoster-row, E.C.

Tyndale Memorial Church (Brookfield-road, South Hackney).—The tender for the erection of this church has been placed, and the cost will be £979. It is intended (D.V.) to lay the memorial stones on Easter Monday. Financial help is greatly needed. Romanists and Ritualists are very active in the locality. The Tyndale Memorial Church will supply Gospel ministrations, and endeavour by its agencies to neutralise the efforts of the Anti-Protestant party. Mr. John Fletcher Porter, 59, Driffield-road, North Bow, London, E., will give information and receive subscriptions.

The French Protestant Episcopal Church, Savoy.—The appeal which is being made on behalf of the old Huguenot Church of St. John the Evangelist, Bloomsbury, should enlist the sympathies of all who honour self-sacrificing loyalty to God. It appears from the brief published history of this church that it is almost the only survivor of those in which the old Huguenots worshipped; and, by what certainly appears an arbitrary and unjustifiable action on the part of successive Governments, it has been dispossessed of all means of providing for the stipend of the minister, hitherto paid by the Treasury in the shape of interest on a specific sum raised in aid of the French refugees after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. There are still amongst us many descendants of those noble men who gave up everything for their religion, and we are sure that this appeal only requires to be known to be responded to by those who cherish the memory of their ancestors, and will not willingly let this memorial of them languish. The treasurer is Mr. W. M. Beaufort, 18, Piccadilly, London, W.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most desirable that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

⁂ Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

⁂ We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

WESTWARD HO!

200 Trained Lads (the First Party this year) will (D.V.) leave our various "Homes" for Canada on March 23. Of this number about 50 will be bound for our New Industrial Farm, Manitoba, the remainder for Ontario.

If only the needful Funds are forthcoming, at least 600 carefully trained youngsters will (D.V.) be placed out in the Dominion this year.

But the question of want of Funds is more serious this year than formerly, for we are very much poorer now, and dare not arrange for the departure of one boy or girl unless the whole sum needed is received or promised beforehand.

£8 10s. will defray the entire cost of Emigrating one Boy to Ontario.

£51 will do the same for Six Boys; £102 for Twelve boys; £170 for Twenty Boys.

To send Youths (of 16 to 21 years of age) to Manitoba is more expensive, a railway journey of 2,000 miles further West having to be paid for; but the greater advantages of placing the big fellows from our Labour House there, rather than in Ontario, are well worth paying the higher rate to secure.

£66 will do the same for six Lads; £132 for twelve Lads; or £220 for twenty Lads.

Probably it lies in the power of many who will read this page to help me to divert the current of these young lives into healthful channels, and at the same time to relieve our overcrowded English Cities, by sending gifts in aid of our Emigration Fund.

Readers of The Christian do not now need to be assured that this is really God's work, or that the whole is being carried on, on strictly Christian lines; but I am sure they will rejoice to know that many of the dear fellows now on our list of Candidates for Emigration have been brought to a knowledge of the Truth, while under my care, and appear to be sincere followers of Christ. They will doubtless carry the Gospel with them to the New Country of their adoption, as very many of their predecessors have done.

Who then, by promising one or other of the above amounts, will strengthen my hands yet more to do God's work, and at the same time help to give a real start in life to some of these young fellows who have been rescued from utter destitution and evil surroundings, and carefully tested and trained for years or months past in our "Homes?"

Contributions to our Emigration Fund will be gratefully received and acknowledged by

Your faithful Fellow-labourer among the Waifs and Strays of the Streets,

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E. THOS. J. BARNARDO.

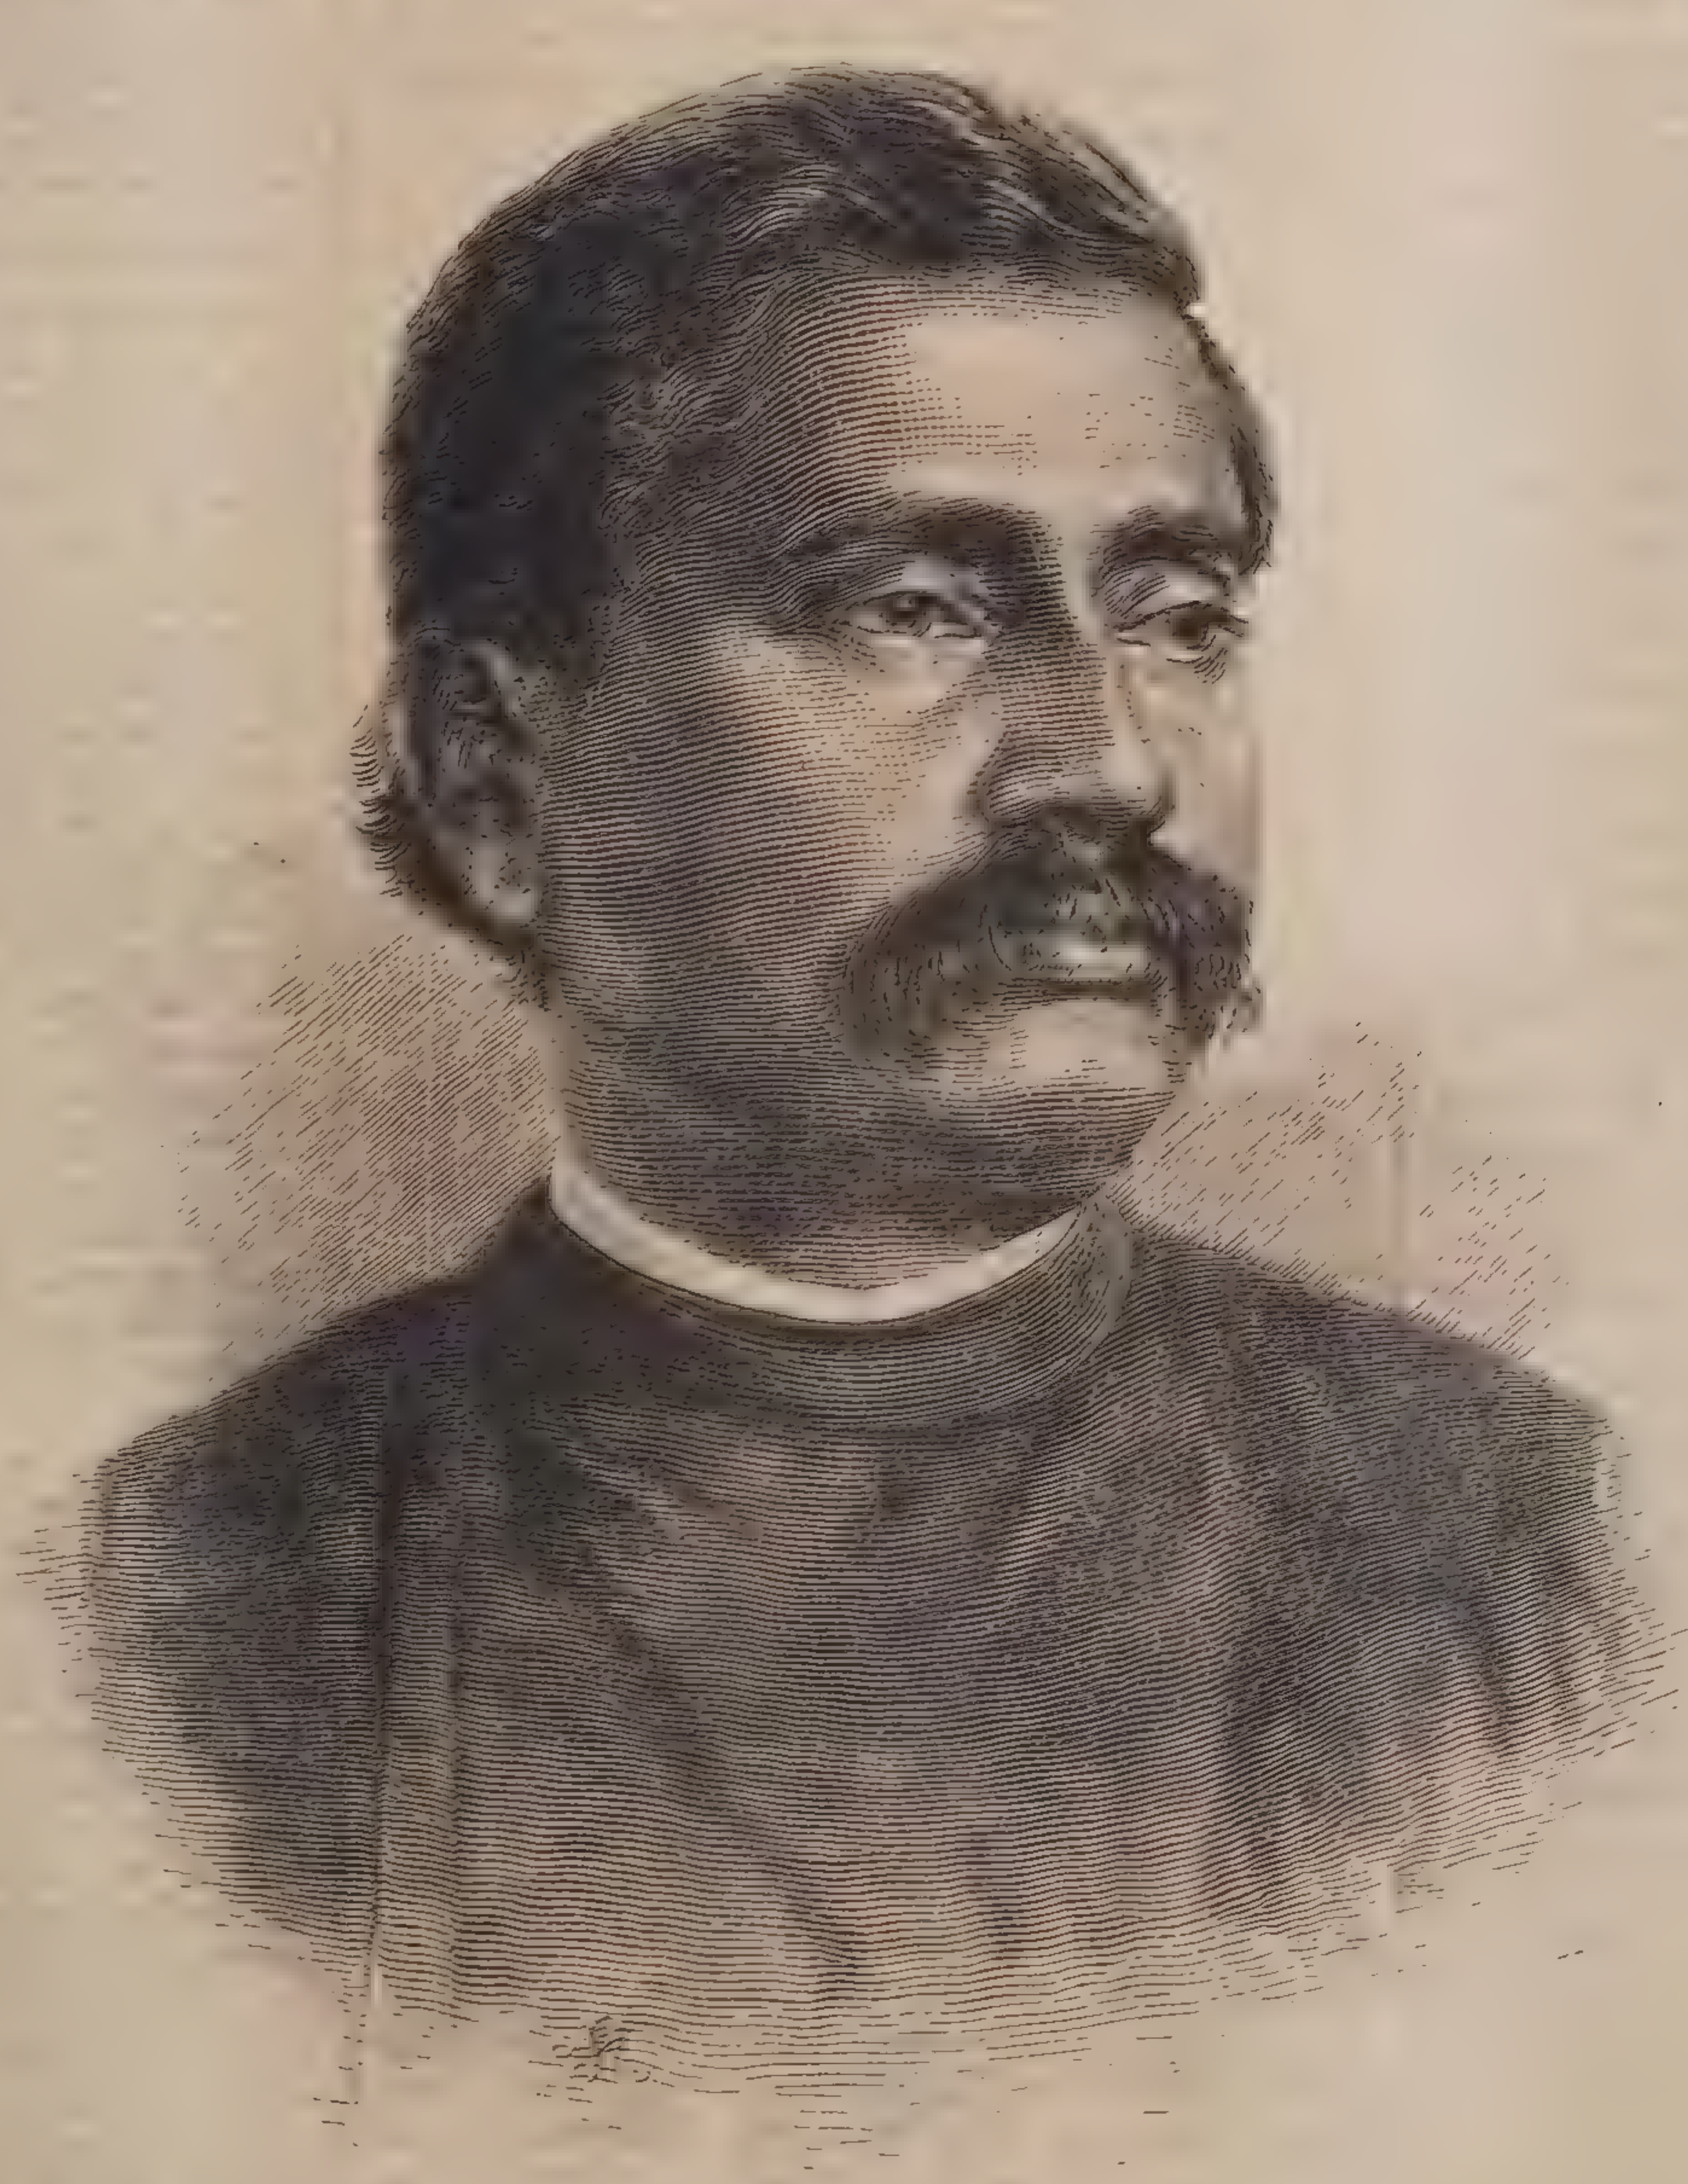
REV. NUNDA LAL DOSS,

Of the London Missionary Society.

IT is seldom that the churches of this country can see an Indian native convert face to face, and judge for themselves of the power of the Gospel over the mind and character of a Hindu. Narayan Sheshadri, from Bombay, and the late Rajahgopaul, from Madras, visited the Free Churches of Scotland some years ago, and spoke in the General Assembly. The late Goolzah Shah and G. C. Dutt. of the Bengal Baptist Mission, were introduced to a few of that denomination. A Jani Ali, a Satthianathan, and a Jagenathum, have studied at Cambridge or Edinburgh, and become known to a limited circle of friends. But the London Missionary Society recently took a more formal step, and specially invited as a deputation to the Congregational Churches of England Rev. Nunda Lal Doss, one of its most valued and respected Bengali missionaries.



Personal intercourse aids us to realise the fruits of Christianity in those who, like Mr. Doss, have been brought up in the bosom of heathenism. In these days, when there is such a demand for results, no better or more tangible one could be given than that of one born a Hindu, but now able to tell us in our own tongue of the work of grace in his heart, and to testify to the many blessings which India is receiving from the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Rev. Nunda Lal Doss was born in Bhowanipore, Calcutta, in 1839, of a respectable family of the Sudra caste. His mother died when he was very young, but his father is still living, and continues a devout worshipper of Ram and Kali. When Nunda was about ten years of age, he was sent to a non-Christian school to begin his English education. It was his earnest desire to attend the London Missionary Society's Institution, but it was a long time before he could prevail on his father to let him do so. Looking back on his past life he recalls with much interest the impression made on his mind by the first question in the Christian Catechism, which is, "Who made you?" and the answer is, "God made me." His first feeling was one of surprise, but further instruction led him to accept its truth. He says we can scarcely conceive the degree of mingled joy and pride which filled his mind that this great Being should be his Creator, and that he should have received this knowledge of which so many of his countrymen were profoundly ignorant. Notwithstanding these impressions he was induced, not long after, by a companion to offer obeisance to his father's sacred picture of Ram and to some idols, to procure assistance in his studies. When this failed to give him promotion into a higher class he revenged himself by beating the picture with his shoe. His belief in one God was thus re-established, but he determined that, whatever other lads might do, he would never become a Christian.

In 1855 he had made sufficient progress to be admitted to a higher class, which had the personal instruction of Rev. E. Storrow. His opposition to the truth now began to take an outward form, for he discovered that one of his classmates had become convinced of the truth of Christianity, though he had not the courage to tell his teacher or parents of what was in his mind. Nunda, along with four others, determined to annoy him on every available occasion out of school hours. This was done for a long time, till one day, when they had driven him to bay in a corner of the road to their homes, he burst out with the exclamation, "You may say what you will, but of one thing I am certain, and that is that I am a sinner, and I need a Saviour." The words were uttered in an impressive manner, and Nunda says they went straight to his heart, and pierced his soul as with the arrow of conviction. His part in the persecution now ceased, and, instead of worrying the young believer, he became an inquirer himself.

A complete change passed over him. The Bible lessons were filled with fresh interest, and the young persecutor began to pray to Jesus in secret. He, however, told no one of what was passing in his mind. But one day a Brahmin neighbour called, and while waiting to see his father, who was busy with his idol worship, began talking in praise of Kali, the goddess of the neighbouring celebrated temple. To his horror, Nunda proceeded to abuse the idol, saying that it was only an ugly black stone. The Brahmin was filled with rage, which became louder and more violent when Nunda wished the idol were there that he might defile it. This brought out the father, who, conjecturing whence these heretical notions had been derived, turned suddenly round, and asked his son to say distinctly whether he believed in Christ or not. The prompt reply followed that he did. The father, overcome with anger and disappointment, beat his son most unmercifully, and locked him up in an inner room. Nunda submitted meekly, and made no further reference to religion. On this account, perhaps, he was released in a few days, and permitted to return to the Missionary College.

Much diligence was now shown in his studies, and in 1857 he rose to the highest place in the Institution. His convictions were kept secret, and he had not the courage to talk of them, even to the native Christians. But one Sunday a relative came in from the country with the sad news that seven members of the family had died of cholera within a week. This information roused the young man, and brought home to him the sin and danger of delay. After passing through much remorse and dread, he summoned courage to open his mind to Rev. Surjya K. Ghose, the pastor of the native church. This honoured servant of Christ did all he could to encourage the young man. Secret visits were also paid by night to Mr. Storrow, and before long the resolve was taken to be baptized. His father came to the mission-house, and, when he found that all his arguments were in vain, appealed with tears to his love for home. It was a severe trial, but Nunda was enabled to pass through it without wavering. The father then said he would leave him to his Christ, for he would have no more to do with him, and ordered him never to enter his house again. This stern resolve was adhered to for seven years; but, even at the occasional visits which are now permitted, he must eat apart, on a plate kept specially for him, and the spot where he sits must be afterwards purified with holy water.

Thus caste cut off the young disciple from all that he deemed dearest on earth; but the Lord was with him and sustained him. The advantage of the long course of Bible teaching he had gone through was now apparent. He grew rapidly in grace and in the love and confidence of the Christian brethren, and when he offered himself for the Lord's work, it was felt that he was quite fit to enter the higher class for training evangelists. At the close of his studies, he was duly set apart to the work of preaching the Gospel to the heathen and of aiding in the Christian teaching in the College. Not long afterwards he was happily married, and the young couple were given the charge of the new converts whom the iron rules of caste had driven from house and home.

Mr. Doss's commanding form, and clear voice, and earnest straightforward manner, never failed to gain for him the respectful attention of every audience he addressed. But, excellent as he was as a preacher, the mission early recognised in him still greater talents as a teacher, and intrusted him with much important work in the Institution. In 1868 the time had seemed to come for opening a similar institution in the station of Berhampore. The missionaries in Calcutta were very loth to lose his services, but they felt that Rev. S. J. Hill could not have a better colleague and coadjutor than Mr. Doss, and he was accordingly ordained as a missionary of the Gospel and sent to Berhampore.

There he continued for thirteen years. His duties were at first confined to educational work, into which he entered heart and soul, gaining the respect and affection of both the young Hindus and their parents. In 1870, the pastorate of the native church was added. He found that his congregation was not only composed of a very poor class of the people, but also that their moral, intellectual, and even spiritual condition was at the lowest ebb. For some years Mr. Doss could report nothing but what was most discouraging. In 1876, the first signs of life appeared in a prayer-meeting which the people started amongst themselves, and carried on for three months without the pastor's knowledge, and the condition of the Church has slowly but steadily risen since that time.

His labours amongst his pupils were unremitting, but it was not till 1878 that the first convert was baptized. He was a Brahmin, and was subsequently joined by his stepmother, and later on by his young Hindu wife. Both mother and son have proved to be most zealous workers for Christ. Another young man was afterwards baptized, and, though he has left the station, he still corresponds with his teacher, and may yet become of much service in the Lord's kingdom. Many others benefited by his instructions, but have not had the courage to meet the social ostracism which follows baptism amongst the higher castes of Hinduism

In 1881, death and sickness in Mr. Doss's family rendered necessary his transference to the healthier district of Mirzapore. After steady and unobtrusive labour for two years in that station, he received an earnest call to the pastorate of the principal Bengali Congregational Church in Calcutta. The church, however, being able to provide but a part of the minister's support, it was thought best that he should not relinquish his position as missionary of the Society, but should resume, as far as his leisure allowed, his old work in the Bhowanipore College. His ripened experience, soundness of judgment, and earnest vigour, as well as his unblemished reputation and sterling worth, soon won for him a prominent position amongst the Bengali ministers of Calcutta. As a pastor he has gained the affection of his people by his patient and persevering efforts and loving sympathy in both their joys and their sorrows, and, in his work in the College, it is gratifying to know with what respect and esteem he is regarded by both teachers and pupils.

Those who have listened to his addresses in the various churches of this country, which he has visited, have been struck with the elegance and correctness of his English. It may seem surprising, but he is not the only native of India who has attained greater facility in English than in his mother tongue. In illustration of this, he says that his sermons are composed in English, and turned into Bengali from English notes taken into the pulpit. When he was chosen as the first Bengali minister of the London Mission to come to England, it was felt that a more judicious choice could not have been made, and he left Calcutta with the hearty good wishes of his Bengali brethren of all denominations. The visit has been productive of much good, and in the many churches where his voice has been heard, he has succeeded in giving a higher and clearer idea of what the Indian native Church may become; and has shown, in a way which no English missionary could, how elevating, purifying, and ennobling is the influence of our holy religion. The Australasian churches have invited him to spend a short time in their colonies before returning to his native country, and it may be hoped that he will do much to quicken and increase the interest of those southern lands in Indian missions.

THE FLOODS IN CHINA.

We have received the following letter from China, written by our missionary, Mr. W. S. Johnston, acknowledging contributions sent from the residents of Shanghai and Hankow. Contributions in aid of the sufferers will be gratefully received by this Mission, and promptly telegraphed to China. B. Broomhall,
Sec. of the China Inland Mission.
2, 4, and 6, Pyrland-road, London, N.

With deep gratitude to God we acknowledge the receipt of the drafts you have forwarded from the residents of Shanghai and Hankow towards the relief of the suffering and distressed in this part of the province. The officials are rendering considerable service towards alleviating the present cry. They have selected fields some distance from the city gates, caused mud walls to be made around them to a height of about five feet, and then erected small tents in the enclosure for the people. In this rude structure, with some straw spread upon the cold ground, whole families may be seen. Not having room inside to sit upright, women and children are to be seen in numbers standing outside, while the men continue the work of erecting tents, for the people are still coming.

The wind is now bitterly cold, and the sight is sad indeed. The people are also being provided with food by the Chinese officials and soldiers, and it is said that this will be continued during the winter months; but, even if it be, what about the ensuing spring and summer, and the consequent misery that must ensue from a winter spent in such circumstances, in which disease and suffering must follow?

The brethren who will be directly engaged in the work will need much special prayer for wisdom and guidance, as the taking up of a work in which the officials are already active might involve their withdrawing and leaving the entire work upon us, so that the demands would be beyond us; while, if wisely done, both works may proceed, and our greatest effort be made in the early months of the year, when it is very probable the efforts of the officials will relax somewhat.

We must remember that these people are without the prospect of food for almost a year yet, as far as their labour is concerned. The land is still practically submerged, though the water is greatly abated; and, suppose they can return to their homes in two or three months' time, where is the seed for planting to come from, and where their sustenance in the interval of growth?

The suffering is beyond language to express or calculate in its far-reaching extent. Let us in deep sympathy remember them in our prayers, and by our practical help seek to alleviate their sorrows, and it may be that out of this dire calamity shall be opened a wide and effectual door for the Gospel.

"PERPLEXED."

WE have received a number of letters respecting the communication "Perplexed," which appeared in our issue of the 10th inst., wherein "B. S.," the wife of an officer in India, stated the case of a gentleman of her acquaintance, who, though a man of pure and beautiful life, had thus expressed himself: "For years I have searched, the Scriptures, and have entreated God have agonised in prayer that He would reveal Himself to me; but I got no light, and so at last I turned unbeliever." These are some of the points urged in the letters received in reply:—

The gentleman's prayer, right so far, should have been supplemented by another—that God would enable the suppliant to see his own true condition: "Show me Thyself; show me myself."

God has already revealed Himself to man. Was it quite reasonable for the gentleman to expect some personal visitation? God waited for the man to acknowledge himself a sinner, and to accept Christ as his Saviour.

"He that willeth to do God's will shall know of the teaching" (John vii. 17). The great question in every case is—Is there that genuine willingness to do God's will at any cost? An honest doubter will be an honest seeker: but, unfortunately, much of the so-called honest doubt of these days is at bottom intellectual self-indulgence, which, like all other self-indulgence, brings its own punishment.

Several correspondents emphasise the fact that God should be approached in the name of, and for the sake of, the Lord Jesus Christ. "B. S." is urged not to be discouraged, but to persevere, presenting the truths of Christianity to the understanding, heart, and conscience of the gentleman in question, not omitting the duty and privilege of arranging for the meeting together of "two or three" believers to pray for the Divine blessing on her efforts. Then, by God's grace, light will shine into the dark place, and joy and peace will follow upon believing from the heart. Among the books recommended by some who have written to us are: Liddon's "Some Elements of Religion" (Rivingtons, 1s. 6d), and Gall's "Instant Salvation" (Gall & Inglis, 4d.).

ILLUSTRATIVE CASES.

DEAR SIR,—Reading in THE CHRISTIAN a lady's question, headed "Perplexed," one or two incidents recur to memory which possibly might suggest some useful thoughts; three of these I will briefly narrate.

The first individual was a well-read, talented young lady. She had been brought up among Socinians; so had I; but the Lord had set me free from that delusion, and I laboured much to set before her a train of thought which had proved useful to myself. It was in vain: no argument would touch her. To my question, "Have you read the Bible through—with prayer?" she replied, "I have, more than once—and upon my knees, asking earnestly for light to see the truth; the result has been that, more firmly than ever, I remain a Unitarian."

Looking back after many years, I perceive that this young lady's mind was fully taken up with self. She was fully satisfied with every conclusion that sprung from what she called the sovereign power of her own reason. Now God will not share His sovereignty with a creature. He abhors a proud heart. See 1 Peter v. 5, 6.

The second case was that of an old gentleman, most genial and amiable, who not only disbelieved in the Deity of Jesus, but who seemed to ignore the existence of a God; he never went to church, spent the Sabbath in reading newspapers, and resolutely avoided all religious conversation. I was then young, and, being very happy in God, considered it my duty to attempt this gentleman's conversion. The difficulty was how to set about it, he being old enough to be my grandfather. So I began very cautiously, saying how I had been walking in the Necropolis, and was surprised to see what a number of children's graves were there; how it had set me thinking of the miracle of life, and how wonderful it seemed, that amidst so many antagonistic influences anyone should live to be old. "You, for instance, Mr. D., how many troubles, dangers, sicknesses, you must have passed through! yet here you are nearly eighty years of age, still hale and hearty." "You are wrong," said he; "I have had a very agreeable life, fairly prosperous and happy; and never had a day's illness in my life."

I was astonished. After a pause I observed, "Very few persons can say as much. You have been favoured indeed; and I should think you must be very thankful to the Lord for such mercies, and love Him very much."

"Oh, I don't know about that," he replied. "He has no fault to find with me, that's very plain."

"But do you find none with yourself?" I asked.

"Why, no! I have always done my duty, and kept a good character; indeed, I have lived a better life than most people."

"But don't you remember what Jesus said to a church which supposed itself to be very good: 'Thou knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and naked.' God's standard of holiness is higher than yours."

He would hear no more. He darted a look of extreme anger upon me, turned a cold shoulder to me, and walked away without saying good-bye, leaving me in tears. I did not, however, forget to pray for him. He went on a distant visit. I did not see him again for four years, and when we met he was a changed man. He loved nothing so much as to hear of Jesus. The Bible was his constant companion, and he was sitting, humble and repentant, at the feet of Christ. I never knew how the change came, but it showed me that it needs the finger of God Himself to convert a soul, and that nothing but the touch of Deity can bring light out of darkness, and life out of death.

The third case was that of an astute man of business. We were both middle-aged, and our friendship permitted me to use much freedom in our conversation with each other. He had imbibed many of the views now set forth under the name of "Modern Thought." He did not believe in the inspiration of the Bible; called the histories of Genesis "myths." "We thinking men," as he delighted to call himself and his companions, "have got above all that, which is only teaching for children; God is too good to be unkind. He does not call sin the dreadful thing that you think it. If a man's duty be done to his family and to society, what more would you have?"

I was speaking about him to a dear Christian friend. She said, "You must pray for him." "So I do," said I, "but I feel that is not enough—he must pray for himself." "Well," she added, "ask the Lord to teach him to pray for himself. He will do it."

I had just been reading a sermon of Mr. Spurgeon's—in which he says: "Up, Christians! carry your unbelieving friends in the arms of your spirit to the Lord's feet, and deposit them there," &c. I did just that. In spirit I bore him to the feet of Jesus, and knelt with him there, with prayers that seemed as though they would not be denied! And the Lord heard, and answered.

My friend fell ill; all his clever reasonings came to nothing. He wanted a rock to stand upon; all his pride of intellect gave way, and he became humble as a little child. So he departed, as I firmly believe, to be with God, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Now these things show that prayer is the mighty agent, and the Spirit's touch is the only secret of power. No laboured argument, no earnest persuasion, will answer without prayer and the Holy Spirit's influence. The heart must be emptied of self; must be humble and earnest: then the Lord will give an answer of peace. We cannot give this precious peace, but we can pray that the Lord would teach the tempted soul how to seek it. Often does God, in tender mercy, send heavy affliction, to bring down the self-sufficiency of the natural heart, and cause it to see itself as it really is, in the sight of God.

FROM THE SOUTH PACIFIC.

THE NEW HEBRIDES.

WRITING to thank the friend who has for several years sent him a copy of THE CHRISTIAN weekly, Rev. James H. Lawrie, a missionary of the Free Church of Scotland, on the island of Aneityum, one of the New Hebrides group, says:—

I heartily thank you for your long-continued kindness in sending me such a valuable paper. During recent years it has become quite a foreign mission advocate, and is thus interesting and useful to us as a spur to greater faithfulness in our endeavours to bring in the heathen, and strengthen the hearts of those who have already made a profession of faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

Mission work in the New Hebrides has been extending rapidly of late years. On several islands the natives almost wholly profess Christianity, and strong efforts are being made to place at least one European missionary on all the principal islands in the group.

Four new stations were opened up during last year on the islands of Malekula, Malo, and Espiritu Santo. Along with other of my brethren I assisted in the building of three of the new mission-houses. At each place visited we found that the heathen natives were quite willing to allow a missionary to settle among them. At one place, on being asked if he desired a missionary to reside in his district, the owner of a piece of land on which one of the mission-houses has been built, replied in the affirmative, by saying in broken English, which he had learned in Queensland, "Yes, me plenty too much want missionary." Quite a feeling of rivalry was raised by the people of a neighbouring village as to where the missionary's house should be built, on the land of one party or that of the other. The day has been when any white man attempting to set foot on any of these islands would have been driven away at the point of the spear. Only last year one of our older missionaries was nearly clubbed while trying to introduce the Gospel among the inhabitants of a small heathen island who had long resisted every effort to break down their heathen customs.

On Aneityum, where we labour, the natives have long professed Christianity. Some weeks ago I made a tour round the whole island, and find that at all the village churches public worship is conducted regularly every Sabbath by the native pastors; the teachers also keep up morning schools. At the central mission station we have classes for candidates, and last year thirty individuals were admitted into full church fellowship.

JAMES H. LAWRIE.

Rev. James Sleigh, of the London Missionary Society, writes to our publishers from Lifu, Loyalty Islands, near New Caledonia, on December 8, 1887, as follows:—"I return many thanks to you, or to some other unknown friend, for kindly sending me for some years The Herald of Mercy. I have frequently read portions in Lifu to the young Lifuans, who listened with pleasure and profit, and were delighted with the engravings. I am leaving here in a few days for England, so kindly do not address more to me at Lifu." Rev. James Hadfield will succeed Mr. Sleigh as missionary at Lifu. Mr. Hadfield is already supplied with THE CHRISTIAN.

THE LAND AND THE BOOK.

THE FIGURATIVE LANGUAGE OF SCRIPTURE.

THE third of Rev. JAMES NEIL's course of four popular realistic lectures on Monday evenings in Exeter Hall was delivered on February 13, the subject being "Similitudes; or, Light on the Figurative Language of Scripture." There was again a crowded audience, who listened with the deepest interest, and indicated a hearty appreciation of the lecturer's remarks.

"I have used similitudes by the hand of the prophets," cries the Lord, and in doing so uses a "similitude"; for "the hand" here does not mean a literal hand at all, but is employed as a figure for "the ministry" of the prophets. The extent to which God has so used "similitudes" has been fully realised by few. The East is the very home of flowery and figurative language. In Palestine a knowledge of colloquial Arabic soon reveals the astonishing and charming fact that the ordinary conversation of the humblest and most uneducated of the people, who can neither read nor write, and who have not the scientific knowledge of a well-taught English child of seven years of age, abounds with figures of speech which, in the West, would be thought worthy of a great poet. Take the

as a striking instance of this delightful feature, and contrast them with the coarse, hoarse, meaningless cries of our far more highly educated street hawkers. Here comes the cake-seller, calling out, "Delicate morsels, buy, O ye children"; next comes the vendor of roses, sold in large quantities to distil for perfume, with the cry, "Roses, roses of many odours." The sweetmeat man announces his wares with "Peace to the throat! palm candy"; while he with melons shouts, "O melon pips—solace of the uneasy." Here comes the baker with his tray of bread, crying, "O Thou All-bountiful! O God! fresh bread! O Thou All-bountiful!" The water-seller tinkles his little copper bowls, or drinking cups, and calls to the passers-by, "O all ye thirsty ones, come to the water!" or quotes a verse of the Koran which promises heaven to those who give a cup of cold water to the thirsting. The hawker of henna, the fashionable yellowish brown staining for the nails, lifts up his voice with, "O henna, henna, fragrance of the fifth paradise! flowers of henna!" From a fruit-stall you may hear equally figurative language: "Dates, dates of the heart; but not for the avaricious"; while stoneless raisins are offered as "Daughters of Damascus." The very beggar calls out "Charity, charity, God will repay it," and then, "May thy mouth be always filled with sugar," to which those who refuse an alms invariably say, "Pass on! God will give thee."

The modes of thought and speech in Palestine being such as I have said, the Bible could not possibly be genuine if it were otherwise. Countless surface difficulties which are alleged by the freethinking objector, or which force themselves on the sensitive conscience of the believer are due to this simple cause. Take an instance of each. "Where," cries the Atheist triumphantly, "is it spoken by the prophets,

HE SHALL BE CALLED A NAZARENE?"

Nowhere is Nazareth so much as mentioned in the Old Testament, and Jews as well as Atheists, taking this literally, triumphantly point to an error in the Gospel. But observe the true answer. In thus claiming a distinct fulfilment of prophecy in Matt. ii. 23, the Apostle used a double figure. First, enallage, or exchange, where "He shall be called," or "his name shall be called," is put for "He shall be." This is a common Hebrew idiom. It occurs very strikingly in Isa. vii. 14, "Shall call his name Emmanuel (God with us)," in Isa. ix. 6, "His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, &c.," and in Jer. xxiii. 6, "He shall be called Jehovah Tsidkainu (the Lord our Righteousness)." Our Lord Jesus Christ has not borne these as his names, but He has borne them as his characteristics. The idiom "to be called," means not only "to be," but "to be recognised and renowned as." It is, therefore, "he shall be a Nazarene." But to "be a Nazarene," here is the figure of metaphor, and means "to be like a Nazarene."

Now the Nazarenes in our Lord's day were despised and held in great contempt and treated as worthless and ignorant people. Nathanael, who was a good man, and lived at Cana, only some six miles away, and therefore well knew the village where Jesus was brought up, cries, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" (John i. 46). Now how clear is the fulfilment claimed, "He came and dwelt in a town called Nazareth: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets that He should be called a Nazarene" (Matt. ii. 23). Several of the prophets tell us of the contempt and shame that would cover Messiah; that, as Isaiah puts it, "He is despised and rejected of men, a very sorrowful man [literally "a man of sorrows"], and acquainted with grief, and like one causing men to hide their faces from Him; He is despised, and we esteem Him not" (Isa. liii. 3). Had our Blessed Lord lived in his own city, Bethlehem, or even in Judea, he would have been known and esteemed as of the lineage of David; but brought up in Nazareth, in "Galilee of the foreign nations," or "heathen Galilee," in the providence of God He came through this circumstance to be looked down upon and utterly despised as "Jesus of Nazareth," or as it should be, "Jesus the Nazarene."

Again, to deal with a case of sensitive conscience. When I was a child, I felt in those words of our Saviour's first sermon where we are told "to pluck out" our right eye and to "cut off" our right hand, if they make us offend, and so to practise self-mutilation (Matt. v. 29, 30). Still greater the difficulty seemed in ver. 39, 40, 41, where we are told to turn the left cheek to be smitten to him who smites us on the right; to give to "any man" our "coat" who rightly or wrongly sues us at law and takes away our "shirt"; to go two miles for "whomsoever" may force us with unpaid and compulsory labour to go one. Greatest of all seemed the difficulty of ver. 42, where we are to give to everyone who asks us, and not to turn away from any borrower; though, if the words are to be taken, as I thought, literally, a man often could not "provide for his own, and specially for those of his own house," and so would have "denied the faith," and be "worse than an unbeliever" (1 Tim. v. 8), to say nothing of often giving money to those whom he knew intended to apply it to wrong and even criminal purposes! In my young heart, taking these words, as I did, in their literal Western sense, and finding them in a plain and most practical discourse, I was led to reject the teaching of Christ as unreal, unpractical, and even immoral! I know now that these forms of expression are highly figurative, being nothing less than the powerful figure of hyperbole, or exaggeration, and mean no more than that we are strongly to avoid a litigious spirit where our own rights are called in question, that we are not to give way to bitter resentment in regard to personal injuries, and that we are to be very ready to lend a sympathising ear and a helping hand to the suffering and deserving poor.

Mr. Neil, having first described or illustrated the figures of simile, or comparison, and metaphor, then proceeded:—Next in order, I would call your attention to the even more powerful figure of

HYPOCATASTASIS, OR IMPLICATION.

This well-defined and exceedingly beautiful figure is often mistaken for metaphor, but there is a distinct difference. It is where the resemblance is not actually stated either with or without the words "like" or "as," but intimated or taken for granted. The Bible abounds with this strong and beautiful figure, which, it has been well said, gives "a refined delight in the reader's making the application for himself." Our Lord constantly uses it with great effect.

Take an example in his words addressed to his disciples, when, having crossed to the East shore of the Lake of Galilee, it was discovered that they had forgotten to bring bread. "Take heed, and beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees." Here the Saviour does not say that the doctrines of these men are "like leaven," for that would be a simile; or "are leaven," for that would be a metaphor; but He simply implies that their doctrines resemble leaven—the Torula, or yeast-plant—because they spread with fatal rapidity, destroy what is sweet, work only in darkness, and are in themselves bad and worthless, leaven being a foul and destructive fungus, akin to that which causes dry rot in wood, and, according to the latest medical theories, akin to those fungi which cause all the different diseases which afflict and destroy the human body. The disciples, making the mistake so constantly made in the professing Church ever since, of taking our Lord's figurative words literally, thought He spoke this because they had forgotten to bring bread. The fellahheen, or peasants in Palestine, to which class our Blessed Lord and his disciples belonged, always eat thin, pancake-like loaves of whole wheat-meal, unleavened bread. These simple men, therefore, thought, not unnaturally, that our Saviour was simply warning them against the luxuries of the rich and great, to whose houses they might be invited, when He said, "Beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees."

Or, again, observe the powerful implication in our Saviour's words to the much-tried Syrophenician woman, whose "great faith" He has called us to admire, "It is not meet to take the children's bread, and cast it to the little dogs" (puppies, kunaria, the dimunitive of kuon, "a dog"). It is a matter of surprise that this has not been so rendered in our Revised Version. "Dog," in the East, is an awful term of contempt, as I have already shown, a name for everything that is unclean and hateful. Our Blessed Lord would not have used, and I rejoice to know, did not use such a term. On the other hand, He went out of his way by this word "kunaria," or "puppies," to suggest to her just that hope which a faith like hers could lay hold of. "Dogs" are never allowed in the houses, never stroked by the master, never fed by the children, but "little dogs," or "puppies" are. When quite young, these poor despised brutes are often carried into the mud houses of the fellahheen, fondled, and fed! This the Lord Jesus Christ, as a fellahh, knew well, and He knew that the woman knew it too, and, therefore, to that humble, believing soul—thank God for it—He said "little dogs." She caught at it at once, and cried "Nai" [the Hebrew na, that is, I beseech you] Lord, but even the little dogs (kunaria) under the table eat of the children's crumbs!" (ver. 28). And He then crowned and rewarded, as He ever does, the faith He had so deeply tried.

In conclusion, Mr. Neil showed how full of deep importance a clear understanding of figurative language is in considering many of our Lord's strong doctrinal statements, five of which were taken as examples and fully explained. Lieut.-Gen. Sir Robert Phayre, at the close, in replying to a vote of thanks to himself and the lecturer, spoke of the great importance of Mr. Neil's treatment of this subject, to which his own attention had been strongly called, owing to his forty-six years residence in India.

Mr. Neil will repeat this course of lectures at Morley Halls, Y.W.C.A., 316, Regent-street, W., beginning on Monday, March 5, at 8.30.

"FLOODS."—In addition to the thousands of this little appeal, by Mr. Radcliffe, being sent out to friends and contributors of the Church Missionary Society, Mildmay, and the China Inland Mission, the Baptist Missionary Society, chiefly through the generosity of a friend, is now sending out 32,000 to be enclosed in its magazine.

CHRISTIAN LIVING.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent s Park Chapel.

IX.—CONCLUDING WORDS.

"Keep yourselves in the love of God."—JUDE 21.

THE longer we live, the less we care to speak of our love to God, and the more we dwell on God's love to us. As we climb the hill of Christian experience we see the ever-growing horizon of the ocean of divine tenderness, and we become ashamed even to mention the little pool of our love that lies far away in the vale beneath. Besides, we come to see that all true love to God in us is only a reflected gleam of his great love toward us. "We love Him because He first loved us."

There is no sweeter atmosphere in which to live than the perpetual consciousness that God loves us. Like the steady heat of the hot-house producing flowers and fruit amid the frosts of December, so in this icy world the genial glow of the love of God, experienced perennially by the believer, will produce those results which are exotics to this world, though they are native to the soil of the New Jerusalem.

When the Apostle bids us keep ourselves in the love of God, he surely does not mean that we can ever cease to be loved. The love of God is without variableness, or shadow of turning. Having loved his own which are in the world, He loves them unto the end. We may rest satisfied that nothing can separate us from the love of God which is in Jesus Christ our Lord. If we are faithless, He remaineth faithful. If we wander away into backsliding and coldness, He continues immutably the same. If we, like Peter, deny Him, yet He still looks on us with yearning affection, enough to break our hearts. Oh, clasp this blessed thought to your inner consciousness, that the love of God is more tenacious than a mother's—"she may forget"—and more lasting than hills or mountains, which "may depart."

But the love of God to us is one thing, and our appreciation and enjoyment of that love is quite another. The one is unalterably the same, while the other is fitful and intermittent. Sometimes we are very sensible of the warm beam of God's love shining blessedly into our souls; at other times we have no such joyous consciousness of his love; but we must remember that God's love to us does not in any way depend on our consciousness of it. It is not most, because we happen to feel it most; or least, because we have almost ceased to feel it at all. The one is no gauge of the amount of the other. God's love to us is ever constant, however much our appreciation of it may vary. When the sunlight beams seem to touch only a rim of the moon's surface, we do not argue that the sun is growing cold and dark. When a child wanders far afield from home and mother, we do not suppose that the love has necessarily died out in that mother's heart.

Nevertheless, though our consciousness of God's love does not determine its amount or constancy, yet it is very delightful and helpful to realise it always. Thus we become most sensitive to sin. Thus we acquire purity of heart. Thus we become strong and fearless. Thus, too, we become magnetic, attracting others to Him who has made us what we are.

This then is the question: May we not live in the hourly consciousness of the love of God toward us? Not always or exclusively dwelling on it, but continually looking up from our work, and finding that that benignant face is still smiling on us, and that that overarching heaven of love is still above and around. Not able to speak much of our love to God, but always able to speak of his love to us. Like a child, who plays about the house, without questioning for a moment, because it feels instinctively that all around it is shining the love of the mother. Is not this what Jesus meant when He said, I have kept My Father's commandments and abide in his love? Is not this what He meant, when He bade us keep his commandments and abide in his own love? And what else did Jude mean by bidding his fellow Christians to keep themselves in the love of God?

There are three or four brief hints that may be of service:—

(1) TAKE TIME TO CONSIDER GOD'S LOVE TO YOU.—God loves the world, because He loves each unit in the great sum of human life. We see the parterres of spring; to Him each flower is distinct. To us the sparrows are so similar that we cannot distinguish one from the rest, but He marks each sparrow's fall. We stand in wonder beneath the arch of the starry sky, and are bewildered by the multitudinousness of the star-dust. He calls each atom by its separate name. And so when we think of God's love to us, we must not think He loves us as part of the race, but with a special individualising love, which singles us out of the crowd, as a father loves each child with a love in which no other can share.

> Thou art as much his care, as if beside
> Nor man, nor angel lived in heaven and earth.

This belief in God's personal love is very helpful. It prevents us from feeling lost in a crowd. But it is not natural or easy at first. We must be patient, and take time to allow the thought to possess us, in its mighty grasp. We must get alone, and shut the door upon the busy world, and set ourselves to comprehend the meaning of those three small words, God loves me. We must learn that it is of the very nature of an Infinite Being to be as much in one place as though He were in no other place; and to love one lonely heart as if there were none other to share his love in all the wide universé. In the morning, before you enter on the calls of daily duty, take time—five minutes—quietly to realise that you are the object of the deep personal love of the Infinite God.

(2) ACCEPT ALL THE INCIDENTS OF THE DAY AS COMING FROM HIS LOVE.—I do not see how we can make distinctions between God's ordaining and his permissive providence, any more than we can between his special and general providence. All life, and its many incidents; what comes to us directly from his hand equally with what is permitted to happen to us through the means of others, must be traced back to Himself as the ultimate final cause. Our Lord was delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, though this did not lessen the wickedness of the hands, by which He was crucified and slain. Here is the mystery of the ages, but let not the mystery rob us of the undoubted truth, that God is behind all events.

And God is love. All events, therefore, must be consistent with his love. And we must recognise this, if we would keep ourselves in its glad and constant enjoyment. When any bright thing befalls you, when anyone says anything kind of you, when an unexpected gift falls at your feet, when a new friendship enters your life, when the sun shines brightly on your path, look up and know that all lovely and helpful things are the children of the love of God. Do not be so occupied with the gift, or the channel through which it comes, as to ignore the giver Himself.

And when unkind things are said or done; when robber bands steal your goods, as Job's; when friends disappoint you, and Shimeis curse; then look up, and be sure that all is permitted by a love that cares for you none the less tenderly when it withholds its help. "Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus: when He heard, therefore, that he was sick, He abode two days still in the same place where He was."

Thus every event that comes to you will link you, by a golden clasp, with the love of God.

(3) BE CHANNELS OF GOD'S LOVE TO OTHERS.—In the spring, the vine-root, bursting with life-power, longs for branches, through which it may pour its tides of life forth to refresh thirsty souls; and surely the love of God is ever seeking for kindred hearts, who shall be channels of communication with the world. The world, too, needs love. There is nothing which can slake its thirst, but the love of God. It will ever thirst again till it drinks of that stream.

Why should not you, my reader, be one of the channels through which God's love may pour itself out to refresh him that is weary? If you are willing, you will find yourself beginning to care for men, as never before; and there will be a new power of affection opened within you, which shall betray its Divine origin.

And what, think you, shall be the effect of this upon yourself, except to teach you the meaning of God's love to you? For the water which flows along a channel can refresh the flowerets that grow upon its banks. Those that live in love to others know the love of God to themselves; and to keep other men in our love is to keep ourselves in the love of God. Forsake wrath, jealousy, and envy, in the power of God's grace, and learn the new, glad lesson of love.

(4) ASSOCIATE WITH THOSE WHO LOVE GOD.—No one of us can know the fulness of God's love in the loneliness of our own communings. We need to associate with all saints to learn its height and depth, and length and breadth. It is a mistake to isolate ourselves from communion with Christians, or from corporate church-life; and it is my earnest advice to all young Christians, as to all secret disciples, to find some happy centre of Christian fellowship, and join it.

We see the love of God from different angles. It shines on us with different hues. And no one can fully appreciate it, and its full extent, who has not spoken with other Christians about it, and tried to catch some new beauty in their conceptions. Talk much of the love of God to those around you. Hear them, and ask them questions. So shall your hearts burn within you, and Jesus will make Himself known in some deeper, sweeter guise. Christian converse is a great help towards the abiding realisation of the love of God.

(5) LIVE IN OBEDIENCE TO EVERY KNOWN COMMAND.—"If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love." This is the secret. To search the Word to see if you are keeping all his commands; to seek and keep his laws; to put the government upon his shoulders; to do his will, at whatever cost to self-will; to obey, not to win aught from his hand, but just to please Him; to ask forgiveness and restoration if you have erred or gone astray. Here is the essential condition of walking in the light of his love.

Who has not been conscious of a sweet manifestation of love, when some difficult duty has been done for his dear sake alone? As when Jesus was baptized, the heavens were opened, and the voice of God declared Him to be his beloved Son.

Let us walk in the light, as He is in the light, so shall we be conscious not of light only, but of love.

There is no need for us to live in a cold and arctic zone, if only we fulfil the conditions here set down. We may not always be equally buoyant, or equally exuberant, or equally responsive; but we shall never lose the bright glad consciousness that we are loved by the Love that spared not the only begotten Son.

THE HISTORICAL ASPECT OF CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.—Miss Petrie delivered the first of a course of four lectures on this subject, at Steinway Hall, on February 14, before a considerable audience, chiefly composed of ladies. The lecturer sketched the extension of Christianity under the Roman Empire with much skill and clearness. She took Jerusalem, Antioch, Ephesus, Rome, Alexandria, and Constantinople, as six cities whose successive prominence in the early Church marked epochs in its history. She strikingly suggested that the first impetus to the self-assertion of the Roman See was given by the fact that the removal of the seat of empire to Constantinople left it without a rival authority, quoting Hobbes's saying that "the Papacy is the Ghost of the Roman Empire."

DR. WHYTE on THE VOICE OF GOD.

In continuing his lectures on "Grace Abounding" last week, Dr. Alexander Whyte, of Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh, selected these words from paragraph ninety-three:—"Now, about a week or a fortnight after this I was much followed by this Scripture, 'Simon, Simon; behold, Satan hath desired to have you.'" Heb. iv. 12, "The word of God is quick and powerful," was used as a parallel text.

Dr. Whyte remarked that, when Luther said Paul's words are living words, and have hands and feet, he but paraphrased that text. The words of men are living words, according to the life and power of those who speak them, and they have hands and feet, according to the hands and feet of those by whom they are used. In considering the quick and powerful word of God which came to Bunyan, they should look first at its form. It came in this form, "Simon, Simon; behold Satan hath desired to have you." Those words were first spoken in the upper room when the Master was preparing his unprepared disciples for his departure. He used his power to break Peter of his self-righteousness and self-sufficiency, and settle him on another foundation. By his solemnest words, and with his solemnest looks, He discovered things to Peter which Peter otherwise would never have known. The word "desired" was much too feeble; it was really, "hath demanded to have you." All the force of the Greek verb is needed to bring out the boldness and impudence of Satan in claiming Peter as his own.

Those words, addressed by Christ to Peter, were the words which seemed to ring and rattle in the ears of John Bunyan. A voice seemed to say, "John Bunyan, John Bunyan, thy old master Satan still desires to have thee." Although his name was not Simon, he felt that the voice meant him. This whole region of mysterious voices and visions is a region of Scripture that has never been fully explored, and, perhaps, it is too deep for mortal insight to probe. The Old and New Testaments are full of visions and voices and intimacies that make us shrink away back from them. At his baptism and again on the Mount of Transfiguration our Lord heard a voice from the excellent glory. A voice came to Saul as he was on the way to Damascus, and a voice spoke to Augustine as he sat under a tree in the garden. These voices belong to regions impossible for experimental religion to explore. There are more things in the philosophy of our experimental religion than we have yet dreamed of.

John Bunyan was as really under the personal care and protection of Jesus Christ among the hedgrows of Bedfordshire, as Peter was in the Passover room at Jerusalem; He loved the tinker of Elstow with the same love as He loved the fisherman of Bethsaida. And He got as good and fruitful service out of the author of the "Pilgrim's Progress," as out of the author of the First Epistle.

Our secular and sensuous poets sing that there are "tongues in trees, books in the running brooks, sermons in stones, and good in everything," and if they sing thus why may not the man of God? It is a measure of your spirituality whether the world is dumb or eloquent to you of the love of God. Shall the mighty God make nature speak to me, and shall I not hear it? Bunyan says that he did not understand at first why this voice came to him. Paul says there are many voices in the world and not one of them is without significance. The voice that came to the Lord at his baptism was sent to reassure the Man, Christ Jesus, to confirm his soul that he was the Messiah. The voice that came to Saul on the road to Damascus was sent to snatch him from the service of Satan, and make him a builder in that Church of which he had been a destroyer. And Bunyan found that the voice which spake to him was meant as a warning of a cloud and storm that were coming down upon him.

Have we such interviews with God through such voices as these? The stone which Jacob set up for a pillow was eloquent to him all his days, and he must have heard an echo of the love of God in every ripple of the brook of Jabbok. Have we any such stones or brooks scattered over Scotland? When you become spiritually minded the world will be full of such voices, your ears will be circumcised, and you will understand how nature and the world can become eloquent with the voice of God. A young communicant once pointed out to me the very slab in your own Princess-street where a voice from heaven arrested him, and from which he had no peace till he was hunted into the communicants' class. The word of God is still quick and powerful for such ends as these.

CANADIAN NOTES.

[FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

The question of divine healing has been attracting some little attention, articles and letters having recently appeared in The Toronto Mail. A few Christians in this city have taken up the subject, and are making the question a ground of fellowship, under the pastorate of Rev. John Salmon, late of the Baptist Church.

A note from Ottawa tells of excellent and well-attended meetings being held there by Messrs. Crossley and Hunter. Among other notables Sir John A. Macdonald, Premier of the Dominion, has been on several occasions an interested attendant.

Rev. Dr. Shaw, of Montreal, contributes to a religious weekly a very interesting paper on the desirability of greater unity among the evangelical churches. This subject has attracted a great deal of attention lately. Dr. Shaw, however, claims that organic union is not a necessity for the fuller and more perfect development of Christian effort.

The Methodist Guardian gives a long account, by Mr. Charles Teeter, missionary in the North-West, of his work in the Territories. He prefaces his letter by remarking that the Roman Catholic Church has made converts of nearly all the halfbreeds and some of the Indians, and are putting forth every effort to increase the number of their converts. The cloud on the horizon is as yet no bigger than a man's hand, but many careful students believe that the question of religious supremacy will one day call for settlement.

There are not too many Christian ministers in this land who have acquired a reputation of bravery in attacking whatever evil they see, no matter how securely entrenched in the public life of the nation, and these can ill be spared. One such was Rev. John Smith, pastor of Erskine Presbyterian Church, in Toronto, who recently died very suddenly of apoplexy. He was born in Armagh, Ireland, in 1827, and at eighteen commenced his studies for the ministry. The first twenty-five years of his ministerial life he spent at Bowmanville, Ont.; the rest with Erskine Church. He was a fearless and energetic speaker, strong in his temperance convictions, and his public and private ministry was greatly owned of God.

The "Hamilton Conference" of Believers held in Hamilton, Ontario, was very largely attended, and strangers from every part of the Dominion were there. Among those prominent in Christian work here were Messrs. Alex. Marshall, Donald Munro, Chas. W. Ross, John Grimason, and others, and the presence and blessing of the Lord were known and felt. After these meetings were over at Hamilton, they were continued at Toronto, where about twenty evangelists took part in two days all-day meetings. They were most happy and blessed "times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

THE WORD AND ITS POWER.

Rev. Henry Wace, D.D., Principal of King's College, London, delivered an address, on Friday, Feb. 3, at the College, to members of the Church of England Scripture Readers' Association. The occasion was the annual tea given by the Committee to the Readers and their wives, the party numbering over two hundred. The chair was occupied by Rev. Marcus Rainsford, clerical secretary of the Association.

Dr. Wace claimed that in taking the Bible into the houses of the poor and sick in the Metropolis, the Readers were carrying out the first principles of the Church of England. At any rate, he said, since the Reformation the distinctive mark of the English Church had been that it was a Bible-reading Church. The Reformed Churches of Europe had produced as great, or perhaps even greater, Bible students, but he believed it to be an acknowledged fact that in no country were the Scriptures so widely known and honoured as in England; and this he attributed very largely to the simple reading, without note or comment, of the Word of God from day to day and week to week in the appointed services of our National Church. At a time when all classes, both by law and custom, attended public worship to a larger extent than is unhappily now the case, the public reading of God's Word was probably sufficient; but with the enormous growth of population and the large number of those who absented themselves from Divine worship, arose the necessity of the Bible being carried to the people by such means as those adopted by the Scripture Readers' Association.

Dealing with the objections urged against the authenticity of the Scriptures, and more especially of the Gospels, he stated as a fact that most of those which several years ago were thought unanswerable have been shown to be baseless, and have been given up by the critics themselves, although still frequently paraded by their more ignorant followers. He urged the Readers to try and realise more fully for themselves, and to impress upon those whom they visit, the actuality of the persons and events recorded in the Gospels. They would agree with him in testifying to the marvellous influence produced upon the minds and hearts of all by the simple reading of the words and works of the Saviour; and how his sayings, even when not entirely understood in all their depths and fulness, brought comfort, peace, and joy to the weary and worn and sad.

Dr. Wace concluded a powerful address by referring to a case which had come under his own observation when labouring as a curate several years ago. He had been visiting a sick man, and reading portions of Scripture, when he was met by the remark, "Yes, that's all very well, but I never saw anyone trying to live up to it." He could not but sorrowfully admit to himself that there was some truth in this. The man subsequently went to a convalescent home, and returned a believer. The secret of the change was that his heart had been touched by the Christlike and self-sacrificing lives of the Christian ladies who had tended and instructed him in the home, and he had judged the tree by its fruits.

The Church of England Scripture Readers' Association is now employing over a hundred and twenty Readers in the Metropolitan portions of the dioceses of London, Rochester, and St. Albans. Their work is greatly valued by the clergy under whom they are placed, and the Committee would gladly increase the number if their funds permitted.

THE GIRLS' TRAINING HOME, AUCKLAND-HILL, WEST NORWOOD.—This Home, known as Auckland House, has completed its second year. During the twelve months, six girls have been sent to service, and, with one exception, they are doing well. There is a public laundry connected with the Home, and the profits arising therefrom help to make the institution self-supporting. Miss E. J Romanes is the lady superintendent.

SAVED IN THE KITCHEN.

AT a recent prayer-meeting held in the rooms of the Christian Colportage Association, attended by about thirty colporteurs, from different parts, many interesting testimonies were given.

One of the colporteurs related an interesting case. He called at a large house in the south of London and two of the servants came to the door. They seemed very light and frivolous, and did not care for his books at all, and he could not induce them to buy; but he said he would leave with them "a message from God," repeating to them once or twice John iii. 16, "For God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotton Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." On the occasion of his next visit to this house, he found that one of these servants, the cook, was in a state of deep anxiety about her soul. She told him that she had turned up the passage he referred to, and had read the chapter several times over, and she was very anxious to be saved. He told her the way of salvation through Jesus Christ, and she asked if he would come in and pray for her: he did so, and while he was praying this young woman was enabled, by faith, to receive the Lord Jesus Christ as her own Saviour. She was full of joy and gladness, and he told her she must now try to bring her fellow-servant to Christ, and he promised he would pray for her. About a fortnight afterwards, one Sunday afternoon, both these young women came to his house, telling the good news that the second also was now rejoicing in Christ. The cook said, "Just to think, we have been going to church all our lives, and we have been saved in the kitchen."

Another colporteur mentioned the case of a young footman, whose mistress, an earnest Christian lady, had asked the colporteur to try to influence him for good. He sought him out, and, giving him a copy of "Grace and Truth," told him what a blessing it had been to his own soul, and then spoke to him seriously and definitely about salvation. From time to time he met him on his rounds, and found that he was reading the book, and was deeply impressed by it. Meeting him one morning lately, the young man said: "It is all right now; I went down two nights ago to a meeting at the Young Men's Christian Association, and there I yielded myself to the Lord."

A third colporteur stated that a cottager in a village had told him that her daughter, who was out at service, was anxious about her soul, and she asked him to recommend a book that she might send to her. He recommended "Salvation: the Way made Plain," and they both knelt down and asked that the Lord would bless the message through the book to the young woman's soul. The following month, when passing through the same village, this woman called him and told him she had good news. Not long after she sent the book, she received a letter from her daughter, saying that the book had been a great blessing to her, and that she had now found perfect peace. "But," she added, "it was only just in time, for three days after I got my daughter's letter, I had a telegram telling me to come, as she was very ill. When I arrived I found that she was dying, but in perfect peace, resting on Jesus; and she begged me to thank you for selling me that book; it had been a great blessing to her. She said that her dying prayer would be that the book might be a blessing to many souls."

Many similar testimonies were given, showing how richly God is blessing this agency. The secretary would gladly give any information to those who wish to inquire further about the work. The address of the Association is 37, Farringdon-street, London.

THE NEGROES OF GUELPH, Ontario, seem to be well looked after by Mrs. A. Linton, of that place. A mothers' meeting has been organised among the women, and the men are by several agencies brought under influences for good.

CHRISTIANITY IN NORTH AFRICA.

PAST AND PRESENT.

IN propagating the Gospel of Christ in North Africa, we are only resuming the work begun in Apostolic days, and continued up to and beyond the days of Augustin. When the Holy Ghost came down in mighty power on the day of Pentecost, to give witness to the glorified Jesus and his finished work, and the Father's complacency in it, amongst the multitude there gathered, were those from "the parts of Lybia about Cyrene." The colony of Cyrene was the chief of a group of five cities which the Greeks held, 600 B.C., and is now represented by Tripoli and its vicinity. Libya was the common Greek name for the African territory as far as it was known to the Greeks. It was Simon the Cyrenian, the father of the well-known disciples, Alexander and Rufus, who bore the Saviour's cross to Calvary, and the fervent and zealous character of these people in causes bad and good was shown by them in disputing with Stephen. Many Jews were settled there, and not a few Christians had received the Spirit's power, and zealously engaged in spreading the Saviour's work and name, not only in Libya, but westward to Tripolitana, Numidia, and Mauritania, now comprised in Tripoli, Tunis, Algeria, and Morocco, the sphere of the present Gospel work of the Kabyle and Berber Mission, of which Mr. E. H. Glenny, of 21, Linton-road, Barking, Essex, is hon. secretary.

So widely was the truth spread that at the end of the second century the Church of North Africa was more numerous and more influential than that of Rome or Constantinople; it was always independent of Rome, and reached the culminating point of its history in 418 A.D. In the time of Augustin there were 466 dioceses, some consisting of several towns and villages, and some smaller; but later there were as many as 579 sees, and numerous councils were held, at one of which was defined the Canon of Scripture. (See "North African Church." By Julius Lloyd. S.P.C.K.)

"The Church of North Africa emerges suddenly out of darkness into broad daylight about A.D. 198, in the apology for the Christian faith which was addressed by Tertullian to the Roman governors." The labours and martyrdom of Cyprian took place in the third century. The work of Augustin in the fourth. Heathenism was dethroned, the Bishop of Carthage entered the temple of Juno Astarte, the great Punic goddess, and consecrated it to the true God, as well as Baal's temple, and how often these basiliques of Carthage then resounded with the Christian accents of Cyprian and Augustin. What horror would have seized their minds if they could have been witnesses of what took place recently on this very spot at the inauguration of Romish worship by the Cardinal Archbishop, as related by one of the priests, who states that a series of seven litanies had been prepared by Cardinal Lavigerie addressed to these North African bishops, saints, and martyrs, and he adds: "Our emotion redoubled when we saw the venerable prince of the Church go on his knees and invoke one by one all the glorious bishops, the courageous confessors, the heroic martyrs, and the holy women, whose virtue and glory he had traced, and we chanted in choir after each invocation: 'All ye saints of Africa pray for us'—a fervent prayer indeed, and well worthy to obtain the blessings of Heaven on this unfortunate country."—and thus, after all the judgments of God by the Moslem woe-trumpet, the worship of demons is still practised; and, as Gibbon says, "the throne of the Almighty is darkened by a cloud of martyrs, saints, and angels," and yet Rome repents not of the crime.

The various edicts of persecution of the Roman emperors brought untold woes, death, torture, banishment, to the faithful members of Christ's body. Sometimes the local authorities avoided carrying out to extremity these edicts, and issued, for a certain sum, written certificates that so and so had offered the prescribed worship to the gods of Rome. This was taken advantage of by some, and became naturally a cause of great offence to upright minds, who could not tolerate such hypocrisy in their fellow Christians. They acquired by this conduct the name of "traditores," and ultimately caused a schism in the Church. Donatus was strongly opposed to this proceeding, and united with the Numidian bishops in condemning it and those who sanctioned it. He insisted on purity of communion, holding that there should be a spotless Church, composed of spotless members.

Rival bishops were elected, and the Donatists became more numerous than the Catholics; many of the former were those Numidians, the fathers of the Kabyles of to-day. In 311 Constantine was appealed to, to decide between two rival bishops of Carthage, and his decision was against the Donatists, requiring that their possessions should be given up to the Orthodox. The order was resisted by them, and they retired to the Atlas Mountains, and in 348 with their wild Numidian cavalry defeated an army sent for their forcible conversion. Their uncurbed zeal and indiscipline soon led to a [illegible] of their religious principles, and, when successive wars and struggles with Roman, Vandal, and Saracen armies told upon them, Okba-ben-Nefa, and Hassan, without much difficulty, induced them to embrace the Moslem faith, and there is apparently at the present day not a trace of their former Christianity; and our work lies before us, with the help of God's Holy Spirit, to lead them back to it with other weapons than those of the sword and tribute.

Walls of adamant confront us, but the faith of the early Cyrenian missionaries, accompanied with a Pentecostal power, can lay such walls level with the ground, and lead these beloved Kabyles to pay their ancient homage to their glorious King.

Paris. GEORGE [illegible].

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE TRAINING CLASSES.—The annual tea and public meeting of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Country Mission and Evangelists' Training Classes were held last week. It was stated that Christian young men of all denominations are admitted as members; a clergyman of the Church of England has rendered good service in the cause, while a sergeant of the Salvation Army has been in the ranks for some time. During last year a total of 218,000 persons heard the Gospel through the agency of the training classes.

MR. MONTAGU WILLIAMS, at Greenwich Police Court a few days ago, gave an account of the expenditure of £600, which had been entrusted to him, as the result of his [illegible] for assistance for the relief of the unemployed and those suffering from poverty. Altogether 1650 families have been relieved; sometimes by gifts of coal, sometimes by gifts of food. Mr. Williams said that he had made himself personally acquainted with a number of the cases relieved, and he had found a combination of misery and want such as he never thought he could realise. But he had in every case seen the suffering borne with the greatest patience and fortitude.

"THE RELIGIOUS CONDITION OF SOUTH LONDON" was considered at a conference of clergy and laity at Camberwell last week. It was contended that, though there are only 3000 church-goers out of a population of 40,000, there is no reason to fear that Christian principles are failing to influence the people. The rural dean of Lambeth thought it was a great mistake to suppose that only the poor wanted spiritual attention. If wealthy citizens had to cook their own dinners, mend their own clothes, and get their children and themselves ready for morning service, he believed many of their fashionable West-end churches would be nearly empty. The Bishop of Rochester held that the chief causes of social and religious degradation are: (1) drink, (2) overcrowding, and (3) poverty. Dr. Butler, master of Trinity College, was of opinion that the present religious state of South London demands the residence among the very poor of a number of ladies and gentlemen who have the means and the inclination to relieve their present necessities and to minister to their spiritual wants.

For the Young.

A DAKOTA BLIZZARD.

On January 12 a very severe snow and wind storm passed over the Territory of Dakota, and extended to the adjoining States. In Dakota alone more than one hundred persons were frozen to death, not a few little children amongst the number. Some perished in attempting to reach home when returning from school. This storm reached De Smet, a small city situated on the Chicago and North-Western Railway, in Southern Dakota, about 2 p.m. It had been telegraphed about a quarter of an hour previous that a severe snow-storm would soon be upon us. This news was circulated as quickly as possible, and several took the precaution and did not return home on that account.

During the morning the wind had been blowing from the south-east, strong enough to raise a good deal of loose snow into the air that had been increasing since the beginning of winter. At noon the wind gradually subsided and the weather became much warmer. Our first warning of the approaching tempest was the wind gradually shifting round to the north-west, then in a few minutes it came upon us.

Soon after the blizzard made its appearance a person might have been standing in the middle of main street, and the buildings on either side would be invisible on account of the air being filled with loose snow as fine as the finest sand. Many persons in town had narrow escapes from being lost. The school bell was rung a good part of the afternoon and evening, so that if any person had missed their way they might know in which direction to steer their course, and thus avoid wandering away from town.

If, as the gloom of night spread its mantle over the broad prairies, we had been able to view the many poor wanderers who had lost their way and were battling with the terrible storm and gradually succumbing through its severity, the thermometer recording about thirty degrees below zero, and the cold being much intensified by the gale which was still raging with unabated fury, perhaps none would have attracted more of our sympathy than a father and his three children; the eldest, a son, fifteen, a little girl aged twelve, and her sister only ten. The father was a school teacher, and had taken his children with him to school in a cutter, or small sledge. The day being stormy, there was no other attendance.

As soon as the storm made its appearance he at once started for home, it being only about a mile and a half distant; but, unfortunately, he missed his house, and wandered over an unsettled portion of prairie. After going a considerable distance the horse became exhausted, on account of travelling through the deep snow, lay down, and was soon frozen to death.

All hope of reaching home before night now disappeared; so the father determined to do all in his power to save the lives of his children. He turned his cutter upside down; placing the children under, and, wrapping them up as snug as possible, buried them with snow with a shovel that he had fortunately taken with him. By shovelling snow, and moving around, he endeavoured to keep himself from freezing all through that terrible night.

When morning dawned the storm was still in its strength, but towards noon it quieted down, and a dwelling-house was discernible about a mile and a half distant. The father now partially uncovered the sledge, so that his son was able to get out, and, although his feet were badly frozen, he determined to start out at once and procure help to rescue his father and sisters. After he had walked a mile, his feet gave out, and the remaining half mile he was obliged to crawl on his hands and knees. When only a short distance from the house, he attracted the attention of one of the inmates, and was at once tenderly cared for, and assistance sent to rescue his father and sisters; they were soon safely housed, and loving hands doing all that they could to minister to their needs. The smallest girl was seemingly unharmed, but her sister was so benumbed that it took between four and five hours to restore her. The boy has been obliged to have both his feet amputated, and the father will lose several of his fingers and toes.

The family who had this great affliction brought upon them was a God-fearing family. The father has always taken an active interest in Sabbath-school work. The doctors were uncertain whether the lad would survive the amputation, he being in such an exhausted state. A minister who was present inquired if he were prepared for death. To this question he calmly responded that his trust was placed in his Saviour, and thus he felt fully prepared for the worst that might come. I have known him for many years, and he bears the character of being kind and noble-hearted, and has been the main stay of the family. God's providences are often very mysterious. H. Gregory.

The fearful blizzard developed a heroine. Miss Minnie Freeman, a young girl in her teens, was teaching in a country schoolhouse in Nebraska, right in the blizzard's track. It struck the schoolhouse about three o'clock, the first gust tearing the door from its hinges; a second unroofed the schoolhouse, leaving the frightened children exposed to the elements. To remain there was certain death; to reach the nearest house seemed equally hazardous. But the plucky teacher determined to attempt it. In her drawer was a ball of strong twine. With this she tied the children all together, three abreast, except the youngest one, whom she took in her arms. She then tied the end of the cord around her own body, and, cheering her charge with words of encouragement, started out in the storm, and brought them all safely to the farmhouse three quarters of a mile distant.

PRINCESS CHRISTIAN, as president of the newly formed British Nurses' Association, attended and spoke at a meeting a few days ago at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, held for the purpose of furthering the objects of the Association, for which it is proposed to obtain a royal charter. It will associate nurses for their mutual help and protection, and in various ways advance the work of the profession.

GREAT FORTUNES are being constantly left by deluded people to their unfortunate heirs. Many young men and young women are so handicapped with gigantic money bags that they fail utterly in the noble race. But it is useless to argue with those who curse their children with too much gold, instead of using their wealth to promote the happiness of mankind. Until their thoughts are revolutionised, until they are lifted into quite another spiritual atmosphere, they cannot even understand why Christ so emphatically prohibited the laying up of treasure upon earth. The first necessity of the hour is to shatter lazy, self-indulgent Christianity and to bring back the simplicity, the reality, and the intensity of Christ.—Methodist Times.

BEULAH.

They have come to the land of their happies
From a dark and a stormy tide; [dreams
And a light like an Indian summer beams
O'er valley and mountain side.

From an ocean that breaks on the burning coast,
And that shrieks on the shores of time,
They have sailed in the vessel that saves the lost
To this beautiful Beulah clime.

Here the fountains of evil and sorrow are dried,
And the sins of the soul are forgiven;
For the kingdom of God stretches over the tide
To this land on the border of heaven.

O land of the never-declining sun!
Of the pure and unclouded air!
With the glory of heaven upon earth begun,
Jehovah Shammah—the Lord is there!

"OLD WELCOME" RESTAURANT

Much blessing has attended another year's labour in connection with the "Old Welcome" Restaurant and Institution in Little Britain, Aldersgate-street. Mrs. Fisher writes:—

"At a meeting, lately held in a warehouse, where my first visit was the means of weekly services being convened by the principal of the establishment, through which many of the workmen, women, and boys have been converted to Christ, a young man rose, and told of my first call at the warehouse, some years back. He said that when he was told that there was a lady downstairs, who wanted to hold a meeting in the workshop, he replied, 'We do not want any meeting here.' However, he said that he went to see me, and that I gave him a flower, with a text, which quite turned the current and softened his heart, and he asked me to go up and hold the meeting; also, that he well remembered the passage of Scripture which I read on the occasion. Our visits continued, and blessed results have followed to the praise and glory of God.

"One of our members invited some from her work-room to tea in our 'Welcome,' after which Gospel addresses were given, and she had the joy of seeing several (who had formerly been her persecutors) brought to own Jesus as their Saviour and Lord. Many work-rooms are open to us that we cannot occupy for want of visitors; we greatly need more ladies who could give, at least, one hour a week to this service. This year we have had to increase our expenses by an addition to our rent of £40 per annum."

Communications for Mrs. Fisher should be addressed to the care of the hall-keeper, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

TRACT WORK IN SPAIN.—The Monthly Tract Society (Bridge House, 181, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.) have commenced printing tracts in Madrid, which they are to post to the upper classes in Spain. Mr. J. R. Mackenzie is secretary.

THE SOUTH WOODFORD Y.M.C.A. is making progress in a useful course. At the annual meeting, held last week, it was reported that there had been an increase of seventeen members during the year—all of them decided Christians. A growing spirituality and zeal in evangelical effort characterise the members generally, and these features were greatly rejoiced in.

A SERIES OF UNITED SERVICES for the deepening of the spiritual life of the members, and for the manifestation of true Christian unity, have been held in several of the Peckham and Dulwich Nonconformist churches, and have been attended with much success. The closing meeting was held at Rye-lane Baptist Chapel, Peckham, on Sunday evening week, when a united communion service, largely attended, was engaged in. A spirit of fervent and devout zeal seems generally to have been roused, and much permanent blessing is confidently anticipated.

EVANGELISATION OF THE MASSES.

On Tuesday afternoon and evening, last week, meetings of Christian workers were held at the Morley Halls, Regent-street, for prayer and conference on, "How more effectually to promote the evangelisation of the masses of the Metropolis."

Mr. T. A. Denny presided over the afternoon meeting, when prayer was offered by several brethren with special reference to the subject in hand. In the course of his remarks, the Chairman said that he believed it to be very little use to offer Gospel truths to men who are half starving. There are, he said, people numbered by thousands who live in wretchedness and despair, and are very little looked after by the churches. To care for them is hard work, and he honoured those who could do it. Christians ought to be up and doing without wasting time, and not only show energy but also exhibit ingenuity in their methods of working. Men of the world are active and ingenious. Why should not the children of light be wise in their generation? Things that appear little ought not to be despised, as it is doubtful whether anything done for the glory of God is little.

Mr. C. R. Hurditch delivered an address, in which he showed that the attendance of the masses at churches and chapels is comparatively small, and maintained that Rationalism, Ritualism, and worldliness are doing great mischief at the present time. He reviewed some of the new methods of attracting public attention to the Gospel, emphasised the importance of evangelists and others being personally fit for their work, and urged that fervent prayer should be offered for a revival of God's work in the Metropolis.

Mr. Vines held that a spirit of prayer is the one pre-requisite to a revival. Mr. J. B. Bain contended that faith in God is lacking; until workers take up a more acceptable attitude in this respect, they cannot expect to be used to the glory of God. Mr. J. Gill maintained that religious effort is burdened by selfishness and ambition; he asked workers to cultivate humility.

Mr. Robert Paton urged the importance of a proper estimate of sin, and the preaching of the justice of God. Men should hear more of the consequences of sin; evangelists also should pray God to search them. Mr. W. H. Mills (Stafford Rooms) felt convinced that the core of the question is that people have not a due fear of God. Infidelity, frivolity, and want of reverence, prevail; and he believed that the world sees through Christian workers more keenly than the workers themselves see through the masses. The things of God must be dealt with in a godly spirit, and doubtful methods ought never to be resorted to. So long as workers are unfaithful to the Word of God, a revival cannot be expected.

The deliberations were followed by more prayer. In the evening the Conference was resumed, the proceedings being preceded by prayer offered by a number of those present. Several friends delivered short addresses. Dr. Popham urged that the Gospel has still its own power, and that it should be plainly preached. Other speakers maintained that the temporal as well as the spiritual needs of people should be attended to. Mr. Newth (New Barnet) expressed himself quite prepared for increased difficulties in work as the coming of the Lord draws nigh. Mr. Oscar Owers said that the Word of God should be grasped more tenaciously. To deal with the masses, evangelists must know more of the Bible; and Christian ministers should thrust out from their congregations those men and women who are able to go forth and preach, and do other active service.

It was resolved to arrange a weekly meeting of evangelists and other workers for conference, and prayer, and the study of the Bible, to take place on Thursday afternoons, at half-past three o'clock. Other details were entrusted to a committee.

REV. ARCHIBALD G. BROWN'S WORK.

In his little book, "The Poor, and What the Word says about Them," Mr. A. G. Brown, of Stepney Tabernacle, gives a very readable account of a year's service. Each agency has its financial statement, and the figures help to show the large extent of the operations. The Mission Fund deals with £2889; the Orphan Home with £765; the Seaside Home with £469; and the Thankoffering Fund (raised entirely by the Stepney Church) with £437.

Mr. Brown's work is firstly religious, then philanthropic. He says:—"Much as we love the poor we could not toil the hours we do, had we no deeper inspiration than the alleviation of their earthly wretchedness. That this is not forgotten, a glance at our expenditure will abundantly prove. But we want our readers to clearly understand that their gifts are bestowed to a Mission, the first aim of which is to bring the poor to the Saviour. Should any object to this, the remedy is in their own hands. We would rather suffer the loss of helpers than take money which would not have been bestowed had the donors known they were giving to a distinctly evangelistic enterprise."

Springing from this object there is quite a network of agencies, of which Mr. Brown says:—"We could never have designed and drawn out in plan all we are now doing. Room-to-room visitation was the original germ, and sympathetic evolution accounts for the rest. The germ, however, still abides, and keeps on evolving fresh forms of Christian enterprise."

The three mission chapels in poor districts are each subsidiary centres of activity. The mothers' meetings are instrumental of much good. Of these Mr. Brown says:—"Connected with our mission chapels, and including the one at the Tabernacle, conducted by our dear wife, which we also aid, we have nearly one thousand mothers on our books. Think what this means in the shape of clothing alone!"

As to finance, we are glad to learn that all that has been needed has been received. There is no debt whatever on any branch of the work, and last year was closed with a balance in hand. It is a blessed fact that Mr. Brown is dispensing blessing to thousands of people in that part of London where the need for loving labour is greatest.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN had a crowded and enthusiastic audience in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, at her farewell lecture there. She has also addressed large gatherings in Halifax, Huddersfield, Rochdale, and other northern towns.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION has received £100 from sermons preached on Sunday week, by Rev. Dr. Bennett, of Chelsea. Mr. R. C. L. Bevan has also given £100 towards the purchase of Macready House, Covent Garden. This commodious Institute has been used during the last two months by 13,600 young persons engaged in theatres. Much blessing is attending the efforts amongst the young people, and Mr. and Mrs. Courthope Todd feel assured that God will carry on the work, notwithstanding the ungodly opposition to which the Mission has recently been subjected.

THE THEATRICAL CALLING is certain ruin, both mental and physical, to the bulk of the persons who embrace it; and, although there are not wanting very many examples of God-fearing, respectable, hard-working people therein, yet they are but the exceptions. The topsy-turvy manner of living which it necessitates, the highly objectionable people with whom it is not only absolutely necessary to come into contact, but to make close friends of as well, the looseness of conversation, the impertinences of managers and others with whom engagements and salaries rest, combine to hedge it round with dangers both for male and female. To permit a son to go on the stage is, in the majority of cases, to doom him to ultimate penury, and to intervening foolishness of life; but to send a daughter to the theatre for her living, no matter how easy and proper the earlier stages may seem, is in ninety per cent. or more cases, to expose her to temptations presented in such guise that it is almost impossible for her to resist them, and to prosper in her profession.—British Weekly.

EVANGELISTS FOR INDIA.

I shall be thankful for a little space to report upon the experiment which was made last year in an endeavour to supplement modern missions with a corps of evangelists, whose only duty would be to preach the Gospel to the people of India. It was proposed that these evangelists should be sent by Sunday-schools, churches, or by private individuals, at the small cost of £5 a month, for a period of five years. One such has gone forth, and I have been asked by a friend in India if fifty more can be sent, of the same stamp, as there is room for them in Central India to preach the Gospel without coming in touch with any existing work.

Here then is an opening for the full development of this Evangelistic Mission on simple Gospel lines, without interfering with the present educational system of existing missions. There are friends in India ready and willing to arrange for men on their arrival, and to see that they are properly located. We are asking the Lord of the harvest to thrust out his own labourers into his harvest.

MISSION WORK IN BERLIN.

An English lady writes concerning the work of Mr. Rohrbach in the German capital:—

The hall, which is attached to the house, seats about 250 people. Mr. Rohrbach has hired another hall for the winter (in the summer he uses a tent) at Charlottenburg, a pleasant suburb about five miles from Berlin. In this hall one week-night service is held, and on Sunday two services and a very flourishing Sunday-school. Here, in Moabit, there are four week-night services, including a children's meeting, and two on Sunday, as well as a large Sunday-school and young men and women's Bible-classes. Mr. Rohrbach also often preaches in Berlin.

An earnest little church of 100 has grown up here in Moabit. This means a good deal amongst these people, to whom, for the most part, Christianity is only a name, and who consider the religion preached here as something quite different to what they have been brought up in. They call it "the English religion," or "Prediger Rohrbach's religion."

The other day, someone to whom Mr. Rohrbach was speaking about his soul, answered him that he should not think of changing his religion, the one he had been brought up in was good enough for him, and he meant to remain in it. Poor souls! a living, loving union with Christ forms no element in their conception of Christianity; baptism, confirmation, and communion comprise the whole of it, and how are these, when they are only forms, better than the Mass? In the prayer-meetings here, as the Christian working men and women pour out their hearts to God, I often feel the truth of Eph. iv. 4—6:—At home and here "One body and one Spirit...One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all ...above all, and through all, and in you all." The oneness of the Church of Christ is a very real thing.

MR. F. N. CHARRINGTON has received a donation of £1000 towards the liquidation of the debt on his Assembly Hall. The donor does not wish his name to be made public. Another gentleman has offered to give £1000, on condition that others come forward and pay off half the debt. Mr. Charrington has also received a cheque for £100, chiefly to help him to meet the cost of providing for the late inmates of the houses in Lady Lake's Grove and Cottage Row. In a letter, the donor of the money intimates a willingness to give another sum of £100 towards the expenses that may be incurred in a repetition of Mr. Charrington's late success in the suppression of houses of ill-fame.

THE GOSPEL IN SYRIA.

DEAR SIR,—Some kind friend sends me THE CHRISTIAN through your office, and I write to thank the unknown benefactor. As your columns are open to statements of the work of evangelistic agencies, allow me to mention two which are established in Beirut.

(1) The Orphanage Zoar of the Prussian Protestant Deaconesses. This school I have been familiar with for twenty-seven years. It always affords a home and Christian instruction to 130 Syrian orphan girls, and has already trained more than 800. I was recently saddened to learn that its funds are low, and the institution is in great need of help. The support of each child costs about £8 per annum. If this should meet the eye of any desirous of aiding in the training of Syrian orphans, let them address Sister Sophie Graff, Prussian Orphan House, Beirut, Syria.

(2) Miss Taylor's Moslem Girls' School, Beirut, which has more than thirty Moslem and Druze girls as boarders, is doing a thoroughly benevolent and missionary work. I have attended its examinations for nearly twenty years, and know that it is doing a greatly needed work. It is also in need of help, which can be sent to Mr. W. Ferguson, Kinmundy, near Mintlaw, Aberdeenshire, Scotland.

I could add to this letter much of interest to British Christians with regard to the work being done here by the American Mission, the British Syrian Schools, the Church of Scotland Jewish Mission, and the schools of Dr. Carslaw, Miss Adie and Miss Proctor, in Mount Lebanon. But most of these are already well known in England, especially the British Syrian Schools, whose work in Syria for twenty-eight years has constituted an important element in the social, moral, and religious elevation of the Syrian people.

GREEK AND MOHAMMEDAN.

Two voices have recently come to us from high places in England which have a somewhat confusing effect on the Orientals. One high dignitary of the English Church proposes union with the Greek Church, with all its picture worship, Mariolatry and saint worship, its priestly absolution, transubstantiation, and confessional; while Canon Taylor lauds Mohammedanism with its polygamy, slavery, its low moral standard, and its hatred of the cross of Jesus Christ. The three Mohammedan journals of Syria, one in Damascus and two in Beirut, have translated and printed Canon Taylor's address, with remarks of exultation over such a eulogy from a Christian minister.

But whatever bishops and canons may say of the Greeks and Moslems, it is certain that the missionaries in Syria and Palestine, of all Protestant Churches, are of one mind in the view that both Greeks and Moslems need the simple Gospel of Jesus Christ. Both Islam and the Greek and Latin Churches agree in resting salvation on good works, on human merit. Both require fasts and penances, and encourage pilgrimages as a means of expiation for sin, while the Gospel holds up justification by faith as the foundation of Christianity and the sole ground of salvation.

Those Anglican clergymen who are courting the favour of the Greek Church would do well to remember that the Greek Church refuses to recognise either the baptism or ordination of the Church of England. Trine immersion at the hands of a Greek priest is essential to church membership and salvation. In this respect the Greek Church is even more exclusive than the Latin, for it recognises no baptism but its own. The Archbishop of Canterbury would not be allowed to officiate in the humblest Greek chapel, unless he would submit to be immersed three times, and then ordained by a Greek bishop or House of Bishops.

The favourable feature in the Greek Church is its allowing the people to read the Scriptures. But to acknowledge it as a sister Church, with its unscriptural teachings, can only postpone indefinitely the day of its reform. If the Anglican Church would devote itself, as its missionaries in Palestine are doing, to the education of youth, the preaching of the pure Gospel, and the distribution of the Scriptures among the Greeks, the day of the reform or evangelisation of the Greek Church would not be far distant.—Yours sincerely,

HENRY H. JESSUP.

ANOTHER HOME for the ORPHANS.

BY ANNIE MACPHERSON.

A FRIEND in Scotland has kindly presented the Home of Industry with two large farms, comprising 640 acres, in a well-settled part of Southern Manitoba.

His wish is that one of the farms should become another Distributing and Supervising Home for those we send out; the second farm he suggests should be divided among our young men in Ontario, who have acquired a thorough knowledge of the climate, who are able to work the land, and have saved sufficient money to begin stocking each their fifty or sixty acres.

Eight years ago, my brother-in-law, Mr. Merry, saw one of his sons settled there, and prospected the land for our orphans. Then it was but sparsely settled; now all is changed. Winnipeg will be our nearest centre, with its population of 22,000.

Last summer we visited Winnipeg, and made a number of Christian friends, and since then my Manitoban nephew has decided to become the manager of this new outlet; he has had an apprenticeship upon an Ontario farm, and spent his married years (he is a father) in the North-West. He writes that he believes "for our children there are great chances, with God's blessing."

We shall be glad of the help and prayers of any who befriend the emigration of the young, and would like to aid us in stocking the farm, or adding the additional accommodation required. We hope to sail with a party in July for the North-West. A party of boys sail on March 29; the girls, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Merry, on May 17.

Home of Industry, Bethnal Green-road, E.

MR. CHAMPNESS intends very shortly to send one of his most devoted and useful evangelists to India. This will be a tentative movement, but the friends of The Joyful News Mission cherish the expectation that it will prove the commencement of a new method of evangelising India.

ORTAKEUY TRAINING SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—This industrial Institution at Constantinople seems to be engaged in work mainly for the benefit of the Jewish community. Last year many difficulties had to be contended with, but progress is reported notwithstanding. The balance-sheet shows a deficit.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.—A letter to Rev. R. B. Boyer, Cambridge, superintendent of Missions to Seamen, contains one result, witnessed by a gentleman in Sunderland, whose business brings him in contact with the sailors almost daily. He says:—I see a great deal more of the sailor than most business men, and, in looking back a few years, what a wonderful change your Mission has made here. Every day, for a great many years past, from two to three hundred sailors have met here, and there used to be a lot of dry land sailors who lived out of the real sailors. Crimps, spongers, touts, boarding-house keepers of the worse class, and the usual bad women, all living by plundering the sailor. There were some sad sights, weeping wives and broken-hearted mothers, and two or three stand-up fights every day; it was a dreadful place. Now, thank God, it is like another part of the world altogether; it is so long since we had a fight, I cannot name the month when there was one. If the sailor can be kept from strong drink and bad company, he is easily led in the right way. He naturally wants more looking after when on shore than a landsman. Often living for weeks a monotonous life, there is a reaction to excitement. As soon as he lands he should be taken in hand by the chaplain, and brought to the Institute amongst good company.

MR. G. CLARKE IN INVERNESS.

BY REV. GEORGE ROBSON.

IT was feared by some that Mr. Clarke's second visit to Inverness would compare unfavourably with his first. Some thought he was coming too soon, ten months being too short a sowing-time after such a harvest; others that there would be too much disposition to look to the man, and therefore less blessing; others that it would be impossible to gather such crowds again, or to have so deep an impression repeated. All these fears were happily disappointed, and we can only praise the Lord for a work of grace wider and deeper than on his first visit.

Owing to the nature of the after-meetings we may not be able to chronicle immediately so great a number of converts, but the mission all through was felt to be telling in a more solid way, and with deeper power on the community. The audiences throughout were larger. The afternoon Bible-readings had to be transferred from the Victoria Hall to Union-street Church, and it was overcrowded, the deepening interest in the upper circles of society becoming very marked. The very first night, the Free High Church, the largest building in Inverness, was filled, and every night thereafter, during the ten days' mission, was uncomfortably crowded. On the Sabbath Mr. Clarke addressed two public meetings in the Music Hall, one exclusively composed of women, the other of men. The crowd of women overflowed the hall in the afternoon, and in the evening it was crammed with men long before the hour of meeting, and several hundreds could not get near the door.

Mr. Clarke was thought to be quieter in his manner than on the previous occasion. His Bible-readings were certainly far richer in their exposition of spiritual truth, and gave evidence of growing insight and maturity of view; and what differences might be detected in his evangelistic addresses and work were in the direction of greater trust in the simple presentation of the truth and in the hidden operation of the Holy Ghost. The mission has had the happiest results in the way of breaking down prejudices against evangelistic work, and there is no doubt that if Mr. Clarke should, after an interval, again visit Inverness, he will receive a cordial welcome from many prominent men who have hitherto declined to be associated in any way with such work.

The mission has also been rich in touching incidents. One correspondent writes giving thanks for the conversion of four sisters. At one of the after-meetings a man with whom Mr. Clarke had had a long dealing the previous evening was encountered by him on the landing of the pulpit stairs. Still the old difficulties about "feeling" and "trying" were preventing him from trusting. Mr. Clarke asked him what was holding him up seven feet from the ground; it was the platform; feeling and trying had nothing to do with it, he was simply trusting the platform by standing on it. It was beautiful to mark the light breaking on the man's face as there, in front of the large after-meeting, he exclaimed, "I see it!" and entered into rest in believing on the Saviour.

A young school-girl, telling of blessing received, added softly, with tears in her eyes, and a heaving breast, "And we've begun to show our colours." Then came the story of how she and a few like-minded companions were being laughed at by the other girls, but were resolving to help each other by forming a Bible circle. Many such incidents might be added, but space forbids. On Sabbath evening, after Mr. Clarke had left, a thanksgiving service was held in the Music Hall, which was crowded, and several ministers and laymen took part in the meeting.

NOTES FROM THE NORTH.

FREE CHURCH ZENANA WORK.

AMONG the many annual meetings held in Glasgow last week that of the Free Church Ladies' Society for Female Education in India and Africa furnished the most interesting addresses. As chairman, Colonel Young referred to the prosperity of the Society as a vindication of woman's competence in the Christian vineyard. He argued that Christians would take a deeper interest in missionary work if they knew the names and stations of their missionaries. Rev. D. Whitton, who labours in Nagpore, declares that the common opinion with respect to women in India still is that they are incurably bad. The missionaries have induced the Hindoos to make the experiment of educating their women, but the Hindoo mind needs many impulses. He pleaded for a continuance of Zenana work, on the ground that it, and it alone, would prepare the way for a general movement towards Christianity in India. Rev. W. M. Alexander, of Bombay, while speaking hopefully of the work, said that the Parsees in Bombay send a spy to all religious meetings.

SCOTLAND'S BIBLE SOCIETY.

There was a good attendance at the annual meeting of this society, and the president, Sir William Muir, had ample ground for rejoicing over the past year's work. Dr. Marcus Dods made a speech which seemed to give mingled pleasure and pain. At the outset he showed that the severe Biblical criticism of the past fifty years has left the authenticity of the New Testament unimpaired; but he went on to say that even ministers did not know what to make of the Old Testament. Looks of astonishment appeared on the faces of many of his hearers when he announced his disbelief in verbal inspiration.

DUNDEE Y.W.C.A.

For the past ten years this Association has been carrying on an excellent work. Last year was the most successful year of its history. The membership has grown to 320, and its organisation is of a most comprehensive character. The premises now in use have become too small, and efforts are being made to provide enlarged accommodation. There is no town in the United Kingdom where the work which the Y.W.C.A. seeks to do is more needed than in Dundee.

EVANGELISTIC.

At the Glasgow noon-day prayer-meeting last week among the many requests for thanksgiving was one for the blessings which have attended Mr. J. M. Scroggie's labours in various districts of the city. Rev. D. Lowe, of London-road Free Church, where Mr. Scroggie was conducting a mission last week, bore testimony to the spirit of revival and anticipation existing in his congregation. Mr. Scroggie's labours have been owned to the conversion of many. A gracious work has been going on in connection with Dr. Andrew Bonar's Church at Finniston, Glasgow. Last summer three members of the church agreed that during one month they would spend one hour each day in praying for a revival. Prayer has been answered; a wave of unobtrusive blessing has arisen in the church.

At the Carrubber's-close Mission Hall, Edinburgh, last week, Mr. F. H. Revell, of Chicago and New York, delivered a pointed address, and expressed his great pleasure in visiting the Mission, whose foundation-stone he saw laid by his brother-in-law, Mr. Moody. Mr. Henry Lakin, Mr. Richard Weaver, and Mr. W. D. Dunn also addressed the meeting, at the close of which many were found asking their way to the Saviour.

The Grassmarket Mission, Edinburgh, is straitened for want of room. Mr. Fairbairn says that if larger premises cannot be secured, the Mission will have to be abandoned.

In two of the remote parishes of the Island of Lewis, revival movements, unparalleled since 1860, are taking place. The great bulk of the people are in an intensely interesting spiritual condition, among whom the West Coast Mission is prosecuting a comparatively unknown but greatly needed Gospel work.

Last week Mr. Hill closed a very successful mission in the East Free Church, Arbroath.

On Sunday evening Mr. George Clarke delivered an address to men only in the Carrubbers'-close Mission Hall, Edinburgh.

IN MEMORY OF A MARTYR.

Last Friday was the two hundredth anniversary of the martyrdom of James Renwick, the last of the Covenanters to yield up his life in witnessing for Christ. To commemorate the bi-centenary of his death several meetings took place on Friday, and special services for the same purpose were held on Sunday.

MR. SPURGEON'S COLLEGE.

AT a recent meeting of the London Committee of the Pastors' College Conference, it was decided by a large majority to address a circular to all the pastors composing the Conference, requesting their vote on the question of a doctrinal basis, prior to the assembling of the Conference in April next. In a letter to The Christian World, justifying his withdrawal from the Conference, Rev. J. C. Thompson, of Brondesbury, gave a detailed account of what took place at this meeting. Some of his statements are challenged, as will be seen from the appended manifesto, also addressed to the members of the College Conference, and a copy of which has been sent to us for publication:—

"DEAR BROTHER,—Amid the discord of conflicting counsellors and much criticism, we feel it to be our solemn duty to bear our testimony to the noble, unselfish, and Christian attitude of our honoured President, in the matter of the resolutions passed at the recent Conference Committee meeting, and especially to repudiate the statements of Mr. Thompson, by which we regret to find so many brethren have been misled.

"Mr. Thompson was never more respected by the members of the Conference Committee than when he, with choking emotion, and what seemed to be manly tears on his cheek, declared that he differed altogether from the original basis of Conference fellowship, and that he must therefore withdraw. For Mr. Thompson's sake, we could wish he had there let the matter drop.

"He says that the resolutions were forced upon the meeting; that 'Mr. Spurgeon would have no amendment of any kind'; and that 'many did not vote either way.' We declare each of those statements to be utterly without foundation.

"Mr. Spurgeon with the tenderness of a mother appealed again and again to the brethren to exercise their individual liberty in the matter, and to feel themselves absolutely free, and the only one thing he claimed of them was that he might be allowed peaceably and with brotherly love to exercise the same freedom for himself. He pleaded for the sake of the old love and friendship of the years gone by, that the separation, since it must come, might be without ill-feeling and strife. He felt we had come to 'the parting of the ways,' and, like Abraham and Lot, we must divide. He repeated most kindly and with the utmost affection his willingness to withdraw from the Conference, and leave the brethren free to act as they pleased; but we are sure you will feel that such a course would not have been fair to the faithful man in whom there has been no change, nor to the brethren who, not only in London, but in the country, are in hearty sympathy with him.

"Respecting the amendments Mr. Thompson admits that they were all 'withdrawn'; but he leads you to a false conclusion. He says, 'Mr. Spurgeon would have no amendment'; whereas each amendment proposed was freely and fully discussed, and was for the most part met by verbal alterations in the original resolutions.

"Concerning the numbers who refrained from voting, we can only express the hope that the very great excitement under which Mr. Thompson was labouring prevented his seeing very clearly what actually took place, and hence his mistake. We think you will form your own conclusion as to the liberty enjoyed in the discussion when we inform you that nearly two hours and a half were spent in their consideration; that no set speech occupying any considerable time was delivered; and that in each case the vote was not taken until the meeting demanded it.

"Then as to the basis. Mr. Spurgeon is charged with introducing 'a new basis.' We submit that no new basis has been suggested. Some of us are accused of being docile followers of Mr. Spurgeon, but we follow no man. We find Mr. Spurgeon to-day exactly where we found him when we entered the College. Fixed on the rock of immutable and eternal truth, we find him unmoved and immoveable. He has not, as far as we are aware, swerved one hair's breadth in his teaching, and to that extent, we do not follow him, but, earnestly and loyally for the truth's sake, we take our stand by him.

"Mr. Spurgeon again and again, as clearly and as kindly as possible. declared that by 'the doctrines of grace' he did not mean to imply that we should all see eye to eye on every point; but, that, in a general sense, we should hold and maintain the vital doctrines of the Gospel as they were understood by us when we entered the College, and as we were supposed to have understood them when we became members of the Conference. The basis remains then what it was.

"If any justification were needed for Mr. Spurgeon's action, surely we have it in Mr. Thompson's letter to The Christian World. Speaking of the 'Doctrines of Grace,' as taught by Mr. Spurgeon, he says: 'I am not ashamed to say I never held them, nor could I credit any devil with conceiving them.' We will not inquire under what 'pretences' then he managed to get into the College; what his character must have been all the time he was receiving the daily benefits of that Institution, and leading Mr. Spurgeon to suppose that he was his sympathetic pupil, nor whether now his views harmonise with those of the London Baptist Association, in one of whose chapels he is the minister; but I think we may fairly and seriously ask our brethren everywhere whether any man has a right to feel aggrieved if our President declines to be in fellowship with one who openly declares the teaching at the Tabernacle to be more than diabolical?

"Many of our brethren have, we know, been misled by the letter referred to, and we feel bound by the love we have for you, and the esteem in which we hold the man who, through evil and through good report, has ever remained unflinchingly loyal to our Lord, to ask you prayerfully and seriously to reflect before you allow yourself to be influenced by these inexplicable misrepresentations. To talk of 'fetters' and 'thraldom' is solemnly absurd. The thought of legislating for the Conference never entered the minds of the President nor of the Committee. The resolution simply asks the Conference in the fairest way possible, by plebiscite, to legislate for itself. The sole object of the resolution was to resubmit the original basis of Conference membership to each member, and to ask his vote, 'Yes' or 'No.'

"Trusting, dear brother, that you will be divinely guided in this, and with every assurance of love and esteem, we are, for Christ's sake, yours in the faith once for all delivered to the saints,

(Signed)
A. G. BROWN, C. SAWDAY,
W. H. BURTON, FRANK H. WHITE,
W. CUFF, W. WILLIAMS, and others."

Mr. Thompson has addressed further letters to several of our contemporaries on the subject of his withdrawal from the Conference. In The British Weekly he says, "The rigid imposition of a basis including the dogmas of Calvin, made it impossible for me to remain." In The Christian World he says that the basis contains three specific points; viz., (1) The doctrines of grace; (2) Believers' baptism; (3) Earnest endeavours to win souls to Christ. "With regard to two of these none of us have any difficulty; nor should we have any with regard to the first, if we did not know the construction which the President of the College insists we shall put upon the phrase." "The doctrines of grace," he says, include the Augustinian and Calvinistic doctrines of election and reprobation. In support of the statement Mr. Thompson quotes from Hodge's "Outlines of Theology," and Coles's "God's Sovereignty," both text-books in use at the College; he also cites passages from Mr. Spurgeon's own sermons in The Park-street Pulpit and The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit.

The result of the scrutiny of the voting by members of the Pastors' College Association is that an overwhelming majority of the ministers residing in the United Kingdom have agreed to the London Committee's explanation of the basis on which the Conference was formed.

THE DOWN-ER GRADE.

THERE is a lower depth. Perhaps the Down Grade in doctrine leads the way to the Down-er Grade in practice; though, truth to tell, the churches referred to in the following pitiful narrative are of nearly all denominations, and of both Down-Grade and Up-Grade tendency.

Last Saturday night I accompanied Mr. Charrington through a district occupying perhaps a quarter of a mile square, comprising several streets of houses which my companion by his own determined and fearless action had cleared of their vicious inhabitants. His method is not to proceed against the tenants, but the landlords and house agents, under the Criminal Law Amendment Act.

But the most shocking feature of the case is that in nearly every street the churches, by the direct complicity of some of their members, or by inexcusable ignorance and neglect, are aiders and abettors of this iniquity. These are the facts:—

(1) Action was first taken against a notorious house next door to a chapel and Sunday-school. Keeper fined £20. A regular attendant at another chapel; used to go every Sunday morning with his books under his arm punctually at 10.45.

(2) A member of a mission-hall owned five houses; a regular attendant at church owned four. Others owned by racing men, receiving £4 a week for houses worth 7s. 6d. For goodwill of one house £120 was paid, though only weekly tenancy. Think what that means.

(3) Street used to be lighted up at night in every window. The agent for six houses, an old man, superintendent of Sunday-school and deacon of chapel, wanted to know what earthly reason for disturbing them—well conducted, clean, sanitary; was told the law of the land (to appeal to no higher motive) awarded three months for so letting, and unless cleared within a week law would be put in motion. Cleared accordingly. Members of same chapel were owners of three more; excused themselves by deacon's example.

(4) Same deacon agent for a whole row in another place, owned by a female member of a chapel. She complained bitterly at being obliged to get rid of her tenants. Agent's partner member of an influential church further east.

(5) This street has a chapel at one end, a mission hall at the other, a church nearly opposite, and a little Zion close by. Half street cleared.

(6) At the head of this street stands a chapel; the houses on both sides are still occupied, and, figuratively speaking, the blast furnaces are at white heat.

Please read between the lines of this bald statement, and fill up the outlines of the sketch, remembering that the same thing exists, more or less, in every square mile of London.

Unconverted people complain that houses in their locality are let for these nefarious purposes to the deadly peril of their children; while Sunday-schools with hundreds of children are the hunting grounds of harpies, and the churches connected with them make no sign.

Let prayer be made that God will raise up in every church at least one brave man to do the work which Mr. Charrington is doing singlehanded in the East.

R. C. MORGAN.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Mr. Mark Knowles, Barrister-at-law.

Rev. F. B. Meyer will begin on Sunday evening next, at Regent's-park Chapel, a series of discourses on the Life of Abraham, which will appear in these columns, weekly, revised by himself.

We direct the attention of clergymen, ministers, evangelists, Christian workers, and all who are interested in the progress of the Gospel, to the noon-meeting at 186, Aldersgate-street, on Monday, when reports of the previous day are given. Many a preacher who has a dull time in his study would be exhilarated and refreshed by coming into touch with the life of God manifested at this meeting.

We have received a few complaints, and many earnest expressions of thanks, for the publication of Mr. Dyer's letters, especially the last. It has been sent to the Queen, the Prince of Wales, the other Princes, the Cabinet, and every Member of Parliament. God grant that the voice of Christian protest, which is beginning to be heard, may gather volume and intensity, until the legalised iniquity referred to is banished from every dependency of the British Empire.

We have received contradictory communications respecting the article on "Mob Rule in Lausanne," published in our issue of Feb. 3. On the one hand, a correspondent, who does not wish his name to appear, says that the Juge de Paix-Informateur informs [or warns] the proprietress of the café where the disturbances took place that he has pronounced against twenty-two persons an order to appear before the Tribunal of Police of Lausanne, in consequence of her complaints in regard to the public scandals in her coffee-house on Jan. 15, 16, and 18. The day on which these twenty-two persons are to appear has not been fixed—so that no one has been tried or punished as yet.

Another correspondent trusts that we will "do what we can to clear our Swiss brethren from such misrepresentation as is contained in the latter part of the article." Our original correspondent, on the other hand, says that "the 'free' churches in this part of Switzerland are exceedingly narrow, and need expanding. About forty-five years ago they expanded, and broke from the National Church, and were treated by press, by pulpit, and by the mob, exactly as, in their turn, they are now helping to treat the Salvation Army."

None of these correspondents wish their names to be given. Those who write on behalf of the Salvation Army are not connected with it. They, as well as those on the other side, are Christians of unimpeachable integrity, and active and long-tried workers in the cause of Christ. They take very different views, and we must await the issue of events to be able to form a full judgment.

In a recent issue we reported that the Evangelical Alliance in America had circulated a letter suggesting that in each city, town, and neighbourhood, committees of Christian pastors and laymen should be formed to study the social problems of their special localities, and also the needs of particular individuals. A respected correspondent writes to us on the matter:—

> Why should not a similar plan be adopted in our own country? Why should not a Christian Union of members of all denominations be formed for evangelistic and philanthropic work, with a central council in London and local councils or committees throughout Great Britain and Ireland? Would this not be the means of putting into practical form the desire for union which, during the last few years especially, we have heard so often expressed from the platform, pulpit, pew, and press?
> Perhaps at present (even if it were best) the time is not ripe for uniformity of modes of worship. But would not a working union, such as I have roughly sketched, be a long step towards the realisation of our Lord's desire and prayer, that all his disciples might be one, that the world might know that the Father had sent Him?
> As your columns constantly testify, there are hundreds, probably thousands, of rich gentlemen who are proud to call themselves, and be, Christ's servants, and thousands of other equally devoted men and women, who have not been entrusted with the stewardship of material wealth, who are ready to devote their time and talents for God, but who want organising on a non-sectarian basis.

In a note last week on the partiality and imperfection of creeds, we stated that the basis of the Evangelical Alliance excludes, by its articles on the ordinances and ministry, the Friends and the Plymouth Brethren. We are informed that this statement is erroneous; as a fact, there are many Quakers and Brethren on the roll of the Alliance, as well as a representative man of each body serving on the Council.

A correspondent writes:—On Sunday week, in his sermon in Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham, Dr. Dale announced a somewhat remarkable discovery, and made an equally remarkable confession. His discourse was about the diversity and distribution of gifts for service in the Christian Church as set forth by Paul in 1 Cor. xii. Touching upon the truth that the Holy Spirit of God alone distributes these gifts, and qualifies for their right exercise, the preacher said:—

> I tried to find a hymn to be sung at the close of the sermon which should recognise frankly and completely our dependence upon the Spirit of God for the faculty for service, and which should recognise the power the Holy Ghost confers upon Christian people, but I could not find it, either in our own Congregational Hymn-book or in another to which I turned. There is just a hint of this great truth in one or two of the older hymns of a few centuries ago, but only a hint; and hardly a trace of it in hymns of more modern composition.

The confession which Dr. Dale made was a personal one, and, if I had not heard him make it himself, I should have been slow to give it credence with respect to a pastor of such gifts and experience:—

> I have preached on different parts of this chapter a great many times; but, to my shame, I must acknowledge that, to the best of my belief, I have never asked you to pray that you might have these "greater gifts." I have reminded you of the different gifts that God's Spirit bestows, and of the duty resting on all Christian men to do some work, and render some service in the Church. But I very much doubt whether I have ever pressed upon you this as one of the duties that you have to discharge —to desire and to pray earnestly for the greater gifts of which the Apostle here speaks.

In a previous part of the sermon Dr. Dale had admitted that his congregation was chiefly composed of professing Christian men and women, and in view of this, his confession seemed all the more strange. If any number of his ministerial brethren have followed his example in this important respect, it would not be difficult to account for a "Downgrade" in theology. When pastors and people are intently set on the possession of spiritual gifts, and are busy in the God-directed exercise of them, they will find little time and less inclination to entertain theories on such speculations as future probation and conditional immortality. Is it not too often the case that we take refuge in vain philosophisings and theorisings about that which has not been revealed, in order to excuse ourselves for the neglect of plain and present duty?

The author of a brochure, "Converts to Rome," which created some sensation a while ago by giving the names, &c., of perverts, writes to a Roman Catholic newspaper to the effect that his small work "is far from being complete. Some twenty Anglican clergymen have been received since the last edition was issued, and the names of many influential people have been kept back by request."

Not only are Romish practices being followed to an alarming extent in the Church of England; Romish doctrines are also being promulgated in full blaze of day. We have had brought under our notice a recent "Quarterly Intercession Paper," and other documents of the "Guild of All Souls." The prime object of this Guild is to promote the offering of "intercessory prayer," (1) for the dying, and (2) for "the repose of the souls of deceased members, and all the faithful departed." Members must be connected with the English Church, or with churches in open communion with her; they pay a subscription, and undertake, among other things, the recitation on a fixed day, once a week, of collects for "the dying and faithful departed." The "Quarterly Intercession Paper" contains "the names of departed members, and of the relatives and friends of members for whom the prayers of the Guild are desired." In scores of churches these prayers are periodically offered by "advocate-priests" at "Holy Sacrifice." To what end? The fact is not disguised: the end is the emancipation of souls from Purgatory into the bliss of Paradise! Romish words, Romish doctrines, Romish practices! Can nothing be done to rid Protestant pulpits of Romish preachers?

Political patronage, whereby prestige and power are being restored to the Pope, is bearing bitter fruit against Protestantism in Roman Catholic countries. A correspondent, whose lot is cast in Spain, writes:—

> The action of Protestant England has caused great surprise and grief amongst Spanish Protestants, and has naturally weakened their hands in their protest, by words and deeds, against what they (and the noble confessors of the sixteenth century) consider to be the radical cause of the degradation and woes of their splendid country.

The hands of the Jesuits have been considerably strengthened by recent events. Prince Bismarck's policy has had an invigorating effect upon the Papal organisers, and in Spain especially the screw is being steadily applied. This leads a Spanish Protestant to exclaim, in a letter written a few days ago:—

> Would that the Protestant countries would claim for their brethren in Roman Catholic countries the liberty which in their own they extend to Roman Catholics! Instead of this, however, they have aided to increase the persecutions and sufferings of the poor Spanish Protestants, to whom work is denied, and who are driven out of their houses.

The "aid" referred to has taken the form of political patronage. Rome receives this with voracity, and proceeds without delay to increase her arrogant demands. Clearly toleration is not yet understood in Spain. Only on Monday week the newspapers reported that two Protestants had been condemned to fines and imprisonment for refusing to kneel and bare their heads in the streets of Madrid while a Romish priest was passing with the viaticum, which he was taking to a dying parishioner. An article of the Constitution guaranteeing liberty of conscience was pleaded, but altogether in vain.

The economic effects of the saloon is the subject of a symposium in this month's Chautauquan; several of the most thoughtful men in the United States, including Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston, Bishop Merrill, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Dr. Seelye, President of Amhurst College, discuss the question from various standpoints. Mr. H. W. Mabie, associate editor of The Christian Union says:—

> It is clear that no revenue in any form can in the slightest degree compensate society for the wholesale breeding of criminals and paupers, the destruction of family life and social morality, the wide-spread political corruption, and the demoralisation of whole communities, which are the direct outcome of the liquor traffic as now carried on. From every point of view economically, the liquor traffic is a public nuisance and danger.

May we express the hope that these words of Captain Swann, of the Mission-ship Good News, Lake Tanganyika, will be read, considered, and acted upon by every Missionary Committee and Board of Management:—

> I have buried no fewer than four of my companions, and I am sure that the greater part of their sufferings might have been alleviated, if I had only a little knowledge of medicine—not to speak of the possibility of saving their lives. You can scarcely imagine what it was to stand over one comrade after another, and see them sinking day by day, and yet be utterly unable to relieve them. A little knowledge of medicine would have enabled me to do much in the way of checking these diseases, for they were, in all these cases, only common diseases.

We are glad to know that Captain Swann is now attending medical classes at Edinburgh before returning to his labours in Africa. But what is to be said of this waste of valuable lives?

The recent opening of a new church at Kuttenberg, Bohemia, was an event of great interest, not only to Protestants in the land of Huss, but also to many Christians in Great Britain and other lands. More than twenty years have passed since Dr. Moody Stuart, after a visit to the country, said that he would strive before he died to see a church erected near those silver mines into which so many thousands of the confessors of the truth had been thrown in ancient times. There were many difficulties and hindrances, but these were gradually overcome, and the building has now been opened for the preaching of the blessed Gospel. It bears in front the symbol of the cup, and under it the words, in golden letters, "In memory of the martyrs of Kutná Hora."

Mr. White Mortimer, British Vice-Consul at Los Angelos, California, has been condemning Mrs. Margaret E. Parker's scheme, under which needy gentlewomen are assisted in emigrating to California. In a letter recently published he declared that a number of Mrs. Parker's emigrants had called upon him for assistance, which he had "felt compelled to extend to them, to save them from starvation." In a letter to us on this subject Mrs. Parker says:—

> I feel quite sure that there is a mistake in Mr. Mortimer's statement that some of my protégées have applied to him for assistance. His letter is dated Jan. 11; at that time only nine of my women had arrived. All of them were engaged the first day. The Liverpool Mercury contains a letter from Miss Jones, of Liverpool, in which she says, "We are all comfortably settled, and have met with such whole-hearted kindness from all parties concerned, that no one whom you may send need have the slightest fear or hesitation about coming here."
> On the same date, Jan. 11, another party went out. Two of them were desired by their friends to cable a single word. One cabled the word "splendid," the other "delighted." I hope shortly to hear of their welfare by letter. The Woman's Missionary Society, of Riverside, have sent me word, through their president, Mrs. T. O. Johnson, that they will take charge of my temperance women on arrival, and provide a free home for them to rest in till they are placed, and that there are fifty homes waiting for each one I have sent.

A correspondent refers us to an address by Professor Drummond, in which he is reported to have said:—

> Returning from a tour over half the earth, during which he had seen many of the wonderful things God is doing, he still felt there was nothing better worth the doing than the work of conversion. He believed that a man could be born again when he is old, because he had seen it. There was a good deal of spurious evangelistic work, but he was convinced a great residuum of good remained. Although he had not changed his views concerning the work of conversion, he had changed his views as to the way that kind of work could be done. He used to think that the pulpit was the great factor therein, but he did not think so any longer. Last winter he fitted up a penny gaff in Edinburgh for the purpose of reaching the lowest classes of the people. At the meetings held there they had the best speaking that Edinburgh could furnish, professors from the University, and the ablest of students taking part. These men delivered earnest and evangelical addresses, and yet no good was done. The reason was because they had no workers. Men and women were not to be taken in or influenced except by personal dealings with them. Even Mr. Moody, he found, during his visit to the evangelist three months ago, rarely preaches now.

What the Professor says as to personal dealing is as important as it is true. But the last sentence, as reported, conveys a false impression by the omission of two words—"at Northfield." What the Professor said was that Mr. Moody rarely preaches in his own town, but that by living a kindly, Christian life, he has won the hearts of all the people of his native place.

Erroneous teaching in pulpits makes the duty of officers in the churches at once difficult and imperative. However eloquent a preacher may be, the Christian men who have been called to fill responsible positions are required to guard against violation of trust deeds. There is one door of entrance opened for lost men into a state of salvation, through "the word of the truth of the Gospel." There may come times, therefore, when at all costs good men in churches will be summoned to protect congregations from having that door closed.

The case of Rev. Joseph Halsey, minister of Anerley Congregational Church, is one in point. He had been remonstrated with for preaching doctrines contrary to the spirit of the trust deed, and resigned his pastorate. Recently, a meeting of members was held to consider the matter. On the one hand it was contended that the pastor was required to preach according to the doctrines set forth in the schedule of the trust deed; on the other hand it was maintained that the pastor could not be dismissed for ceasing to preach the doctrines specified. In response to numerously signed memorials, Mr. Halsey agreed to withdraw his resignation. It was shown, however, that Mr. Halsey had suppressed vital evangelical truths: "Christ had," it was said, "been lost sight of as our Mediator and Advocate, and in his place Mr. Halsey had brought in Darwin, Huxley, and evolution." After much discussion, it was decided by a large majority that Mr. Halsey's withdrawal of his resignation should be upheld. If a pastor and church are to ride rough shod over the clearly expressed provisions of a trust deed, we fail to see what practical purpose such a deed can serve. Surely this is a matter that requires impartial adjudication.

No word is more suitable for bewildered young Christians than that which our Lord addressed to Peter after his resurrection. Amid theological controversies, strife of words, polemical agitations, and external discussions, the direction of the Saviour may be the monition that would guard from the temptation of being shaken in mind, "What is that to thee? follow thou Me." In following Him light will arise in the darkness.

A painful abuse of territorial privilege is reported from the village of Abberley, near Southport. It seems that the squire of the place has no good opinion of the Wesleyan Methodists, who for some time have had a little chapel there. Of late this chapel has been closed, but efforts have been made to re-open it. The squire, however, is determined to do his best to prevent Methodism from taking root in his domain, so he has threatened to turn out of their homes those who have received and entertained an evangelist who has recently been appointed to the village. This is a discreditable, as well as ignorant display of zeal, and it is hoped that the gentle but powerful pressure of public disapproval will bring the intolerant squire to his senses.

Among those who flock to our cities in search of employment are many young countrywomen, who, ignorant of the snares of town-life, are liable to become the victims of designing scoundrels. A lonely girl, bewildered on arriving at the huge busy station, or finding perhaps that the train by which she was to continue her journey has left, may easily fall into evil hands. It has been calculated, says The Bristol Times and Mirror, that an average of fifteen respectable women requiring shelter from these dangers arrive at Bristol station every week. A temporary refuge, whither railway servants might direct such travellers, was therefore opened in that city a few years ago, and an appeal is now being made in order to provide a more convenient and suitable refuge close to the station and tramway terminus. Bristol has set an example of quiet and thoughtful philanthropy which other large towns would do well to imitate.

In a recent letter to The Times, Mr. Francis Peek, philanthropist, and author of "Social Wreckage," calls attention to the sufferings of the poor needlewomen who work under the sweating system. He points out that any increase in the wages paid is "practically impossible," and that situated as these helpless women are, with little education, and without either capital or organisation, some such intermediate agency as the middleman is a necessity; but the women are obliged to pay an extravagant price for their plant (e.g., half-a-crown a week for a sewing-machine, for which ninepence would be a fair charge), and they have to pay twice as much for their thread, buttons, &c., as would be the case under a better system.

As a remedy for this state of things Mr. Peek writes that it is proposed to start a limited company for the purpose of taking over an established business, which, as soon as the workers are sufficiently instructed, will be turned into a co-operative society, in which each shall hold a small share. This scheme, which will be carried out on strict business principles, has been carefully matured after two years' experiments in the East-end, and, besides at once finding remunerative employment for five hundred women, will, if finally successful, "effect a thorough revolution in this terrible sweating system." Mr. Peek's name is a sufficient guarantee that this is no crude or impracticable project and we wish it every success Those who are willing to help may obtain further particulars from Mr. A. H. Ernest Champness, 76, Colman-street, E.C.

Archdeacon Blakeney, vicar of Sheffield, has done a sensible thing, in testing for himself the nature of the relief work (that of breaking stones) given to a number of unemployed artisans in that town. The attitude of these unfortunate men towards the Archdeacon shows how a little kindly, practical sympathy goes a long way in enabling the poor to face the discomforts of their lot.

The Church of England may well pray to be saved from some of its professed friends. The Church Times of Friday last makes a most unchristian and ungenerous attack on Mr. E. J. Mather, director of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, because he is more solicitous of seeing these hardy sons of the sea, for whom he has dared and done so much, led to a saving knowledge of Christ than into the ranks of any particular Church organisation. Mr. Mather is himself a conscientious adherent of the Established Church, and so are many of his warm supporters and helpers in this work; but he has been careful to establish it upon a thoroughly unsectarian basis. As it is maintained by the contributions of Christians of every name, he could not well do less. Our High Church contemporary has the effrontery to advise all "Churchmen" to boycott the Mission unless it becomes an appanage of the Church of England. We trust no right-minded "Churchman" will follow this advice; and also that the Christian community at large will show its sympathy with Mr. Mather under this unprovoked attack, by an increased support of a truly noble effort.

The Bishop of Llandaff has refused to institute a clergyman ignorant of Welsh to a parish in which one hundred of the people are unable to speak in any but the Welsh tongue, and an action has been taken against him in consequence, to compel him to make the appointment. The Bishop, however, has stated that, if beaten in one court, he will take the case to another, and, if beaten there, he will resign his bishopric. This consideration for the spiritual interests of the people in his diocese is to be heartily commended. What a different picture does it suggest to that given in the striking old volume, "Jones on the Causes of Dissent in Wales," of days not very long ago, when such a thought as that of requiring a clergyman to be able to speak in the language of his flock, never would have entered into the head of a bishop.

That gambling in stocks and shares is on the increase was made abundantly clear a few days ago during the hearing of a case in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice:—

> Mr. Baron Huddlestone declared that the vice of gambling in stocks and shares, which appeared to be largely on the increase in London, was one offering facilities to everyone, not only to go on the Stock Exchange, or employ persons to go there to deal, but to go to one of these gambling shops, which are now open in every part of the Metropolis affording the opportunity to everyone of engaging in this pernicious species of gambling; a vice far more pernicious than such as is carried on upon the gaming table or at a horse race, for in these, at all events, a person can only play for ready money, and when his purse is exhausted he must stop, whereas in these places gambling in its most pernicious form goes on upon credit.
> Mr. Justice Manisty concurred, remarking that while such gambling was permitted, the notion of putting down gambling in certain other cases was a complete farce.

Last week reference was made in these columns to the law of France respecting marriages of Frenchmen with English girls. In a circular on the subject, Miss Ada M. Leigh asks:—

> Why should not marriages between British subjects and foreigners in Great Britain be celebrated at the French Embassy, or in the presence of the French Consul? This is the law when any British subject marries abroad.

In a letter to us, Miss Leigh says:—

> England cannot afford to let this matter rest where it now is. We shall gladly welcome the help of Members of Parliament, and those friends who can devote their time to giving effect to the provisions made by the French Government, before a marriage can be legally solemnised between French and English subjects.

The circular referred to contains important information on the subject; it may be obtained of Messrs. J. Collins & Co., 76, King-street, Manchester.

THE SWISS TEMPERANCE APOSTLE, M. Rochat, is carrying on a vigorous crusade against intemperance in Paris, with some success.

ST. BERNARD.—The telephone has been set up at the Hospice, communicating with the Swiss and the Italian sides. It is probable that many lives may be saved by this means.

BALE FOREIGN MISSIONS.—At a meeting held January 25, it was decided that the Inspector, M. Th. Oehler, and M. G. Preiswerk should visit the missionary stations in India and China, starting in September and returning in June, 1889.—Le Journal Réligieux.

THE CHRISTIAN UNION, of Paris, says the Eglise Libre, desires to erect a large building in the capital that shall be a centre for French Protestantism. Whilst various religious societies may have their offices there, it is proposed that the edifice should be used by, and in charge of, the Y.M.C.A. A million francs will be required.

PASTOR STOCKER.—The meeting of the friends of the Berlin City Mission, over which Prince William presided a few weeks back, continues to call forth bitter articles in some Government and Romanist newspapers. Hatred to Evangelical Christianity seems to be the source of the opposition, which is manifested also by some Jews in influential positions.—Le Journal Réligieux.

NEW ZEALAND.—The Bill for introducing the Bible in schools has been defeated in the New Zealand Parliament by fifty to thirty-two votes. In last Parliament the Bill was supported by only eighteen, so that the movement is advancing, and its friends are well satisfied with the latest vote.——The Baptist Church of New Zealand is initiating a movement in favour of a mission to the Maoris. The Salvation Army are preparing to open fire, and the United Methodist Free Church Missionary committee in England is, at the instance of Mr. W. Bowron, of New Zealand, discussing a similar project.

THE RATCLIFF WELCOME HOME.

VISIT OF THE QUEEN OF SWEDEN.

The deep interest shown by Her Majesty the Queen of Sweden and Norway in Miss Child's work was again proved on Friday, last week, by a visit, accompanied by Prince Oscar of Sweden, ladies and gentlemen from the Swedish Court, and Lord Radstock. The royal party stayed over an hour. The Fo'c's'le was crowded with sailors. Lord Radstock led the meeting, and showed, in a very striking way, how God saves and keeps all who put their trust in Him. When the meeting was thrown open for prayer and testimony, some of the sailors poured out their hearts before God, whilst others testified to the change which the Lord had wrought in them.

At the close of the first part of the meeting, the Queen retired with the Prince and Miss Child to a sitting-room, where Her Majesty expressed her great pleasure at being able to again visit the Home, and wrote her name as referee in the "Christian Life Boat Crew" book. Prince Oscar also expressed his interest in the Home, and referred with pleasure to his previous visit the day after his arrival in London. An interesting coincidence took place on that occasion; His Royal Highness met a sailor who was with him in the same ship seven years ago.

MEETINGS for UNITED TESTIMONY.

Responding to the urgent request of numerous Christians of various evangelical denominations, the Evangelical Alliance have been actively engaged in preparing an elaborate plan far holding a series of meetings for faithful testimony to the cardinal truths of the Gospel. The meetings will be for testimony, not for controversy. They will be held at several centres in the Metropolis—viz., at Exeter Hall, on March 14, which is the opening; Kensington Town Hall on the 16th; Mildmay Conference Hall on the 20th; and the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road on the 21st and 22nd. There will be morning, afternoon, and evening meetings (excepting at the Great Assembly Hall, where no morning gathering is to be held). The afternoons are reserved for special prayer, save the 22nd, when at least three addresses will be delivered, as at all the morning and evening meetings, by selected speakers, about thirty in number.

These include the Revs. Canon Girdlestone (Oxford), C. H. Spurgeon, Canon Fleming, Dr. Angus (Regent's Park), Dr. Bruce (Congregational), H. W. Webb-Peploe, Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Canon Taylor, P. Colborn (Congregational, Birmingham), E. E. Jenkins (Wesleyan), Dr. MacEwan (Presbyterian), F. B. Meyer (Regent's Park Chapel), H. C. G. Moule (Cambridge), and many others. The subjects chosen are: (1) Scripture, (2) Sin, (3) Salvation, (4) The Holy Ghost, the Author and Sustainer of Spiritual Life—to which main topics there are several sub-divisions assigned to the various speakers. Similar gatherings to these in London are contemplated in provincial centres.

THE LATE REV. A. LAMB.—In the sketch of this earnest Christian worker which appeared in our last issue, reference was made to a fund which is being raised to make provision for his widow and family. We are desired to say that Mr. Theodore Walker, of Leicester, will gladly receive contributions towards this object, or they may be sent to our care.

DR. THAIN DAVIDSON'S monthly sermons to young men, in the Presbyterian Church, Colebrook-row, continue to attract large congregations. On the second Sunday in the present month the text of discourse was Job xvii. 9. The secret of a successful life was shown to lie in piety, perseverance, and probity—a gracious soul, a forceful will, and a blameless life. The sermon is fully reported in The Islington Gazette of February 15.

Letters to the Editor.

THE GOVERNMENT v. GOD IN INDIA.

Sir,—Without in any way wishing to weaken Mr. A. Dyer's efforts for the repeal of licences to prostitutes in India, I must, in justice to myself and others, call attention to the following paragraph of his letter in your last issue. He states:—"The officers commanding regiments say they have no alternative. In arranging such a provision they only obey orders. Like certain soldiers of old, with a perverted obedience, they crucify the Lord, and sit down and watch Him there, under the awful illusion that they can shift their responsibility to another (Matt. xxvii. 35, 36). But there is no authority higher than God."

Now, I have never been a commanding officer in Bengal, but I have in the Madras Presidency, for six months in 1887, and took some little trouble to see if I was responsible in any way for what my conscience could not approve. I found I had about as much power over these women of the station as I had over the hackney carriages, and was consulted in no way in the licences of either. Up to a certain period bazaars were in the hands of commanding officers I believe, but they are now under the civil authorities.

There were in the bazaars, I believe, licensed brothels, but they were not licensed for any regiment, and I had nothing to do with either the brothels or the bazaar itself, nor did they come under my power in any way. I was not consulted or asked, and had about as much right to interfere as I should, for instance, with the interior rules of the civil police.

As regards Bengal or Bombay I can say nothing, I do not know the present regulations; let others speak who do: but I wish to clear the character of Christian military officers in the South of India.

Yours faithfully,
W. J. Robertson, Royal Horse Artillery.
Woolwich, Feb. 17.

THE "DOWN-GRADE" AND ITS CAUSE.

Sir,—Writing to a beloved brother in Christ, an aged Congregational minister, and, having the present false teaching in my mind, I remarked on the fearful minority the Christian world is in. His reply, I think, is worthy of a place in your pages, as expressing the opinion of one who clings to the commission received from the Master—"Teach and observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you" (Matt. xxviii. 20). He said:—

"Very true, the 'Christian world' (if there is such an anomaly) is in a fearful minority—hardly less so than it was at the close of the Apostolic age! But the Church which is not of the world, and which alone is the Body and Bride of Christ, is, I fear, an equally small minority, when compared with those who, while in and of the world, are called by that worthy name, and this after more than eighteen centuries of professedly Christian teaching.

"This may well raise the question whether the teaching has been, or is, Christian and Apostolic? Are there not great omissions and most unwarrantable adulterations? Is the standpoint of Christian teaching exclusively within the inspired Word? Is it not more frequently the echo of man's opinions, human creeds, and party interests? 'What is the chaff to the wheat, saith the Lord?' The commission is, 'Teach and observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you.'

"This and this only is Christian teaching. Even Apostles could not go beyond this. Under the Spirit's teaching they have left us a clear statement of these commands, which human expositions have mystified into almost inextricable confusion. The message to all, outside the body of believers, is very clear and concise. God's love—the Saviour's work—the call to repent and believe the Gospel—the promise of acceptance, and the threatenings in case of refusal. Hence the Word is addressed mainly to believers. See the reason and object of this: 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17; no other equipment will fit any man for Christian work, Christian conflict, and for all the service of the Christian life. Reliance on any other equipment must involve failure.

"Have we not here the key to the state of things around us? What does the Church generally know and teach about this equipment, beyond a few elementary truths, and often these imperfectly? What about the Headship of Christ? What about his Body? our completeness in Him? What about our oneness in nature, peace, acceptance, place, destiny with Him? What about our co-heirship with Him, our heavenly citizenship and calling, with all its great possessions and glorious hopes, &c. These belong to the class of truths on which Apostles dwelt, which separates from the world, builds up Christian character, and equips for that which is really Christian work.

"Teignmouth." "John Averill.

There are many questions here. May the Lord give spiritual understanding to teachers to grasp them and expound them.—Yours faithfully,

Sidcup, February 14. R. H. M. Jackman.

OBITUARY.

MRS. WEITBRECHT.

After an illness of two years, the last twenty months of which were passed in severe suffering, this well-known missionary fell asleep in Jesus. The end was very quiet and peaceful; after her long, busy life of toil she has entered into the joy of her Lord, whom she served with deep love and devotion. Mrs. Weitbrecht was for many years in India, but returned after her husband's death in 1852. She has since taken part in home mission work in London (Mildmay and elsewhere), but her chief attention has always been directed to the development of the Zenana Mission in India. Ten years ago she again returned to India for a year and a half (being then in her seventieth year) in the interests of this work, and till within twenty months of her death, all her energies were devoted to its furtherance.

Mission Appeals.

Dock Labourers' Mission (32, Chamber-street, London Docks, E.).—In seeking to alleviate the poverty around us during the past few months we have exceeded our income, and the year has left us with a debt of £69. Will your readers kindly assist us in the discharge of the burden?—C. H. Coleman.

Food and Fuel for the Poor.—Our large voluntary Committee is now in the very midst of its winter relief-work in East London. The severe weather renders the need of help doubly pressing. Will your readers send help? Every gift, great or small, will be promptly acknowledged by (Rev.) J. W. Atkinson, 308, Old Ford-road, E.

Bournemouth Y.W.C.A.—The sum of £1000 is needed at once to furnish and enter the new Institute; and, as Bournemouth is a place to which young women come from all parts, it is hoped that many friends will gladly help. Contributions will be thankfully acknowledged by the hon. secretary and local president, Miss Wingfield Digby, 13, Westover-villas, Bournemouth.

Old Montague-street Mission-hall.—This hall, which is so well known to East London Jews and their Christian friends, is in such a dilapidated condition that it cannot possibly be used much longer. It is proposed to rebuild it, at a cost of £700, and an earnest appeal is being made for the necessary funds. The treasurer is Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

SAILORS' REST, NAPLES.—Every branch of the work here is in healthy operation: Sunday visits among the ships, Gospel services in the Rest, weekly entertainments to the seamen, and hospital visitation. Her Majesty's Consul at Naples heartily supports the Institution, which stands in need of increased accommodation. Newspapers are received with much pleasure. They should be addressed, Mr. Stephen Burrowes, 36, Flavia Goija, Naples.

Y.W.C.A. COLONIAL WORK.—The Council of the Colonial and Missionary Division of the Young Women's Christian Association are anxious to extend its work in all the colonies. Having received assurances of welcome from them, the Council are thankful to have found a tried and valued worker, who is willing to visit Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand with this object. Miss Faulkner (a Mildmay deaconess) sailed February 9, in the P. & O. steamer Carthage for Adelaide. Prayer is earnestly desired for her and for her work.

PRESBYTERIANS AND CREEDS.—Some time ago Professor Candlish induced the Free Church Presbytery of Glasgow to meet in private Conference on the subject of clerical subscription of the Confession of Faith. His object was to procure, if possible, some relaxation of the rigid laws of the church on that matter. The Conference has been held, but without practical result. At the monthly meeting of Presbytery this week Dr. Candlish intimated that the proceedings had not encouraged him to go on, either with a motion or an overture to the General Assembly. There was, he said, "too much timidity in the minds of many people on this matter, and a tendency to subordinate principle to expediency."—The Times.

THE EAST LONDON POOR.

The Salvation Army has made a new departure in East London—a departure having promise of much usefulness, and, it is hoped, destined to be greatly blessed. On Saturday last premises were opened at Limehouse wherein the hungry are to be supplied with food, and the homeless are to find shelter at what may certainly be called nominal rates of payment. At the same time efforts are to be made to bring Christian influence to bear upon the people making use of the institution.

This good work has been inaugurated most auspiciously. Quite a large number of people found their way to the large premises, 21, West India Dock-road, on Saturday afternoon, in response to General Booth's invitation; the place was "viewed" upstairs and downstairs, and the arrangements were declared to be excellently adapted to the purpose in hand. There is accommodation for ninety men, provided on a plan whereby cleanliness may be very easily ensured. The building is large enough to admit of the present accommodation being considerably increased, and, doubtless, in a short time there will be two hundred occupants every night. Soup is to be sold—to children for a farthing; to adults for a halfpenny. For a penny, an adult will be able to buy soup and bread; coffee, cocoa, and tea will be supplied at similarly low rates. Occupants of the Shelter will be entitled to soup at night and soup or porridge in the morning, and threepence will cover all. Salvation officers will conduct services night and morning, and by direct personal dealing seek to point the hungry and homeless to the Saviour.

Mr. T. A. Denny presided at the "view" on Saturday. He declared himself hopeful of the project; and said he trusted the Homes would be the model of many more in different parts of the country.

In the course of some remarks explanatory of the project, General Booth said that he had for some years been turning the matter over in his mind. In the event of the scheme succeeding, an attempt might be made, in a similar way, to befriend poor women, and also to get hold of street arabs. Bible-women, city missionaries, and other workers will have tickets of admission distributed among them, and persons who wish poor people to have the benefit of the Shelter or its supplies may buy bundles of tickets and give them away. But in no case will Salvation Army officers have tickets to give away. The Home will be altogether separate from the religious work of the Army, so that no one shall "get converted" in the hope of receiving a free ticket to the Shelter.

Commissioner Railton having made a few remarks, expressing delight that the Army is stooping down as low, if not lower, than ever, Mr. Harry Grattan Guinness spoke favourably of the scheme, saying that he was sure there would soon be other such institutions.

About £700 has been expended in adapting and furnishing the premises. Subscriptions amounting to £468 were received before Saturday's meeting, at the close of which several additional sums were promised. On all hands it was held that the new effort is of an exceptionally interesting and promising character.

BOURNEMOUTH Y.W.C.A.—Mrs. W. E. Legg, of Hampstead, has just concluded a ten days' mission here, taking Bible-readings on "The Christian Life" every afternoon, and evangelistic services every evening. The meetings, after the first few days, were held in the Beckford buildings, a large block just purchased at a very heavy cost for an Institute for the Y.W.C.A. The Bishop of Winchester has promised to open this new Institute (which will, it is hoped, supply seventy beds) in Easter week.

Y.M.C.A., FINSBURY PARK.

TWO REMARKABLE FACTS.

The anniversary of this branch of the Y.M.C.A. was held on Friday evening, in the Finsbury-park Hall. A reception was given by Mr. and Mrs. George Williams, and the young men and their friends came in good numbers. Mr. Williams presided, and after the secretary, Mr. Henson, had given an excellent account of work done, the treasurer, Mr. J. L. Aukland, made a statement worthy the attention of all Y.M.C. and other associations. A year ago the expenditure was £1400, and the ordinary income not more than half that sum. The committee feared that the outlay could not be greatly diminished without seriously crippling the work; nevertheless, as they could not spend what they had not got, the financial committee met definitely to consider how the inevitable reduction could be made. The result was retrenchment all round, and the reduction of the expenditure from £1400 to £700. The blessing which maketh rich has rested on the determination to live within the income, and the branch is more prosperous and useful in every way than ever. Its chief purpose is to win young men for Christ, and to have them for evangelistic work. Their mental improvement and physical recreation and development are also provided for. But a debt of £1480 remains, and the treasurer offered £110 if others would help to raise the amount within the year. Similar sums were promised by the president and by Mr. Porter, one of the originators of this branch, and Mr. George Williams added fifty guineas. It is hoped that by the end of the year it may be free of debt.

A very remarkable incident was mentioned by Mr. Holme, to whom the branch largely owes its prosperity. A young man, Mr. Roberts Horsfield, while passing the hall, was invited by one of the young men to enter. He did so, and ultimately became a Christian. His spiritual regeneration led also to a quickening and concentration of mental power, and this young man has invented an instrument likely to prove of untold benefit to the brave men who work in our coal-mines. It has long been desired to find some method of getting coal from the seam without blasting, a process always dangerous, and often fatal. Mr. Roberts Horsfield has invented, and, with the assistance of Mr. Porter, has patented, a small machine by which the coal can be brought down in convenient quantities, and without danger. It is in use in several collieries, and some of the men, and more of their wives, wept for joy that one of the collier's greatest perils is thus removed.

BOARD SCHOOL CHILDREN'S FREE DINNER FUND.—From this fund the destitute children attending thirty Board Schools are provided with free dinners. The work is organised so that, with few exceptions, only the children of poor widows and sick parents are reached; much good has been accomplished through the kindness thus shown. Reports will gladly be sent by the hon. treasurer, Mr. H. E. Allen, 44, Marlborough-hill, St. John's Wood, N.W.

ALGIERS.—Mr. C. L. Powell and Mr. Camatte hold services four evenings each week in a hall which they have succeeded in renting. Generally a goodly number of people assemble, and it is hoped that much blessing will attend the efforts put forth. The expense incurred is about £20 a month. In January a sum of £15 was received from the Church of the Strangers, New York, and thereby the work had a good start. Mr. Powell's address is 2, Rue de la Révolution, Algiers.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.—The all-night rescue work among the homeless has been continued this season with increasing usefulness in the mission hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Each night about one hundred and eighty destitute men are admitted, many being turned away for want of accommodation. Relief has been liberally distributed to the poor, and, after bodily assistance, the Gospel is always presented with earnestness, and in simplicity, as the one thingneedful.

OPENING of a MISSIONARY HOME.

An interesting meeting was held on Friday last at 8, York-terrace, Regent's Park, to inaugurate the opening of a new House under the auspices of the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society (Zenana Bible and Medical Mission). Sir William Muir, Principal of the Edinburgh University, presided. Mr. W. T. Paton explained that it involved no extra expense to the Society, the cost being undertaken by a few friends who feel strongly the importance of such a House.

Its objects are: (1) To receive the medical students of the Society, who must reside in London for at least four years; (2) to receive and train any candidates for Zenana work whom the committee consider to require training; (3) to receive and welcome their missionaries on their return from India.

Six bedrooms are still unfurnished, and it is hoped that the expense of furnishing will be undertaken by different ladies, one then present having contributed £20 to the fund. It is also hoped that this House will become a nucleus of interest for the Society, as it is proposed there to hold working parties, prayer and missionary meetings, sales of work, &c.

Lord Kinnaird spoke earnestly on the importance of uniting in associations for Christian work, and thought that, while we avoided the errors into which the Roman Catholic Church has fallen in her conventual establishments, we might learn from her the value of organisation.

Earnest prayer was offered for a blessing on this effort, as well as for the medical and Zenana missionaries of the Society. Prayer was also asked for the missioners now visiting India, and for Miss Bromley, who went out with the Church missionary party, and is holding meetings for ladies, and visiting all our missionary stations.

Mrs. Silmore, an honoured member of the Committee (through who generosity mainly this Missionary Home has been opened), will make it her residence, and she hopes that many young ladies will seek admission. We are sure they will find her a warm and sympathising friend. She will be glad to give further information in person or by letter. The office of the Society is at 2, Adelphi-terrace, W.C. Rev. A. H. Lash is the secretary.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission now being held at St. Stephen's Church, Battersea, by Rev. John H. Haslam, that many may be converted, and many built up in faith and godliness.——For blessing on a special mission at Priestgate, Peterborough, from Feb. 26 to March 4, to be conducted by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes.——For blessing on special services, to be held in Corn Exchange, Huntingdon, from Feb. 26 to March 4. Mr. Charles Inglis will conduct the meetings from Feb. 27 to March 2.——For special services by Mr. William Forbes, at Weybridge, commencing on Sunday, March 4.——For blessing on a series of evangelistic meetings to be conducted in Avoch, Ross-shire, from Feb. 19 to March 4.——For much blessing on a series of evangelistic services in the Free Church Hall, Campsie, by Glasgow, beginning on Feb. 27.——For blessing on a mission now being conducted by Mr. John McAuliffe, at Tachbrook, Leamington.——For much blessing upon a fortnight's special services, in the Mission Hall, Tadcaster, commencing on Saturday, Feb. 25, to be conducted by Mrs. Leng, of Middlesbro'.——For much blessing at Biarritz, France, that God in all things may be glorified, and many may be added unto his Church.——For blessing on the means used for the recovery of the Crown Prince of Germany.——For much blessing upon a series of special services at Tarbet, commencing on Feb. 28, to be conducted by Mr. James Walter, evangelist, of Leith.——Before returning from Hungary, Dr. Somerville is anxious to visit M. Rabinowitz. It has been found difficult, however, to obtain the services of an interpreter to accompany him, and prayer is asked that this obstacle may be removed.——For blessing on a United Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. mission at Ealing, by Mr. John Wood (Evangelisation Society), from Feb. 26.

UNION TABERNACLE, S W.

THE second anniversary of this Mission was held on the 13th inst., Mr. Robert Paton presiding. After tea, addresses were given by Dr. Dunbar, Mr. W. R. Lane, who has also been holding evangelistic meetings at the Tabernacle, Mr. G. E. Morgan, M.A., Mr. D. M. Cameron (pastor and superintendent), and others.

God has greatly blessed the work in this densely populated neighbourhood since the Tabernacle was opened in 1886. The building accommodates about 800 persons, and is situated in the midst of the artisan class, engaged on the numerous railways, gas works, and other factories which abound in the neighbourhood. The interest that the men have taken in the work, and the conversions to God which have taken place, amply testify to its value. An interesting fact is that some of the converts now occupy positions in the foreign mission field. The expenses of the evangelistic work are largely met by the contributions of the men themselves. The tabernacle itself has been paid for entirely, but on the freehold land on which it stands there remains a mortgage of £1000.

A sale of work will be held on May 15, 16, and 17. Contributions of work, such as ladies' and children's underclothing, aprons, pinafores, frocks, or any other useful or fancy article, will be most thankfully received by Mr. Cameron, addressed to Union Tabernacle, 515, Wandsworth-road, S.W., or by Mr. John Peaston, 422, Wandsworth-road, S.W.

Y.M.C.A. CONFERENCE AT STOCKHOLM.—The eleventh triennial meeting of the Y.M.C.A. will be held in Stockholm on Aug. 15 to 19. A large party of delegates and friends is being made up in America with a view to attending this Conference.

MISSIONARY BREAKFAST.—More than three hundred members of the University of Oxford, together with many of the parochial clergy and Nonconformist ministers of the district, accepted Canon Christopher's invitation to breakfast a few days ago, for the purpose of hearing an address from Rev. F. E. Wigram, hon. sec. of the Church Missionary Society, who has recently visited the missions in India, Ceylon, China, Japan, and North-West America. The address showed that if mission work is arduous, it is also attended by many evidences of God's blessing. At the annual public meeting of Oxford supporters of the Society, it was stated that the auxiliary raised £692 last year.

Y.M.C.A., NEW YORK.—The ninth annual Conference of the New York Y.M.C.A. was held on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday last week at Brooklyn. The following were among the topics to be considered:—Difficulties in the work in small towns. Our duty to the young men in our State in towns where no Associations exist. How far is physical work practicable in towns of ten thousand and under? How may we increase an intelligent interest in our work on the part of business men? What mistakes did you make in your early experience as general secretary? Success and failures in boys' work. The lessons they teach. Sample methods of preparing to teach a Bible-class lesson. Each topic was opened by a paper, limited to ten minutes, and followed by conversation. One hour at each meeting was devoted to miscellaneous conversation on such topics as secretaries desire.

SOUTH LONDON.—The annual meeting of the Sunday-schools in connection with Christ Church perpetuation of Surrey Chapel, was recently held under the presidency of the pastor, Rev. Newman Hall. Rev. Burman Cassin, rector of St. George's, spoke of the importance of Christian workers recognising and not overlapping one another. His rule always was to restrain his helpers from ground already occupied. He worked on true church lines, which were those of the catholic church of all believers. The report stated that in the Southwark Sunday-school Society, founded by Rowland Hill, having its head-quarters at Christ Church, there were now fourteen schools, with 400 teachers and more than 4800 scholars. The teaching is unsectarian. On week evenings there are evangelistic and temperance meetings, concerts, penny banks, sewing classes, &c. The New Year offerings at the close of the meeting amounted to £181.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken will conduct a mission in Carnforth and Warton, Lancashire, Feb. 26 to March 9. Prayer is requested for blessing on these services, and thanksgiving for the great blessing given in St. Martin's, Birmingham.

Gaelic Services for Highlanders in London were held on the two past Sundays in Whitfield Presbyterian Church, Drury-lane. The preacher, Rev. D. F. Mackenzie, of Campbeltown, Argyle, drew large audiences. The services were seasons of special refreshing and blessing.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh is conducting a three weeks' mission in the United Presbyterian Church, Govanhill, Glasgow. The nightly services have awakened keen and wide-spread interest, and each has been accompanied by manifest tokens of the Divine Presence and blessing.

Turriff, N.B.—Mr. C. G. Roger, Scottish Y.M.C.A. evangelist, conducted a fortnight of special evangelistic services here under the auspices of the local Y.M.C.A. The attendance was good from first to last. Not a few professed faith in Jesus, and believers were much quickened.

Mr. William R. Lane has just concluded a six days' Gospel mission in Barclay-road Hall, Waltham Green, S.W. The numbers attending were not extraordinary, but the blessing received, by saved and unsaved, was most marked. Over twenty persons gave their names as professing conversion.

Mr. G. Weller, of the Evangelisation Society, concluded, on Sunday last, a successful three weeks' mission at Leicester. The services were held at Carley-street Chapel (Rev. J. C. Forth, pastor), which is situated in a very poor part of the town. Considerable interest was awakened, and between forty and fifty professed decision for Christ.

Donald Ross, the veteran Scotch evangelist, the fellow-labourer and bosom friend of the late Duncan Mathieson, now resides in Chicago, and though on the "sunny side" of sixty, he is active and energetic in the work of the Lord. He has pioneered in Gospel work in various States, and during eight months of the past year he has, with a fellow-labourer, Mr. James Goodfellow, evangelised "under canvas" in San Francisco, Oakland, Santa Cruz, and other towns of the "Golden State."

Mr. Samuel Mackenzie has concluded a successful series of meetings at Letham, Dunnichen, near Forfar. A large audience assembled in the Free Church Hall night after night to hear the Gospel. Many were deeply impressed, and a considerable number professed to find peace in believing. There have been some interesting cases of decison among young men and women. The mission was arranged for a fortnight, but so great was the interest manifested that the meetings were continued for another week with a increasing attendance and much blessing.

Rotherfield.—In spite of many difficulties, the Lord has given us great encouragement, in the conversion of some and the up-building of others. Miss Logan, through whose liberality and personal efforts, ably aided by her friend, Miss Beard, a light has for several years past been kept burning in this dark spot, has a high place in the affections of the people. Through her kindness we have been enabled to give relief to many unemployed during the winter. By this means many have been brought under the power and influence of the Gospel.

Ferndale Cottage, Rotherfield. W. MAPSTONE.

The Evangelistic Week in Belfast has come to a close. It was continued in one or two of the churches, and the Central Presbyterian Association throughout the past week had evangelistic meetings in the Assembly's Hall. We have seen and heard enough about these special meetings to lead us to the undoubted conclusion that the Presbytery took the right course when it organised them, and ought to feel satisfied that they have been held. The Gospel has been published afresh all over the town—published by many different voices, and viewed in many different aspects. Multitudes have heard it, and have enjoyed it—and who can doubt that many have profited by it? The results are with the Most High. It would be a good thing if the meetings, now that they are over, were followed up by continued earnest efforts to reach with Church ordinances the great outlying masses of our population. An annual effort is far from being enough. The work is great and arduous, and needs constant and earnest toil. There is a great field in this town, and it has the first claim on us.—Belfast Witness.

Mr. Richard Weaver has been for some weeks evangelising in Scotland. He has, during the past week, been having good meetings at Hawick, where a number of persons have professed to find peace through the blood of the Lamb. He will be at Hawick until Sunday next, and will then go to the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, for three weeks.

Plymouth.—Much blessing has attended evangelistic services held on board the Herald of Mercy, one of Mr. Henry Cook's mission ships, lying at Plymouth for a short season. At times over two hundred fishermen have assembled on board, and some have publicly stated that they have derived great blessing. One evening, a fisherman, who had been noted as a profligate among his shipmates was so moved that he gave himself to Christ, and left the Bethel ship rejoicing.

Mr. Spencer Walton held a mission here in connection with the Y.M.C.A., lasting from Saturday until Thursday, which has been abundantly owned of God. One feature of the mission was the large number of men gathered together on Sunday afternoon, many remaining for conversation. The Bible-readings proved seasons of refreshment to all. Mr. Walton conducted a successful mission here twelve months ago, and it is satisfactory to note the work abides.

Ramsgate. JENKIN C. HAYNES, Hon. Sec.

Captain Grundy, of the Church Army, has begun a work for Christ in North Camp, Farnborough, and Cove. A number of people have take the temperance pledge. The meetings have been a decided success, especially at Cove, where many persons who have not been in the habit of attending any place of worship, have been brought under the sound of the Gospel, and received blessing. It is proposed to give a free tea to the poor of the district. JOHN POATE.

Sherbourne-road, Farnborough, Hants.

Rev. W. Haslam's forthcoming engagements: March 4, St. Ann's, Lancaster; March 18, St. Mark's, Preston.

MR. DENHAM SMITH, after some comparative respite, is again suffering from a return of the more serious symptoms of his illness, and these are accompanied by much prostration.

EMIGRATION.—In connection with this branch of the Manchester Y.M.C.A. work, the second party for this year of young men going, with the consent of their friends, to learn farming, sailed from Liverpool last week, per ss. Sarmatian, for Winnipeg, Manitoba. The party includes young men from Manchester, Nottingham, Leicester, Holmfirth, York, Lymm, and the Isle of Man.

PRIZE COMPETITION for Motto Card Designs. First, £5; Second, £1 10s.; Third, 5s. The committee of the Y.W.C.A. offer the above prizes to the public for original designs. An exhibition will be held at their head offices if 100 acceptances are sent in before March 10. For particulars send a stamped and directed envelope to Mr. G. L. Dashwood, Hon. Sec., 316, Regent-street, London, W.

THE PALMER-PLACE MISSION.—It is now rather more than four years since this unsectarian Mission was started at Holloway. During last year all the agencies were worked with encouraging results. The Bible-class Aid Society, having for its object the temporary relief of the deserving poor, has been the means of much good. Mr. E. W. Jones, 27, Park-street, N., is the superintendent and treasurer of the Mission.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE has been addressing enthusiastic Blue Ribbon meetings at Bristol, Cheltenham, and other places in the West of England. Wherever he has gone he has been well received by temperance workers, and his addresses have been highly appreciated by large audiences. He insisted that the success of the temperance movement cannot be measured by numbers, but by influence. The time is coming when men will have to be weighed as well as counted.

THE EVOLUTION CRAZE.—This was the subject of an able lecture at Exeter Hall last Friday evening, by Mr. H. G. Picton. He showed very conclusively that evolution, as an explanation either of the origin of life or of the diversity of species, is a pure hypothesis for which there has not yet been forthcoming a fragment of conclusive proof. The citations from such "scientists" as Mr. Darwin, Profs. Huxley, Tyndall, and Hæckel, not only revealed the hopeless contradictions of these speculative thinkers, but went in many cases to sustain the position of the lecturer.

The Book World.

A New Edition.

THE FOUNDATION OF DEATH. By A. and Z. B. Gustafson. This classic work on the Drink Question has now reached a fifth edition, revised. No student of the subject ought to be without this storehouse of fact and argument. Photographic portraits are given in this edition, which excellently show the features of the distinguished authors. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

Mr. Champness and Evangelistic Work.

SHALL METHODISM ACCEPT THE WORK OF "JOYFUL NEWS" LINES? This is the title of "A letter to John Wesley's children, by Thomas Champness." The Joyful News Methodist lines are as follow: (1) To be the ally, and not the rival, of existing agencies; (2) To use our own sons ourselves, instead of letting other agencies have them; (3) To hold out no premium to unworthy motives, because no salary shall be given; (4) To send into the foreign field only those who have proved themselves equal to it by the work they have done in England, and the economical way they have lived; (5) To secure none but efficient men, because they are obliged to retire if, after a trial, they are not successful; (6) To pass into the ranks of the ministry those who have proved themselves fit to do the work; (7) To depend upon the unsolicited gifts of God's people, so as not to interfere with subscriptions and collections for Connexional purposes. Mr. Champness (editor of Joyful News) has been training and sending forth evangelists on these lines, and he calls upon others to imitate his example. India and the Drink.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC IN BRITISH INDIA; or, Has the British Government done its Duty? By Robert Needham Cust, LL.D. This pamphlet is an answer to statements made in speeches delivered last year by Archdeacon Farrar and Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., at a meeting held in London to protest against the demoralisation of native races by means of the drink traffic. On that occasion Archdeacon Farrar said: "We found India sober, and left it drunken"; and Mr. Smith said, "Before the English were in India, the sale of strong drink was unknown," but now "the very beggars and boys and women" have taken to it. In this pamphlet Mr. Cust sets himself to shew that in all periods of its history India has had classes who have been addicted to drunkenness, and that what has really happened since British possession is that the evil has been intensified by the importation of the liquid poison of Europe. He maintains that the much-abused Government of India is the most sympathetic, the most just, the most tolerant, and the most influenced by Christian wisdom, liberality, and conscientiousness, that the world has ever seen. In conclusion, he makes some valuable suggestions for the strengthening of temperance principles in the country. (Trübner & Co.)

The Book of Revelation Explained.

THAT GLORIOUS FUTURE! OR, KEY TO THE REVELATION. By Rev. J. L. Thompson. This is a tersely written analysis of the Apocalypse. In the space of 128 pages we have the sacred text plainly divided up and clearly explained. No dates are fixed, no far-fetched notions introduced. The treatment is suggestive rather than thorough. Mr. Thompson may be described as a literalist and a futurist, although he says nothing either of theories or methods. He regards the letters to the Seven Churches as applicable to every separate church and Christian in various conditions and circumstances up to the end of the present era. He holds that the present long dispensation of grace, and truth, and tribulation is covered by the first five seals; the sixth seal covers the dispensation of Christ's appearing, and the resurrection and ascension of the saints; the outpouring of the righteous judgment and wrath of God (in trumpets, woes, and plagues) is comprehended in the seventh seal. The Millennium of glory, honour, and peace, ensues upon the outpouring of God's long-suffering anger. Two other dispensations follow—the judgment of the unjust dead, and the new creation—and the future is glorious, indeed. This is the interpretation in brief; and, in developing it in his interesting little volume, Mr. Thompson has endeavoured to write in harmony with the teachings of the Old Testament prophecies, and the predictions contained in the Gospels and Epistles. As an outline exposition of the Book of Revelation "That Glorious Future" will certainly find appreciative readers. (Passmore & Alabaster.)

MISCELLANEOUS.

The February part of THE HOMILIST is replete with analytical and expository matter presented in a useful form. (1s. Houlston & Sons.)

THE PULPIT TREASURY (1s.), an American monthly published in England by Messrs. J. Nisbet & Co., is just what it professes to be. The February issue contains a large variety of select information of an expository and homiletic kind.

In a trenchant little pamphlet, entitled, "What saith the Scripture?" and published by Messrs. Alexander & Shepheard (1d.), Mr. W. P. Lockhart, of Liverpool, speaks some words "to those who think of leaving the Baptist Union." His contention, strongly supported by New Testament references, is that Apostolic teaching and practice, not only do not favour but discountenance schism in a Christian organisation because some of its members have departed from the common faith.

PRECIOUS THINGS PUT FORTH. Arranged by M. Chenevix Trench. 1s. Marshall Brothers. This volume, though of small compass, is one of those that requires careful study, and to the Bible student is simply indispensable. A great many mystic passages of the Old Testament are given in the original Hebrew, and make many of the verses clear and easily understood. Miss Chenevix Trench is an earnest student herself, and whatever she undertakes to do, she does it well, and this volume is a specimen of her earnestness.

CHRISTIAN SOCIALISM VERSUS PRESENT-DAY UNSOCIALISM. 1s. By E. D. Girdlestone, B.A. W. Reeves, Fleet-street. The writer draws a strong line between Anarchists, Social Democrats, and those whom he claims to represent, Christian Socialists. He considers competition to be the root of all social evils, and co-operation, if applied as he suggests, the cure. He draws a distinction between self-interest and selfishness, which is rather theoretical, and uses justice in a loose sense, but there is much information, and some sound arguing in his lectures. The real secret of all he deplores is not lack of organisation, but lack of a perfectly Righteous Ruler. Selfishness will never be universally kept under until the self-devoted Son of God holds the sceptre of the world.

SEEK AND YE SHALL FIND: Studies in Holy Scripture. (The Four Greater Prophets.) Part ii.—Jeremiah. By E. M. and S. L. M. 1s. Nisbet & Co. For ten Bible readers who thoroughly know the New Testament, we find but one who knows equally well one book of the Old Testament, especially if it be one of the prophets. For various reasons they are shunned as difficult and unpractical. Small and unpretentious as is this little work, if its companions resemble it, it will greatly remove such fallacies. In simple but never undignified language, we see first the solitary sensitive young preacher of Anathoth described; then follow the chief prophecies and events under striking headings—e.g., sound the alarm, obedience better than sacrifice, Rachael weeping, &c. Throughout we are reminded that Jeremiah specially typifies a greater Prophet and Sufferer. It is a book for every home and school.

THE BARDS OF THE BIBLE. By the late G. Gilfillan. Seventh Edition. Hamilton, Adams & Co. A book written more than twenty years ago on this subject ought to have no little vitality to bear republishing in the present day. Certainly, Mr. Gilfillan did not do his work superficially. Not only did he enter fully into the structure and peculiarities of Hebrew poetry, and specially of what are generally termed the poetical books, but separate chapters are devoted to the poetry of the Epistles of Paul, Peter, James, and John. The last chapter of the book is of special value. The author believes firmly and states eloquently that, in spite of defective translations, adverse criticisms, and contemptuous rejection, the Bible is in the fullest sense God's Book, and will, as long as this world continues, be not only the rule of faith and practice for believers, but a governing and elevating power in all moral, social, and political movements.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS, 1887. The yearly volume of this popular monthly will gladden many a home [illegible]. (1s. Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-School Union.)

The Young Man for March has a brief but weighty paper on "Economy: What it is and How to Achieve it," by J. Herbert T[illegible] (President of the London [illegible] of Commerce).

Rev. J. G. Rogers intends shortly to publish his lectures on "The Congregationalism of To-day," with some other papers on the questions which are raised by the Down-grade controversy.

In the March number of The Congregational Review will be commenced a series of Papers on the [illegible] Commission. The [illegible] will give in full some of the most important evidence, with comments.

In "The Place, the Power, and the Claims of Gospel Total Abstinence" (Macniven & Wallace, [illegible]), Canon Wilberforce presents strong arguments for the Christian's duty in relation to the drinking customs of the day.

MARGARET CRAWFORD: A LIGHT IN A DARK PLACE. This is the story of a poor woman who on account of her consistent Christian character, was respected in life and honoured in death. (1d. Edinburgh: United [illegible].)

FROM THE WORKHOUSE TO HEAVEN is the title of a little book by "R. H." 1d. Partridge & Co. It narrates in simple language the cheerfully borne sufferings and trustful decease of an inmate of a workhouse infirmary in the North of England.

BROUGHTON MANOR. By Edith [illegible]. A [illegible] little illustrated story of family [illegible]. [illegible] and tenderness are beautifully [illegible], and the language and style are such as will delight [illegible]. (1s. Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-School Union.)

Rev. J. T. Wrenford's last booklet is entitled, I WISH YOU WOULD PRAY FOR ME (6d. per dozen. Partridge & Co.) It relates a striking case of the conversion of a young man. A new edition of ALL FOR JESUS, by the same author and publisher (3d. per dozen), is now ready.

Two papers read at the Keswick Convention last year—THE WAY OF HOLINESS, by Rev. J. Elder Cumming, D.D.; and WHAT IS THE BLESSING? by Rev. Evan H. Hopkins—have been published in a neat form, and may be had at a penny each (Marshall Bros., 10, Paternoster-row).

THE ARMADA OF 1588. THE REVOLUTION OF 1688. This is the title of a tract by Rev. J. A. Wylie, LL.D., published by the Scottish Reformation Society, 17, George IV. Bridge, Edinburgh. The tract contains succinctly written summaries of two important chapters of English history.

A lecture by Mr. George Smith, of Coalville, on "The Canal, Gipsy, Van, and other Travelling Children," has been printed, and may be obtained from the author, Crick, Rugby. It [illegible] taken, and the measures now in [illegible] improving the condition of the [illegible] described.

Archdeacon Farrar's article on [illegible] AND THE [illegible] TRADE, which appeared in The Contemporary Review of July, has been reprinted in pamphlet form, and may be obtained from [illegible] Office, [illegible]. There are three interesting appendices, which, [illegible] on native and other testimony, the Archdeacon's indictment is emphasised.

A pamphlet entitled THE [illegible] OF [illegible], by Mr. J. W. [illegible], treats in a very clear and [illegible] tions between capital and labour, [illegible] of the taxation of [illegible] who are no real producers.

"THE [illegible]"—Rev. F. M. Needham, M.A., chaplain of [illegible], has given this title [illegible] containing four letters on the Holy Communion. In some respects the letters are [illegible] the author, but in other respects they are [illegible] simplicity. More attention [illegible] the memorial character [illegible]. ([illegible], 3d.)

A VOICE FROM THE [illegible] OF HEAVEN. [illegible]

DRURY-LANE WORKING GIRLS' HOUSE.—This Institution provides safe lodgings and a comfortable home for working girls in the neighbourhood, and for young persons [illegible] to London. Among the allied agencies are a club for young girls, a day nursery, a temperance society, and sewing, cooking and Bible classes. The third annual report, just published, gives an account of much good work done. Miss [illegible] is the devoted lady superintendent.

THE BIRMINGHAM CHURCH MISSION.—Rev. J. G. Dixon, rector of St. George's, Birmingham, writes, with reference to our report last week of the Mission in that city, that every house in his large parish was visited three times, and [illegible] of the Mission distributed. The [illegible] in connection with St. George's Church were closed for the time, and the work concentrated in the church. Mr. Dixon adds that the Mission at St. George's Church has been a season of great refreshment to himself and his colleagues, and he looks for blessed results in the parish.

A TALK WITH THE VICAR. This is the title of a bright little penny tract, written by Miss Emily S. Holt, and published by the Church Association, 14, Buckingham-street, Strand. The "talk" is on the Real Presence and [illegible] the Eucharistic [illegible].

lotes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 26.—HOSEA II.

1.—Say ye unto your brethren, Ammi; and your sisters, Ru-hamah.—This should be- g to the last chapter. It is the concluding rt of the reversal of the sentence upon Israel ich had been expressed in the names of the phet's children, Jezreel, Lo-ruhamah, and -ammi. These names of judgment are now to reversed: (1) Jezreel, by being taken in a new nse—viz., "God's sowing" (instead of the old nse, which recalled the place of God's judg- nt on idolatry). The two others by reversal. would appear from Rom. ix. 26, and 1 Pet. 10, that Israel having been scattered ongst the Gentiles, and having thus become tually Gentiles (Lo-ammi), are called by the spel into the higher privileges of becoming hildren of God by faith in Christ Jesus." ey and the children of Judah are thus athered together "in Christ, their appointed ad, and come up out of the land (or "out of earth," as it might be rendered), as Eph. i. testifies, and as 1 Thess. iv. 17 will make od. This, however, leaves room for a further eral restoration of a remnant of Israel to thly blessing "in the latter days," as s chapter and chapter iii. testify.

2.—Plead with your mother, plead.—From s to the end of the chapter is a connected ssage. Jehovah now comes forth into view Himself the husband arraigning Israel, the thless wife."—S.C.

7.—I will go and return to my first husband. 'The stage of feeling is precisely that indi- ed Luke xv. 17."—S.C.

14.—Speak comfortably unto her.—Margin, o her heart;" it is the same phrase used xl. 2.

15.—The valley of Achor for a door of hope.— uding to Israel's discovery of "the accursed ng" in their midst which had caused their feat, which being put away, victory was eedily granted them (Josh. vii.).

16.—Shalt call Me no more Baali.—"Hence- th I call you not servants...but friends" hn xv. 15).

22.—They shall hear Jezreel.—The name eaning "God will sow" (Yidsreel) is now en to Israel (Yisrael); a play upon the mes. Israel is now contemplated as the wing of God, and so restored to his favour at all the blessings (corn, wine, oil) which He d withdrawn from them for their sins are ain, in answer to prayer, abundantly vouch- fed.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 27.—HOSEA III.

1.—Go yet, love a woman.—All such questions whether this woman is Gomer, which per- ex those who take these three chapters erally, are avoided by regarding them as mbolic actions occurring only in the sphere vision. Love flagons of wine.—R.V. renders is "cakes of raisins." It seems intended to scribe luxurious living, which had been one use of Israel's fall. "Gomer the daughter of blaim" (i. 3) means "Consummation or mpleteness (see Matt. xxiii. 32), the daughter luxury."

4.—Without a king, and without a prince, &c. The great Jewish commentator, Kimchi, ecognises this description in the present ndition of his people."—S.C. It is very re- rkable that Israel should have remained for 00 years without sacrifice to God, and yet thout an image, i.e., free from idolatry.

5.—Afterwards shall the children of Israel turn.—This points to the latter-day con- rsion of Israel to Christ, which will make em partakers of earthly blessing "even in im" (Eph. i. 10.) But this must be dis- nguished from the blessing of i. 11., which, cording to Rom. ix. 6 and 1 Pet. ii. 10, is being w fulfilled in those "whom He hath called, t of the Jews only, but also of the Gentiles." e blessing of chap. ii., however, is connected th the earth (v. 23), and speaks of God's "people," t not of "sons" (i. 10). David their King.— The elder Jews of every school explained this Christ."—Pusey.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 28.—HOSEA IV.

From this to the end of the book are many detached prophecies, the arrangement of which it is difficult and precarious to define. "It has, however, been generally felt that this fourth chapter is linked together into a separate whole."—S.C.

2.—Blood toucheth blood.—Rashi explains this "the blood of one murder shed upon the ground lies close to the blood of another." Comp. Isa. i. 15.

4.—Thy people are as they that strive with the priest.—Referring to Deut. xvii. 12, 13, where every lawsuit was to be ultimately decided by the priest and judge, and whoever resists the judgment of this tribunal is threatened with sentence of death. "The nation resembled those who are described in the law as rebels against the priest."—Hengstenberg.

6.—Thou shalt be no priest to Me.—The sin of lack of knowledge is traced to the priesthood who should have imparted it. See Mal. ii. 7.

15.—Though thou, Israel, play the harlot, yet let not Judah offend.—The faithfulness of Judah was a matter of far more importance than that of Israel, seeing that God's dwelling-place was there (Ps. lxxvi. 1, 2), and all the promises as to the Messiah were bound up with Judah (Gen. xlix. 8—12).

16.—Israel slideth back as a backsliding heifer.—"Hath behaved himself stubbornly like a stubborn heifer," R.V. Israel would not submit to the yoke of God's law, hence "let him alone," the most solemn sentence God can pronounce.

17.—Ephraim is joined to idols.—"The most powerful of the ten tribes is frequently used for Israel of the ten tribes."—Keil.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 29.—HOSEA V.

"The reproof of the sins of Israel is now specially addressed to the priests and the king's house, i.e., the king and his court. As to what king is intended, probably either Zachariah or Menahem (2 Kings xv. 8—22), probably both." —Keil.

1.—A snare on Mizpah, and a net spread upon Tabor.—"There is an old Jewish tradition that lyers-in-wait were set in these two places to intercept and murder those Israelites who would go up to worship at Jerusalem, and this tradition gains countenance from the mention of slaughter in the next verse."—Pusey.

6.—But they shall not find Him, He hath withdrawn Himself.—As to the spiritual lesson, see Song of Solomon v. 6. The historical fulfilment is explained in 2 Kings xxiii. 25—27.

11.—He willingly walked after the commandment.—"Doubtless that of Jeroboam contained in 1 Kings xii. 28—33."—Pusey.

13.—Sent to King Jareb.—"The word means 'warrior,' and is an epithet formed by the prophet, and applied to the King of Assyria."—Keil.

15.—In their affliction they will seek Me early.—"The prediction awaits the perfect accomplishment in the time indicated in Rom. xi. 25, 26."—S.C.

THURSDAY, MARCH 1.—HOSEA VI.

1.—Come, and let us return unto the Lord.—This verse, with the two which follow, is closely connected with the close of the preceding chapter, the words "He hath torn" being a reference to "I will tear" (v. 14). The LXX. connects these opening verses with what goes before, by inserting as the first word "saying." Viewed thus it is prophetic of Israel's repentance in the latter days.

2.—In the third day He will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight.—"In all ages Christian piety has very generally recognised here a reference to our Lord's resurrection, which is for all penitents the sole and certain ground of their being freed from the state of sin and condemnation, and rising again to live in God's sight."—S.C.

3.—His going forth is prepared as the morning.—One of the many passages which connect the Lord's second coming with the figure of the morning dawn; that "morning without clouds," of which David spoke (2 Sam. xxiii. 4).

6.—For I desired mercy, and not sacrifice.—"The Lord Jesus cites this in justification of his admitting publicans and sinners to close personal intercourse with Himself."—S.C. "Mercy" would seem here to denote loving-kindness, such as Christ Himself practised, which, combined with "knowledge of God," would give the two great requirements of the Law—the first and second great commandments.

FRIDAY, MARCH 2.—HOSEA VII.

1.—The wickedness of Samaria.—"This was the capital of the kingdom of the ten tribes. and the seat of the court, the wickedness of which now engages the prophet's attention."—S.C.

3.—They make the king glad with their wickedness.—It is generally thought that to the end of ver. 7 there is an allusion to the murder of King Zachariah (2 Kings xv. 10), and that by the "baker" is meant "Shallum," the instigator of the plot, which seems to have culminated in a drunken carouse, in which the king was murdered. He was the last of the four descendants of Jehu to whom the throne of Israel had been secured by God's promise (2 Kings x. 30). His death, therefore, was an event of no small importance.

7.—All their kings are fallen.—Commentators see here a prophetic allusion to the rapidly succeeding deaths or murders of the kings that followed; but it may refer to the death of Zachariah, as contemplated, in the light above mentioned, as the last of Jehu's line to whom any continuance had been promised. The fact that "none among them calleth unto Me," would thus mean that what is said of Jehu (2 Kings x. 31) remained true of his descendants to the end, thus justifying the approaching judgment upon Israel.

8.—Ephraim, he hath mixed himself among the people.—R.V. (better) "peoples." The Gentiles are evidently meant. A cake not turned.—A cake is turned in order to bring both sides, and so gradually the whole, under the influence of the fire. Israel outwardly and with their lips drew nigh to God, while their hearts were far from Him. "Such are too many professing Christians, they unite outward performance and inward lukewarmness; the one overdone, but without any wholesome effect upon the other."—Pusey.

SATURDAY, MARCH 3.—HOSEA VIII.

1.—He shall come as an eagle.—"Pointing back to the threat of Moses" (Deut. xxviii. 49).

2.—My God, we know Thee.—This "feigned recognition of Him in the hour of distress (S.C.) has a New Testament parallel in Matt. vii. 22. The Lord's rejoinder is in both cases the same in principle. Comp. "cast off good" with "ye that work iniquity," and "I knew (it) not" (4), i.e., do not recognise them, with "I never knew you."

3.—Israel hath cast off the thing that is good. —Or, as Jerome renders it, "Him that is good." Comp. Matt. xix. 17; where, see R.V.

5.—Thy calf, O Samaria, hath cast thee off.— "Israel had cast off God, his good. In turn, the calf which he had chosen to be his god has cast him off."—Pusey.

6.—The workman made it; therefore it is not God.—"The workman was rather a god to his idol than it to him. To say that it was made was to deny that it was God."—Pusey, who adds, "Nor do the prophets heed any subtleties (such as the heathen alleged) that the idol might be indwelt by some influence." It had been well had Dr. Pusey maintained as firm a front against Romish subtleties which allege the indwelling of God in the wafer as an excuse for their sacramental idolatry.

7.—They have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind.—"The harvest answers to the sowing (Gal. vi. 7, 8)."—Keil.

11.—Ephraim hath made many altars to sin. —"Israel was only to have one altar, and that in the place where the Lord would reveal his name (Deut. xii. 5). Instead of that Israel had built a number of altars in different places." Such, too, has been the sin of Christendom, which, not content with the one altar of Heb. xiii. 10, has turned its communion tables into altars, and that in spite of "the great things of God's law" which utterly condemn such practices.

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, March 4.

Matt. xx. 17—29. Golden Text: Matt. xx. 28.

Christ's Last Journey to Jerusalem.

Ver. 17—19. See in Jesus, as here described, the perfect Example of Bravery and Obedience.—He stands in full view of his coming death, all its details before his mind. Shall be betrayed.—By one of his own! What bitterness in that! Unto the chief priests, &c.—The great leaders of his people. Thus, the awful guilt of his death would lie upon the nation He specially loved as his own. Shall deliver him to the Gentiles.—Godless and cruel heathen. Mock.—Even little children can understand how mockery can hurt, and wound, and torture. Jesus, more sensitive than other men, because no sin in Him. So mockery would hurt him more than others. Scourge.—The cruel suffering inflicted by Roman scourge was horrible. Crucify.—The shame of this death was far more than the shame of hanging is to us, and the tortures indescribable. The third day He shall rise again.—He saw the crown beyond the cross. "For the joy that was set before Him He endured the cross, despising the shame." All this to happen in about two weeks from that time! If one of us knew we must die in a fortnight—knew how, and when, and where—how agitated he would be. With what glorious calmness Jesus sees all, speaks of what will happen, and then goes steadfastly on to meet his shame and death! He was perfectly courageous, because (1) He loved us, and longed to give his life a ransom for many (28); (2) He must do his Father's will; (3) He foresaw the glorious reward; and (4) He had perfect faith in God. "For the Lord God will help Me; therefore shall I not be confounded: therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed" (Isa. l. 7).

ILLUSTRATIONS.

As Luther drew near the door which was to admit him to the presence of his judges, a noble knight, the celebrated George of Freundsberg, tapped him on the shoulder, and, shaking his head, said: "Poor monk! poor monk! Thou art now going to make a nobler stand than I or any other captain have ever made in the bloodiest of our battles. But if thy cause is just, and thou art sure of it, go forward in God's name, and fear nothing. God will not forsake thee." Luther went forward with Christ-like courage, and God delivered him gloriously.

Christ's example makes good men brave, as it did John Bunyan. He was engaged to preach at the little village of Samsell: he knew that a warrant was out for his arrest, and that arrest would certainly mean imprisonment—probably exile or death. He had just married a second time: his children depended on him, and one o fthem was blind. Yet he went boldly to Samsell, preached there, was arrested in the act, and was cast into Bedford jail, where he lay twelve years, and where he wrote the "Pilgrim's Progress."

Ver. 20- 23. See the perfect Patience, the kindly, generous Forbearance of Jesus.—His mind was full of the awful vision of the cross. He tells his dearest friends for the third time (see Matt. xvi. 21; xvii. 22—23) what is to happen to Him. Now, when we are very full of something, and speak to our nearest friends about it, we look for their sympathy. If they don't understand us, or won't enter into our thoughts, we feel hurt, disappointed; are often irritated, impatient, and angry. What a trial to Jesus, that, when He told his disciples of the horrors that lay before Him, they only answered by questions about their future honour and greatness! Yet there is no anger, no impatience. The rebuke that follows—how gentle, kind, and considerate! Doubtless He dwelt lovingly on what was good in Salome's rash and inconsiderate request—on the faith that believed in his future glory, in spite of present humiliation, and coming shame and death; and on the courage which would face danger and suffering to win the glory. What a tender, generous, patient Friend is Jesus!

Ver. 28. See Jesus the perfect Example of loving Self-sacrifice.—Self-sacrifice was practised by Him, though He was Lord of all. How much more should his servants obey it.

Give his life a ransom for many.—I.e., his life for theirs—He in their stead. "He shall bear their iniquities"; "He was made sin (sin-offering) for us"; "Who his own self bear our sins," &c. Notice, the cross was no accident. "He came...to give his life," &c.

Jesus always, of set purpose, put self-seeking and honour aside, as not even to be thought of; He went about doing good—not as a pastime, but as the business of his life. His joy was in blessing others—the cost to Him was not considered. "The lowest place was the one which the Highest chose.'

Y.M.C.A. BIBLE LESSONS.

OUTLINES PREPARED BY HENRY THORNE.

March 4.—Wisdom.—Prov. iii. 13—26.

(1) The Praise of Wisdom.—The wisdom set forth here is not worldly wisdom (1 Cor. i. 19), but "the wisdom which is from above" chap. ii. 6. See also James iii. 17). Note here (a) Happiness (ver. 13).—See the word "blessed" (Gr. makarios, equivalent of happiness) in the Sermon on the Mount. (b) Treasure (ver. 14, 15).—Silver purchased a grave (Gen. xxiii. 16). Wisdom ensures resurrection from the grave (Dan. xii. 3). Silver secured Joseph and made him a slave (Gen. xxxvii. 28). Wisdom raised him to the place of authority (Chap. xli. 39). The people of Tyre heaped up fine gold (Zech. ix. 3); but they perished. So much for the gain of gold. Comp. the gain of godliness (1 Tim. vi. 6). Comp. the rich fool (Luke xiii. 16—21), and the poor who are rich in faith (James ii. 5). (c) Long Life (ver. 16).—"Length of days"—not exclusively a Jewish blessing (Eph. vi. 3). Wisdom blesses with both hands. Comp. "his left hand" and "his right hand" (Cant. ii. 6), and "his hands" (Matt. xix. 15). (d) Pleasant Surroundings (ver. 17).—"Her ways." Comp. the way of Samaria hedged up with thorns (Hosea ii. 6), and the ways of the Lord (xiv. 9). Pleasantness is allied with peace (see Rom. xv. 13). (e) A Memory of Paradise.—"Tree of life." This was a Divine growth (Gen. ii. 9), full of vitality (Gen. iii. 22), well placed (Gen. ii. 10), fruitful and possessed of healing virtue (Rev. xxii. 2).

(2) The Pattern of Wisdom.—(Ver. 19) "The Lord." Note the wisdom of God in: (a) The Earth (Job. xii. 8).—We see here adaptation and design. Order is apparent everywhere, and order is a revelation of mind. In the earth we see "the reign of law." These things suggest the characteristics of true wisdom. The wise man considers the fitness of things (Micah vi. 8), has regard for order (1 Cor. xiv. 40), and for law (Ps. xl. 8). (b) The Heavens (lit., "the heaved-up things").—Note the might of wisdom (Prov. viii. 27; Ps. civ. 2), its beauty (Job xxvi. 13), and the honour which is its due (Ps. cxxxvi. 5). (c) The Depths (Ps. ciii. 27—29). (d) The Dew.—How precious (Isa. xviii. 4).

(3) The Pursuit of Wisdom.—Wisdom must be: (a) Sought (ver. 13, "findeth").—Solomon sought it by prayer (1 Kings iii. 11), and in that way it is to be sought still (James i. 5). (b) Secured.—"Lay hold upon her" (ver. 18). Here is earnest purpose, "whole desire" (2 Chron. xv. 15). (c) Retained.—"Everyone that retaineth her" (ver. 18). Comp. "retain my words" (Prov. iv. 4); and "my words abide (meno, to remain, continue) in you."

The closing verses show us wisdom as a theme for meditation (ver. 21), and as causing beauty of character (ver. 22); a safe walk (ver. 23); restful sleep (ver. 24), and security in the day of judgment (ver. 25, 26).

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The Sale of Liquors on Sunday (Ireland) Amendmen Bill has been read a second time, and referred to a Selec Committee.

Mr. Moody says that persons who persists in sellin intoxicating liquors should not be admitted to Churc membership.

It is understood a Bill will be brought in this sessio to give effect to the International Convention for th regulation of the North Sea liquor traffic.

In a Northern paper, "A Working Man's Wife" complains bitterly of the gambling clubs by which workin men are tempted to the ruin of themselves and thei families.

Edinburgh U.P. Church Presbytery has appointed deputation to wait on the Midlothian justices, with view to getting the public-houses in the county closed a ten o'clock.

The fiftieth annual meeting of the Manchester Cit Mission was recently held. In the report it was state that in 1887 2143 drunkards had been reformed, of who 1099 stood fast.

The fifty-first annual festival of the York Temperanc Society was held recently. Temperance sermons wer preached in the Minster by the Dean and Canon Wilberforce. The report was encouraging.

Mr. J. C. Stevenson's Bill for Stopping the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors during the whole of Sunday was rea a first time in the House of Commons on February 1 Special prayer is requested that God would bless th efforts to carry this measure this session through bot Houses of Parliament.

Mr. William Copleston (formerly secretary of th Nottingham and Notts. Band of Hope Union), has bee appointed travelling secretary to the Central Associatio for Stopping the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunda for London and the South Eastern District, in succession to Mr. Conway Stidstone, resigned.

A curious case of ecclesiastical discipline came befor Lord Penzance. Mr. Hawkes, a clergyman in the diocese of Hereford, used water in administering the Hol Communion instead of wine, the latter not having bee provided in time. The churchwarden complained to th Bishop, who instituted proceedings, and Mr. Hawkes ha been consequently admonished, and compelled to pa the costs. To cite a clergyman before Lord Penzanc for this harmless departure from ordinary usage, says contemporary, seems the height of absurdity.

FOREIGN.

Several seizures of liquor have been made at workmen's clubs in New South Wales.

At military athletic sports held lately at Colomb Ceylon, the non-abstaining competitors won the chie prizes.

The Washington Sentinel—a brewer's paper—lament that "the Democratic States are wheeling into the Local Option line one after another."

In the New York Independent Dr. Ezra M. Hunt calls attention to the "marked change" in the views of th medical profession concerning the use of alcohol in disease.

The drink-interest some time since caused the destruction by dynamite of the Friends' Meeting House, at Buffalo, Kansas. A new one has been erected on the same site.

The New South Wales Liquor-traffic Commission has recommended that drunkards should be sent for some months to an inebriates' asylum, instead of, as now, a few days' imprisonment.

As soon as the Supreme Court decided that the Kansas State Prohibition laws were constitutional, the proprietors of two breweries in Sioux City closed without even consulting their lawyer.

At a christening feast, at Mount Carmel, U.S.A., recently, tipsy guests upset a stove and thus caused the destruction of a row of seven framed houses, three men, a woman, and a child, by fire.

The Copts at Cairo, descendants from the early Christians in Egypt, were horrified on learning that fermented, or, as they called it, shop-wine, is used by the Western churches as a Communion wine.

The temperance hospital at Chicago is not only a financial success, but the medical and surgical results are so favourable that the general public are realising alcohol is not needed in the treatment of disease.

The Bishop of Jamaica writes in high terms of "the temperance of the negro with regard to drink." He says, the Queen's Jubilee Fête was, in this respect as well as others, "a triumphant illustration of the power of Christianity."

The mayor of New York (Mr. Hewitt) told the aldermen recently that a visit to the charitable institutions of the city, the inmates of which numbered 14,000 persons, would convince the most sceptical that the chief cause of crime, sickness, and poverty was drink.

The Turks, who are prohibitionists by order of the Koran, are working to abolish saloons kept by the "Christians" in Constantinople. All drinking places within 250 feet from the houses of Turkish worship have been ordered to be closed, and the police are enforcing the decree.

Professor Pattison writes from Rochester, N.Y., to The Freeman:—There are signs that before long a real war will have to be waged with the liquor interest in the United States; and some calm men, not usually given to exaggeration, say it will be with blows and death. Here, in Rochester, every saloon is open on Sunday in defiance of the law, which the mayor does not dare imperil his re-election by enforcing, and the beer chiefly sold is brewed by the Secretary of State, a prominent democratic politician. The evil will probably go on a little longer, and then some spark of indignation will set public opinion in a blaze. When this happens the liquor men will fall, as surely as did the Southerners and their peculiar institutions in the War of the Rebellion.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. H. Morden Bennett, son of the founder of St. Peter's, Bournemouth, has, with his wife, been received into the Roman Catholic Church.

Rev. Brooke Lambert has charge of two fine churches at Greenwich; from one he is said not to receive a penny, while the receipts from the latter last year were £31 2s. 5d.

Rev. W. Salter Price, vicar of Wingfield, Suffolk, is about to proceed to East Africa to resume, for a time, the charge of the work of the C.M.S. at Frere Town, [illegible] in the absence of Rev. A. D. Shaw, who has [illegible] home.

In connection with the visit to Ireland of Rev. F. E. Wigram, hon. secretary of the Church Missionary Society, large meetings were held at Belfast and other places. At one of the Belfast meetings, the Archdeacon of Connor announced that he had received for the Society a legacy of £3000.

Rev. G. Ayerst, of Cambridge, has been appointed Principal of the Operative Jewish Converts' Institution, Palestine-place, E., to succeed Rev. J. H. Brühl, who, after labouring as a missionary of the London Jews' Society at [illegible], [illegible], and Vienna, has superintended the Institution since 1871.

Oxford Hall, Victoria-park-square, Bethnal-green, was opened on [illegible] by the Archbishop of Canterbury. It is an addition to Oxford House, an institution founded by Oxford men for the social elevation of the working classes, and in connection with it are four working-men's clubs. The new hall is capable of accommodating nine hundred persons, and has been erected at a cost of £1100.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Frederick J. Gavéd, of St. Austell, has been paying very acceptable visits to Friends, and holding public meetings as the way opened in Neath, Swansea, Tenby, Cardiff, and Newport (Mon.). Refreshment and blessing have resulted.

Adult school conferences have been held in York and Bradford. Both have been well attended, and ably conducted, and one aim characterised them, the christianising and elevating of working men; great success and blessing are manifest in the schools.

In Madagascar the work of evangelising and teaching is well sustained, though the workers are sadly short-handed, straining eyes look homeward for [illegible] in the field. "The labourers are few." A similar need is felt in Mexico, where a door is wide open for Gospel service. Local Christians who have qualifications are hindered through poverty.

BAPTIST.

Pastor Frank H. White has been delivering a series of lectures in Glasgow and neighbouring towns in connection with the Bunyan bicentenary.

Rev. J. Compston has resigned the pastorate of the church at Fivehead, Taunton, and intends to devote himself exclusively to evangelistic work.

Rev. [illegible] Wood, for 23 years pastor of Tetley-street Chapel, Bradford, died very suddenly whilst conducting a prayer-meeting there on Monday week.

A new chapel at Honor Oak was opened on Thursday last by Rev. J. T. Wigner. The whole of the money has been [illegible] for this building, and a generous friend has promised to defray the cost of pulpit supplies for a year.

At the Shoreditch Tabernacle, on Sunday week, Rev. Isaac Levisohn, for many years a missionary to the Jews, baptized a Russian Jew, on the profession of his faith in the Lord Jesus. A considerable number of Jews were present.

A [illegible] mission has been held in Trinity Chapel, [illegible]. The [illegible] about three hundred persons [illegible] several professed conversion, and about eighty temperance pledges were taken.

The church at Wood-green, N., under the pastorate of Rev. W. Winston Haines has added 55 members to its numbers during the past year, making a total of 258 since the present pastor's settlement. All the organisations of the church are in a flourishing condition.

Mr. R. Cairns, of the Evangelisation Society, concluded on Sunday week a month's mission in the Baptist Chapel, [illegible], near Wimborne, Dorset, which has been attended with great blessing, not a few having professed to have found peace through believing "the faithful saying." It is said to be the greatest awakening ever known in the parish.

Pastor Archibald G. Brown preached his twenty-second annual sermon to men at the East London Tabernacle, on the evening of Sunday week. The Tabernacle was filled with about 3000 men of all classes—dock-labourers, [illegible], sailors, &c., to whom Mr. Brown gave an earnest address from the words "Things not seen as yet."

One result of the Down Grade controversy, says a correspondent of The Baptist, has been a great stir through the churches of Australia and Tasmania. At the recent meeting of the Baptist Union of Victoria a [illegible] basis of fellowship, upon evangelical lines, was adopted; while in Tasmania a creed, upon the same lines, but more pronounced, has been formulated and adopted.

The first anniversary of Pastor G. T. [illegible] [illegible] was held on Tuesday [illegible]. The church now numbers [illegible] members. The Sunday-school [illegible] nearly [illegible] hundred scholars, and a [illegible]. Open-air preaching has been carried on and [illegible] [illegible] they had not heard the Gospel for [illegible] years.

SALVATION ARMY.

The Coming Army is to be the title of a new monthly in connection with the junior soldiers' movement; the first number will be published on March 15.

A new barracks has been opened at Northgate, Darlington. The building includes, besides the chapel, which will accommodate 1700, a lecture-room, containing sittings for 450 persons.

Notwithstanding the fact that the publicans have been doing their utmost to upset the meetings and to make a disturbance, at Little Lever, Lancashire, there have been over one hundred converts in three weeks.

Staff-Captain Davis reports that at Rye, Sussex, where work has only recently been commenced, sixty souls were saved during the first fortnight, including "drunkards, outcasts, gamblers, publicans' sons, and some of the worst."

Captain Maynard writes from India that at Coimbatore there is a very fair band of soldiers, several of whom have been won from heathenism. One specially interesting case is that of an old man, a poet, who has tried all the religions of India, but failed to find true peace until he went to the meetings at Coimbatore, where he got converted. Eight or nine "real full Brahmins" have recently been saved at Trichinopoly.

The Salvation Army, writes the Geneva correspondent of The Record, continues to meet with considerable opposition in some parts of Switzerland. The Tribune de Genève reports that at a recent Sunday evening meeting of the Army at Birsfelden, in the environs of Bâle, some young men, having been refused admission to the room, drew their knives and struck the person who kept the door, and two ladies who had come to his assistance, wounding them seriously.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Professor Francis Patton, D.D., has been elected President of Princeton University in succession to Dr. M'Cosh, who will retire in June.

There is some prospect of Dr. Aird being induced to reverse his decision not to accept the Moderatorship of the next General Assembly of the Free Church at Inverness.

The health of Dr. William Chalmers, the venerable principal of the English Presbyterian College is such that his medical adviser recommends him immediately to retire from the duties of the chair.

On Sunday week Rev. Alex. Jeffrey preached a special sermon on "Mohammedanism and Christianity," being the first of a series on "Comparative Religion," to be delivered monthly in his church at Ipswich.

At the annual meeting of St. James's Presbyterian Church, Wood-green, N., it was reported that all the agencies of the church are in a prosperous condition, sixty-three new members having joined during the year.

Dr. J. J. Bonar's application for a colleague and successor has been approved by Greenock Free Church Presbytery. Dr. Bonar was born in 1803, and was ordained to the pastorate of St. Andrew's, Greenock, in [illegible].

Rev. John Robertson, of Stonehaven, has held a series of evangelistic meetings in Moray Free Church, Edinburgh. Although the weather was very unpropitious, the hall was nightly filled with eager listeners, and there was much blessing.

A week of special evangelistic services have been held in Dr. John Brown's old church (U.P.) at Haddington; large congregations were attracted, and deeply impressive and stimulating addresses were delivered by the several brethren who took part.

At the opening of new class rooms added to the Established Church Training College at Aberdeen, Professor Milligan spoke in very complimentary terms of the character of the five hundred female teachers who have been sent out from the institution during the fifteen years of its existence.

Rev. R. W. Barbour, of Bonskeid, offers to pay outfit, passage, and salary of a missionary for China, in connection with the English Presbyterian Church. He promises that, when the Committee are in a position to undertake the cost of this new agent, he will do the same in the case of another.

The bi-centenary of the execution of James Renwick, the last of the Scottish martyrs, occurred on Friday last. Alluding to the martyrdom of Renwick in an address at Paisley, Rev. R. Dunlop said the best way to commemorate Renwick was to maintain the Scriptural principles for which he testified on the scaffold.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. W. G. Lawes and his devoted wife have arrived in Sydney from New Guinea, having come to recruit their health.

Rev. Edward Hamilton, late of Newbury, has entered upon his work at Southend-on-Sea. A cordial recognition service was held a few days ago.

Rev. J. S. Drummond, of Ormskirk, Lancashire, has accepted an invitation to [illegible] and [illegible] in co-operation with Rev. C. A. Berry, at Wolverhampton.

At a meeting of Congregational ministers at the Memorial Hall, on Tuesday week, Rev. Samuel A. Barnett, vicar of St. Jude's, Whitechapel, read a paper on "Culture and Religion."

Mr. Alfred Thompson, one of the missionary students in connection with the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. Foreign Missionary Society, has been appointed by the London Missionary Society to labour at [illegible], South India. He will sail for his new sphere of work next month.

Dr. Parker has asked his church to supply him with a colleague, "well trained, skilful, enthusiastic, to be a pastor amongst us, to gather up the young men, to consolidate the whole brotherhood, to make himself master of the district, as to its poverty, its necessities, its ignorance," and to do other work which the Doctor cannot accomplish. He says he knows just the man for the post, and would, at first, himself bear the cost of his support if his congregation would authorise him to engage such an one.

An enthusiastic meeting was held at the City Temple on Monday week, to welcome Dr. Parker back from his American tour.

Rev. Frank Soden, pastor of the church at Lower Clapton, has resigned his charge, owing to continued ill-health.

Over twenty of the scholars in the Sunday-school have decided for Christ as a result of a special mission at the Congregational Church, Hucknall Torkard, Notts., conducted by Rev. J. McClune Uffen, of Nottingham.

Rev. J. H. Budden, of Almora, North India, is retiring, after forty-six years of able and successful toil. Mr. Budden has worked nobly in many branches of missionary endeavour, and in his retirement the London Missionary Society loses one of its ablest workers and most successful leaders.

A Conference on holiness and the deepening of the spiritual life is being held at the Congregational Church, East Finchley, N., on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday this week. Meetings are held each day at 3.30 and 7.30. Revs. F. B. Meyer, J. B. Figgis, W. Guest, R. Balgarnie, and others were expected to take part.

METHODIST.

The [illegible] of Rev. Alexander M'Aulay and Mr. [illegible] in Jamaica is being attended with great blessing.

A "Temperance Army" has been formed at Llangefni, in Anglesea. At a Sunday evening meeting held in the Wesleyan Chapel eighty-nine persons joined the ranks.

Mr. James M. Cole, of Roxholm Hall, Sleaford, Lincolnshire, offers to give £20 towards the erection of ten Methodist chapels in any small country villages which are in need of them.

The American Episcopal Methodists having successfully crossed the "million dollar line" during the last year, have pledged themselves to raise during the present year 1,200,000 dollars (£240,000), for foreign mission.

On Saturday week at the Lycett Memorial (Wesleyan) Chapel, Sir Richard Temple, M.P., delivered an address on "India, and Christian Missions," which, says The Methodist Recorder, "was a powerful and conclusive apology for foreign missions."

An association of Methodist New Connexion ministers has been formed in London to strengthen and extend the Connexion in the Metropolis. All the London ministers are members, and in addition three lay representatives may be sent from each circuit or mission.

In connection with a mission at Birstall, conducted by Rev. Thomas Cook, 375 persons professed to find peace with God, whilst at Grimsby, as an outcome of special services held by Rev. Thomas Waugh, 400 have given in their names as anxious to join the Christian Church.

Rev. R. Browell, district missionary, has concluded a fortnight's revival services, which have been largely attended and very successful, in connection with the Wesleyan Society, Tadcaster. Over sixty adults have professed to find peace, and many of the Sunday-school scholars have been led to Christ during the mission.

Mr. O. L. Heatley, of the London Wesleyan Mission, on February 5 commenced a thirty-five days' mission in the Wesleyan chapels of the Devonport Circuit. His meetings at Morice-street and Gloucester-street Chapels have been most encouraging; he is now at Ker-street, and on Sunday next will begin work at Belmont Chapel, Stoke.

An eight days' mission has been held at Stoneycroft in connection with the Grove-street (Liverpool) Wesleyan Methodist circuit. The meetings were conducted by Rev. W. H. Tindall. It is stated that one man, who had not attended any place of worship for years, was attracted by the string band, and converted to God in one of the services. As a result of the mission, a mothers' meeting has been formed, and seventy or eighty families given into the hands of ladies who for some time will visit them weekly.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A Salvation Army band are making a tour through the North of Ireland. Their meetings have been largely attended, and many have professed conversion.

Successful evangelistic services have been concluded in the Comber and Charlemont Methodist Churches, and also in Westbourne Presbyterian Church, Belfast.

The Christian Advocate is pleading for the establishment of a Belfast Town Mission, with a Central Hall, similar to the Wesleyan Missions in Birmingham, Manchester, and London.

A most blessed revival of God's work, the like of which has not been witnessed for many years, has taken place in the town of Swanlinbar. Many careless young people were aroused and sought the Lord.

The annual meeting of the Belfast Domestic Mission was held last week in Belfast. The report showed a satisfactory state of affairs, and that the work of the Mission had been very successful during the year.

On Sunday evening week Revs. Samuel Prenter and George Hanson, Presbyterian ministers, interchanged pulpits with Revs. Wesley Guard and H. H. McMeekin, Methodists. This is an instance of Christian brotherliness which deserves to be widely imitated.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Mr. John Nixon, of Cloonean, Drumkeerin, an earnest Christian worker in the Methodist Church.—Rev. Edward Condell, Methodist minister, of Ballybay, a most promising young man in the fifth year of his ministry.—Rev. T. A. Pryce, pastor of Zion Baptist Chapel, [illegible].—Rev. John Graham, for forty-two years a faithful minister of the Methodist New Connexion.—Rev. John Wynne Jones, vicar of Bodedern, Anglesea, and formerly Archdeacon of Bangor.—Rev. John Leach Porter, for twenty years vicar of St. John's, Ladywood, Birmingham.—Mr. F. Stenhouse, of Trinity College, Oxford, a zealous worker for Christ among University men.—Rev. Dr. John Hewitt Jellett, provost of Trinity College, Dublin.—Rev. Sir St. Vincent Hammick, for fifty-two years vicar of Milton Abbotts, near Tavistock, Devon.

BILLINGSGATE CHRISTIAN MISSION.

Office: 83, LOWER THAMES STREET, E.C.

President: MR. F. A. BEVAN.

SPECIAL APPEAL FOR FUNDS

FOR THE

NEW MISSION PREMISES,

To be erected on a Site already secured in front of Billingsgate Market.

The name "Billingsgate" has, from time immemorial, been pecially associated in the minds of men with fish and rough manners, nd it was in order to bring about a better state of things that the London City Mission, some 14 years ago, appointed a special agent for ggressive Christian work in the district.

Quietly adapting himself to the needs of the case, personal intercourse with the men in the Market and on the pavement was the first plan adopted. Then, as the work grew, ten years ago, rooms for Mission purposes were obtained immediately opposite the Market.

Various agencies rapidly developed themselves, until a well-chosen Library of 1,000 volumes was established, a Reading-room and Day Refuge opened, and Gospel Services and Temperance Meetings initiated at various hours to meet special requirements.

Nor were the poor waifs who loiter about the Market and neighbourhood overlooked.

For them was provided Free Breakfasts, Soup Suppers, Night Shelter at respectable Lodging-houses, and daily supplies of food at our coffee stalls by means of tickets which could not be exchanged elsewhere, while they were counselled and sympathised with, and in many cases led to the Saviour.

Eventually, in the spring of 1886, this blessed work was almost brought to a standstill by the removal of the house for municipal improvements—viz., the extension of Arthur-street East from the Monument to the Market.

But, with the needs of those amongst whom we labour pressing heavily upon our hearts, and encouraged by past tokens of divine favour and blessing, we continued to submit our case to Him by whom we believe we have been called to this work, and whose servants we are, with the result that our President, Mr. F. A. Bevan, who has shown a warm interest in the movement from its commencement, has just secured for us, on a long lease, a most valuable site immediately fronting the Market (part of the ground rendered vacant by the improvements previously referred to), and which is, in our judgment, admirably adapted for the purpose we have in view.

Our plan is to erect a Coffee Tavern, with a commodious Gospel Hall above, and various rooms and offices as Reading-rooms, Library, Refuge, &c. The estimated cost is about £4,000.

It is computed that there is a daily attendance of 10,000 men, composed of Fish and Fruit Salesmen, Buyers, Clerks, Porters and others, in this locality.

We earnestly appeal for your generous help, as our work has been so long tried and proved.

We labour daily amongst men who peculiarly appeal to your sympathy. They are, for the greater part, a poor but industrial class, exposed to many trials and temptations.

We have proved them to be susceptible to kindness and open to receive instruction; and, from their peculiar habits and hours of business, they are not reached by any other agencies of a similar character.

We should like to add that the services of those connected with the Mission are rendered quite gratuitously, that a yearly report of the work is printed (a copy of which will be gladly supplied to any friend who may desire it), and that the building, when completed, will be vested in the hands of trustees.

We feel sure that our work will commend itself to your judgment, enlist your warmest sympathy, and find prompt and practical expression of approval in the form of a Subscription or Donation to our fund.

We are, faithfully yours,

W. H. WILLIAMSON, Hon. Treasurer, 30, Fish Street Hill, London, E.C.
ALFRED WALTERS, Hon. Secretary, 10, Billingsgate Market, London, E.C.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY 12,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity. Hundreds of poor men have been gathered in, and their need supplied, while scores have been turned away, for want of room, in the most destitute condition.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the Secretary; or Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the Editors of "The Christian."

MR. WILLIAM WHITE, J.P.,

Alderman, Birmingham.

A SHORT time ago we published an account of a visit to the Severn-street Adult Sunday-school in Birmingham, in which reference was made to the teacher of the first class, Mr. ALDERMAN WHITE, whose portrait accompanies this brief sketch of his career. Mr. White has been an indefatigable worker in this school for forty years. When, in 1848, he went from Reading to live in Birmingham, the school had been established about three years, under the care of some members of the Society of Friends, of which Society he was a member, and is now a minister. He at once began to teach in the school, which at that time numbered 100 scholars. Now Mr. White has three times that number in his class alone, and the total number of scholars in the school exceeds 3000.

Compassionate, gentle, and tender-hearted, Mr. White speedily won the admiration and affection of his scholars and his fellow-teachers. He has deservedly acquired a peculiarly powerful sway over the minds of his scholars, who speak of him with great affection as "our dear teacher, William White." We have before us many testimonies of the enduring spiritual and temporal good that numbers of them have obtained through his teaching. Our space is too limited to quote from them. They all tell of lives made pure, of homes made happy, and of hearts filled with love for our Lord, and with an ever-increasing delight in the perusal of the Scriptures.

A work which was found so useful and so successful in Birmingham was worthy of emulation elsewhere, and, thirty years ago, Mr. White, with one or two others, particularly with Mr. J. S. Fry, of Bristol, the clerk of the Friends' Yearly Meeting, travelled over England and Ireland, urging the formation of such schools; and at this time they exist in connection with the Society of Friends in many places, and are attended by more than 22,000 adults. But Mr. White has not confined his advocacy of these schools within the borders of his own Society. Many have been called into existence by his exertions, which are in connection with the Church of England, and the places of worship of Baptists, Congregationalists, and Methodists. His broad-minded and unsectarian zeal has been fitly recognised in the Midlands by his election as President of the Association of all the adult Sunday-schools within twelve miles of Birmingham, which are attended by over 20,000 scholars, and which are taught by members of every denomination of Christians.

Mr. White was born and educated in Reading. When quite a boy he began to teach in a Sunday-school, and his success as a teacher was such as to indicate to observing minds the sphere in which his usefulness would find its greatest scope. When he was about twenty years old he united with several young Friends to form and carry on a Sunday-school in the poorest and most squalid district in Reading. At that time he was a member of the Wesleyan Methodist body, but, brought into association with Friends, he was attracted by their simplicity of life and gentle quietness of demeanour, and soon afterwards became a member, and subsequently a recognised minister in that Society. He has travelled much, and there are few places of any importance in England or Ireland where he has not preached the Gospel of Christ with life and power. He has very considerable literary skill, and is the author of a goodly work entitled, "Friends in Warwickshire," and of various pamphlets elucidating the principles of the Society of Friends. He is also the editor of The Monthly Record, a magazine which reports the doings of the adult Sunday-schools, and of the Friends' foreign missions.

Distinguished as Mr. White has been for many years as a teacher in and popular advocate of adult Sunday-schools, he is scarcely less distinguished amongst the advocates of temperance. When fifteen years old, at a time when teetotalism was a strange and unpopular practice, he signed the total abstinence pledge, and joined the order of the Rechabites. He quickly sprang to the front as a platform speaker, and five years after was elected the chief ruler of that admirable body of teetotallers.

Fifty years ago a large amount of moral and physical courage was required in the advocate of temperance, who encountered much violent opposition, and received little support or sympathy. Mr. White has always possessed a singular suavity of manner, which, combined with great fearlessness, admirably fitted him to meet and overcome opposition. When he was about twenty years old he was appointed secretary of the Berkshire Temperance Association, and in that capacity visited all the towns and villages in that county, advocating teetotalism. He met with many rebuffs, and much rough treatment, but he was able to plant good seed, which bears fruit in many places to-day; and he learned for himself that as steel is tempered by great heat, so the true man is softened and strengthened in the heat of passionate opposition.

In 1855, Mr. White, in conjunction with the late Joseph Sturge, commenced the Band of Hope movement in Birmingham. He visited most of the Sunday-schools in that town, and by his eloquent entreaties induced many of the teachers and scholars to interest themselves in this excellent work. A very large Band of Hope Union has existed for some years in Birmingham, of which Mr. White has been the president for twenty years. He is officially connected with every phase of temperance work. He is president of the Birmingham Branch of the United Kingdom Alliance, the honorary secretary of the Birmingham Temperance Society, the Chairman of the Birmingham Coffee-house movement, and a director of the Blue Ribbon Association. He celebrated his temperance jubilee on February 9, 1886, by inviting representatives of all the temperance organisations in and about Birmingham to partake of his hospitality. The enthusiastic cheers which followed his speech at that time, wherein he recounted with humour and pathos some of the early struggles of the temperance cause, were intended to express the unanimous opinion of his fellow-workers, that in those struggles Mr. White's energies have never flagged, and his loyalty to the cause has never swerved.

It was not till 1873 that Mr. White was induced to take an active part in the municipal life of Birmingham. A powerful representative of the Licensed Victuallers' Association was then seeking election to the Town Council, and Mr. White was prevailed upon to become the champion of temperance to oppose him. After a severe contest Mr. White was elected. Very speedily it was found that his knowledge of the habits and homes of the poor would be of the highest service to the town. This knowledge had been acquired in the frequent visits which he had made to the homes of the scholars of Severn-street School, and by ceaselessly interesting himself in the lives of the very poor.

In 1875, the Town Council adopted a great Improvement Scheme, under the Artizans' Dwellings Improvement Act, which was to clear a vast area infected with disease, caused by overcrowding, and to substitute for the wretched dilapidated dwellings houses in which the poor might live in comfort and health. Mr. White was unanimously elected to be Chairman of the Committee appointed to carry out the scheme. In that capacity he made a very able report upon the character of the district which it affected, which was so valuable and interesting that it was ordered to be printed. It shows that he not only visited the miserable habitations of 10,000 of the poorest of his fellow townsfolk, but also that, having listened with sympathy to their many tales of sorrow and suffering, he was resolved and able to find a remedy for many of their ills.

In connection with the then mayor, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, M.P., he controlled the execution of the Improvement Scheme with so much ability, and performed all the arduous and wearisome duties of his post with such tact and skill, that, in 1882, his colleagues unanimously elected him to be Mayor of Birmingham. Into this high office Mr. White carried his gentleness and generosity, and adorned it by his many virtues. He used his distinguished position to give greater force to his teaching of religion and temperance by an exalted example. He gave the prestige of his official recognition to Sunday-schools, Bands of Hope, and every other kind of religious and temperance work. His mayoral receptions and conversaziones were given to those who were engaged in such work. All his great civic hospitalities exhibited the desire which has been evident in all his life's work: to win the affection of the lowly rather than the adulation of the great. His term of office will be long remembered for his generous entertainments given to those who are mostly unnoticed by town magnates, the lowest class of corporation employés, the police, the postmen, and the telegraph boys.

During his mayoralty, in 1883, Mr. White was elected an alderman, and in the following year he was appointed a Justice of the Peace. For some years he has been Chairman of the Baths and Parks Committee of the Town Council, and in that position has exhibited his constant thoughtfulness for the poor by promoting the multiplication of public parks, and the conversion of disused churchyards, and waste public spaces, into gardens and playgrounds for the enjoyment of the poor and their children.

Mr. White is the senior partner of the firm of Messrs. White & Pike, printers and stationers; they employ over three hundred hands, who regard him as a friend to whom they can go for advice or assistance whenever they need either. His energies and his benevolence seem to be never tired or overtaxed. His eminently useful and successful career, which we fervently hope is still far from its close, is a brilliant example of the rich blessing which attends the man who is "not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord."

THE BRUSSELS EXHIBITION, 1888,—The important International Exhibition to be held this year at Brussels is likely to be utilised for the advancement of the Saviour's kingdom. Pastor de Jonge, conductor of the Brussels City Mission and Flemish Training School, is proposing to obtain a piece of ground on which to erect the tent which did such good service at the Exhibition of 1880; he hopes, with the assistance of the Belgian Missionary Church, to organise daily services in the Flemish, French, and German languages. The Monthly Tract Society intends also to erect a kiosque for the distribution of tracts in all languages. I hope many of your readers will join in prayer and help for a blessing on these efforts.

SPRING'S TOKENS.

"Behold, I come quickly."—REV. xxii. 7.

"THIS is not spring,
Ah, no!"
So cry the many voices of despair.
"The birds may homeward wing,
The zephyrs whisper low, [bare,
The catkins deck the hedgerows brown and
And even daisies spring up here and there.
This is not spring;
For bitter winds will blow, [air:
And hailstorms whistle through the startled
To-day the sun shines fair,
To-morrow's clouds declare
That winter still is king."
Yet hark! Spring whispering:
"Lift up your hearts, I come;
Forth from my sunny home
I send these signs, my messages to bring.'
Look forward to the light,
And ere the day be bright,
Keep watch upon the tower.
Sing till the streaks of dawn
Have spread, and night is gone.
Happy the heart that watches in that hour.

Our spring, too, draweth nigh:
Dawn reddens in the sky. [spread.
Soon far and wide the glorious beams shall
Yes! Let the signs be read
With hopeful eyes that greet each token near.
Lift up your hearts, and cry,
In sweet expectancy,
"Our spring will soon be here."
Thus in our souls shall ring,
Though sunshine come and go, [spring;
The heavenly chimes which herald in the
Each token welcoming,
As sign of what the future will bestow.
And so
We wait, and, waiting, sing.

THE PALMER-PLACE MISSION.

THE work of this Mission, which was briefly referred to in last week's issue, is carried on mainly by the exertions of Mr. M. H. Rackstraw, of Upper-street, Islington, and his employés. There are other large business establishments where ready workers might be found if similar agencies were organised. In Mr. Rackstraw's houses this work is the outcome of the mission held by Messrs. Moody & Sankey, at the Priory, Islington. On that occasion many persons in Mr. Rackstraw's establishment were converted. Since then Bible-classes have been held, and Gospel addresses given in the house at intervals by many honoured servants of the Lord. A blessing has attended their labours.

One of the agencies of this interesting mission is the Bible-class Aid Society, which is supported mainly by monthly subscriptions from the assistants in the house. The work of dispensing relief is also carried on by the assistants, who go in pairs and visit the poor in their homes in the neighbourhood.

The Ladies' Dorcas Society is also carried on by the assistants, many of whom give one night a week to the making of useful garments, which are given away when needed. The free breakfasts, Sunday-school, and Gospel services connected with the Mission are the means of doing much good. Mr. Rackstraw's assistants welcome help from any who seek the glory of God.

GIFTS OF PHOTOGRAPHS TO INSTITUTIONS.—The directors of the London Stereoscopic Company announce that on the closing, at the end of this month, of the third annual exhibition of photographs taken by amateurs, now being held at their gallery in Regent-street, the whole of the 4000 photographs sent in for competition will, with the exception of the prize pictures, be distributed among various hospitals and charities. Applications for the pictures should be addressed, not later than March 15, to the Manager, London Stereoscopic and Photographic Company, Limited, 108 and 110, Regent-street, W.

NOTES ON DOCTRINES.—1.

THE present unsettlement of mind as to the truths of the Gospel is not an unmixed evil. Some of the views which are causing so much disquietude are the result of a reaction of mind and feeling from exaggerated statements in the opposite direction. Some may even be corrections of errors which have come down to us from Reformation or earlier times. We must, therefore, distinguish between the condemnation of evil doctrines, and the condemnation of those who hold them. Paul obtained mercy because he sinned ignorantly in unbelief. It behoves us to remember the "beam" and the "mote," and that we must pull the beam of pride or jealousy or any other evil thing out of our own eye, before we are able to see clearly to take the mote out of our brother's eye. And if anyone be overtaken by an error of doctrine the spiritual ones must seek to restore him, in the spirit of meekness, considering themselves lest they also be tempted.

In our discussions of Scripture truths it is very necessary to keep close to Scripture, and to see that the same words are used n the same sense by all parties in the discussion.

PROBATION AFTER DEATH.

We are in unqualified and unreserved sympathy with those who contend that probation after death is no part of the Gospel of God. When the Duke of Wellington was asked if he thought it worth while o carry the good tidings to the heathen, he imply asked, "What are your marching orders?" That is the main question for all who claim to be ambassadors of Christ.

The risen Lord commanded his disciples, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that disbelieveth shall be condemned" (Mark xvi. 15, 16, R.V.) There is no hint here of any probation beyond the present life. In the body Adam sinned; Jesus his own self bare ur sins in his own body on the tree; with egard to the deeds done in the body the aints are to be manifested before the judgment seat of Christ; and the judgment of he sheep and the goats, and that of the reat white throne, relate to the life lived n the body upon earth. Unless it were xpressly stated, there could be no reason to xpect another probation of the soul and pirit, after they have been separated from he body. For one who claims to be an ambassador of Christ to declare that he had ooked into the face of the dying Son of God, nd gathered thence a "larger hope"; and or him to supplement, with that false hope, he Gospel which the risen Christ commissioned his disciples to preach to every reature under heaven, is (how little soever t may be so intended or understood) downight treason to the King, and a cruel rifling with the souls of men.

JUDGMENT OF THE HEATHEN.

Scripture never says, nor even hints, that he heathen will be judged for the rejection f a Saviour of whom they never heard. hey will be judged for the rejection of the ght and knowledge of God which they ave, and no more. "For the invisible hings of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by he things that are made, even his eternal ower and Godhead; so that they are without excuse" (Rom. i. 20; and compare x. 8 with Ps. xix. 4). On the other hand, this is the condemnation [of those who ave heard the Gospel], that light is come nto the world, and men loved the darkness rather than the light, because their deeds were evil."

SUBSTITUTION AND UNION.

Substitution, as a description of the Gospel, is true so far as it goes; and the typical sacrifices of the Old Testament did not teach more than this—that the sins of the people were laid upon a sinless Substitute, who suffered in the sinner's stead. Nor does Isaiah liii., nor even John the Baptist's testimony to the sin-bearing Lamb of God, carry us beyond the truth of substitution. But the Epistles teach us far more —even union with Christ. As by birth we are one with Adam, so by regeneration we are one with Christ. As in Adam all sinned (Rom. v. 12), so are we made the righteousness of God in Christ (2 Cor. v. 21.) "As by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous." "We are baptized into his death." "We are in Him that is true"..."Our life is hid with Christ in God."

BELIEVING GOD.

HEBREWS XI.

IN this Divine list of overcomers we have the simple fact recorded of Abraham, that he "believed God." It is not much to say. It is the common practice of our everyday life to act on the word of those we have to deal with. But it meant much to Abraham; it gained for him the heirship of the righteousness of faith, and the priceless friendship of God. All his earthly prosperity and all his heavenly blessing hung upon this habit of believing. It was not attainment in grace, or activity in service, or denial of himself; it was the conclusion of Abraham's judgment that God was faithful, and the consequent exercise of Abraham's trust in the word He had spoken. And so, when God called him, he went out, "not knowing whither he went." And yet Abraham did not go without unfailing guarantee, for God knew, and God had promised. He forfeited nothing when he left behind him Ur of the Chaldees, to go into a land which he should after receive for an inheritance; because the truth of the promise was a reality to Abraham, and he merely exchanged a place of sojourn for the certainty of an abiding rest.

Have we, like Abraham, chosen the promise and oath of Jehovah before the passing shadows around us? Then let us talk of getting and of gaining, and never of giving up for God. There is a danger of dwelling on our faith until it seems to be magnified into a something that we bring to God as a kind of barter, if not an equivalent, for the fulness of grace and glory so freely opened up to us; as though, if we have much faith, God is responsible to give us much blessing. Are we beginning at the wrong end, and unknowingly putting God last in the reckoning of our account? This would be a fatal mistake, as all our enriching depends on giving Him the glory.

God had promised Abraham sevenfold blessing, as we read in Genesis xii. 2, 3. These things were freely bestowed. He was to offer nothing in exchange, only it was clearly necessary for him to believe the word of promise, that he might possess them. All the wealth of blessing depended upon his saying "Yes" or "No" to God. Whether to accept it, or to let it slip, was a question for Abraham. God, in grace, might make much of Abraham's faith: He might count it to him for righteousness, because it was the one thing that linked Abraham's feebleness with Almighty strength; and yet it was simply believing, because he could do nothing else with the word of Jehovah.

At Beersheba, there came the crowning test of obedience, "Go, take thy son, thine only son, Isaac, whom thou lovest." God knew what He was asking of Abraham. He dwelt upon the reasons that would make it impossible to nature to obey. But it was not impossible to faith. It was not because Abraham loved Isaac less; not because he was willing to forego the promises; but because still he trusted in the word that he had proved before. He knew God would do as He had said, and he was not careful to know how He would do it. He looked past all the impossibilities to the promise which could not be broken, "In Isaac shall thy seed be called." It was God's part to see to the fulfilment of his own word: it was Abraham's only to obey. And thus he reaped all the blessing, and God got all the glory of that wondrous act of what seemed blind obedience; but it was obedience to God, and, therefore, blessedly safe obedience.

But let us look closer, and see what sustained Abraham in the fiery trial of his faith as he rose early in the morning, hastening to the place which God had told him of, and pursued for three days his journey to the mountain of sacrifice. We are not told of one word of pleading, of one sign sought for of the meaning of God's dealing, or the truth of God's promise. Abraham's power was this—he began with God. It was not a question of Abraham's faith, but of God's faithfulness. If his eye had been upon his faith, he would have fainted in the way. But he put God first. God's promise: God's oath. Abraham kept fast hold of these. He got his eye filled with GOD, and then he could look calmly upon Isaac. Reminding us of One, infinitely more blessed, the Author and Perfecter of faith, who once for sinners stedfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem, hastening to the hour of wrath and of forsaking: trusting while He sank in the deep mire, because He knew, even there, God's deeper faithfulness.

But Abraham never tasted the forsaking: the dregs of this cup of trembling were wrung out by God's beloved Son, when He took upon his spotless soul the curse of our sin, and there was none to help. God found no ram caught in a thicket that He might deliver Jesus. And so the last wave of wrath passed over Him, that there might be none left for us.

When Abraham must cast out the bondwoman and her son, it was very grievous in his sight, yet we read of no grief for the heir of the promise. In this deeper trouble, Abraham did not look from it up to God, but he looked down from God upon the trouble. There is a difference. It is well to look out of the depths to our God, better still, in fellowship with Him, to look upon the depths, which, for reasons known to Himself, He may call upon us to pass through.

Have we thus believed God? Have we so trusted, not only for salvation from the day of wrath, but trusted that we may glorify Him? Have we let ourselves go in the tide of blessing and of rest which He has made our rightful portion in Christ Jesus—believed his word, not in one particular only, or in two, but altogether, to be all He has promised to us, his redeemed ones. Then, as our hearts get filled with his faithfulness, the depth and height of his grace and love to us, we shall be carried out of ourselves before we know it; out of sight of the feebleness of our faith, and all that is our own, into the unspeakable rest of his presence.

THE LAND AND THE BOOK.

The last of Rev. James Neil's course of lectures in Exeter Hall was delivered on Monday evening last week, before a crowded audience, who listened with intense interest. The subject was, "More Similitudes; or, Further Light on the Least-known Branch of Bible Study." The Hon. H. Dudley Ryder, presided.

Mr. Neil, having defined the first of the figures of Syntax, Ellipsis, or Omission, to be "the leaving out from a sentence of a word or words necessary to complete the grammatical construction, but not absolutely necessary to make out the meaning," proceeded to give, amongst others, the following important Scriptural instances.

THE ANSWER TO PRAYER.

This figure of Omission throws light on a number of passages which in our day are, by many people being taken literally, and thus made to teach what the Spirit of God never meant them to convey. I allude to such words as those of our Lord, "If ye have faith ye shall say to this mountain, 'Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea,' and it shall be done. And all things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." I must confess that these words were once a great difficulty to me, and not least so when the Jews in Palestine, to whom I was preaching, stopped me to quote them, and then putting a Bible on the ground, said, "Now if you have faith you can make that move at least a foot—we won't ask you to move yonder mountain—and, if you really are able to make it move, we will all believe in Jesus and be baptized!" But I see it clearly enough, now. Even Jesus our Master, the Great Exemplar of a perfect faith, as Matthew himself tells us, when praying in an agony of earnestness and trust to be delivered from that which his human soul so greatly feared, after He had cried, "Let this cup pass from Me"—and who doubts that it was the prayer of faith—immediately adds, "Not as I will, but as Thou wilt." Again, on praying the second time about it, He added, "Thy will be done." Don't you see that this is the essential, inseparable complement of every prayer: "Not as I will, but as Thou wilt"? It is, and must be, in the very nature of things, understood in every petition that is offered by us short-sighted, ignorant, finite children to the infinite wisdom of our Heavenly Father! The figure of Ellipsis, which human frailty and Divine sovereignty alike demand, is here, and the words simply mean, "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, if it be my Heavenly Father's will, ye shall receive." So when the Lord Christ says, "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask anything in my name I will do it," the same explanation applies, and the same necessary reservation of infinite wisdom, sovereign power, and perfect goodness is clearly conveyed under the figure of Ellipsis.

THE KISS OF SALUTATION.

This figure throws a flood of light on a still greater difficulty. Five times in the Epistles the command occurs for believers to kiss one another. We first find it in Paul's letter to the Romans, "Salute one another with a holy kiss." Three times afterwards this Apostle repeats it. Again it occurs in Peter—the Apostle of the circumcision agreeing with the Apostle of the Gentiles in enforcing the same truth—"Salute one another with a holy kiss." It cannot be doubted that the command to kiss thus solemnly repeated five times is, in its true meaning, as binding as any other command of the Gospel. The kiss enjoined is evidently that of friendly salutation, such as passes between equals as the ordinary act of Syrian greeting. They do not, on meeting one another, shake hands as we do. Each in turn lays his right hand on the other's left shoulder, and kisses his right cheek, and then, reversing the action, places his left hand on the other's right shoulder and kisses his left cheek. This was the way in which Absalom flattered the common people when he was trying to draw away their hearts from his father David. Our Lord upbraided Simon the Pharisee, who had invited him to dinner, with his unkind and contemptuous behaviour, in the words, "Thou gavest Me no kiss," or, as we should say, "You did not shake hands with Me;" for the proud, unconverted Pharisee did not care to appear too intimate with the lowly "Man of sorrows," the despised carpenter-prophet!

"If the Holy Spirit had been writing in our age and clime, instead of eighteen hundred years ago in the East, we may say, with all reverence, but with perfect certainty, that He would have commanded believers to 'salute one another with a holy shaking of hands'; to meet, that is, as brethren of one rank before God, members of the same body, children of the same father. 'Let the brother who [is] low, glory in his exaltation; but the rich in his humiliation.' Let it not be said that 'you have dishonoured the poor man,' or that 'you have respect to persons.' This is the glorious truth contained in the words, 'Salute one another with a holy kiss.'" So Chrysostom explains it in his Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans. This is why believers, high and low, rich and poor, learned and simple, are called "brethren" 133 times in the New Testament. This spiritual equality before God is stated by the Master in the plainest possible terms of Matthew xx. 25—28 and xxiii. 8—12. Christ, addressing his disciples, says, "All ye are Brethren." Around Him his whole Church is gathered as one universal brotherhood, to whom a common ruin in sin, a common redemption through his blood, and a common renewal by his Spirit has levelled all earthly distinctions of birth, rank, wealth, or intellect, and brought all alike as sons and daughters of the Heavenly Father, joint heirs with Himself, into the "fellowship of the saints," making them in a word "perfect in one."

Christ, in the spirit and precepts of his Gospel, has fully met men's yearnings for a universal brotherhood, and has provided a noble plan of levelling up, by lowliness and love, which a mistaken modern communism is parodying by a proud, loveless levelling down.

NO PRIESTLY CASTE IN THE CHURCH.

Consider a most important aspect of the "kiss of peace," which I have shown to be simply the pledge and token of all Christ's people meeting together as brethren and spiritual equals. The account given everywhere in the New Testament, of the Church as one great brotherhood of saved men of all sorts and conditions gathered around Christ in perfect spiritual equality, children of one Father, fellow-servants of one Master, and taught, without any distinction, not only to regard one another as friends and equals, but even to esteem each other better than themselves, and to submit themselves one to another, in the very nature of things, utterly precludes the existence, within that Church, of a priestly caste. Such a fundamental view of the Ecclesia (the "Church," or "Assembly," as the word means) positively and for ever settles this point, and razes to the ground the very stronghold of Anti-Christ's superstition. It leaves no place or possibility for the lofty claims of a special sacerdotal class. "One is your Master, even Christ, and ALL YE ARE BRETHREN." All of you, without exception, as redeemed men, are "equal in dignity, in destiny, in privilege; a spiritual republic, a theocratic family." But if, in the Church of Christ, one order of men had been set apart to offer up a sacrifice for the living and the dead, to hear the confessions and pronounce the absolution of the rest, to act as their sole judges and rulers, to stand as the indispensable mediators between God and man, to be clothed, in a word, with far more powers and privileges than were bestowed on the Jewish, or claimed by the Pagan, priesthood, surely, instead of believers being commanded to "salute one another with a holy kiss," as being all alike on one perfect spiritual equality, they would have been commanded to kiss the hand of the priest, in token of the lowliest submission!

Here we are led to right views of the ministry. Service not Rule is its distinguishing feature. Whosoever of you would become great shall be your servant; and whosoever would be chief [or first] among you shall be your slave. Even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many. It has been well said, "The officers of a Christian Church are simply a body of men who are willing to become their brethren's ministers (that is, servants)—to take upon themselves additional labours and responsibilities for their brethren's benefit, which they are not bound, otherwise than through love, to perform. The characteristics of a Christian minister, ideally considered, are humility and kindness and self-denial. The whole worth and significance of his service are that it be done for the society's sake, and not for his own. Having no interests to seek, but some to renounce; finding his wages mainly in his work; denying himself for the sake of others, and desiring not to be ministered unto but to minister; superior to his brethren only because more like his Lord, and honourable only in virtue of his humbleness—such is a Christian minister."

These lectures have proved most successful. Young men have said that they were inclined to so-called "High Church" views; but, since hearing the lectures, they have seen things quite differently. All who value simple, earnest, evangelical, Protestant teaching in these days should make a point of hearing Mr. Neil.

OUR SAILORS.

On Tuesday evening last week, Lord Brassey, president of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society, met a large number of its friends and supporters, at a conversazione, in the Stepney Meeting Schoolroom, Stepney-green. Rev. E. W. Matthews, secretary, pointed out that this is the seventieth year of the Society, whose efforts extend to sailors of all nations. The Society is not in debt; with increased funds, however, it could do much more work in various parts of the world. Rev. J. Kennedy, D.D., and Rev. W. Tyler, D.D., who have been on the board of management 41 and 36 years, respectively, in a few words welcomed the President, and spoke of the importance of the work of the Society.

Lord Brassey bore testimony, from personal observation, to the great usefulness of the Society. He pleaded its cause without reserve, saying that instead of spending £12,000 per annum, the Society could well apply four or five times that sum. Mr. J. Herbert Tritton spoke cheerfully of the success which had attended attempts made, by agreement with foreign countries, to put a stop to the baneful practice of "crimping." He besought Lord Brassey's assistance to obtain the co-operation of France and Belgium in this direction. Mr. Thomas Scrutton said that there are in London 10,000 sailors. Hundreds of thousands of pounds of these men's wages are saved every year from the crimps, thanks to legislation, and the action of the sailors' friends. At San Francisco, however, the system is still doing its demoralising work.

ORPHAN HOMES OF SCOTLAND.—The new church erected in connection with Mr. Quarrier's Homes at Bridge of Weir is to be publicly opened by services on Tuesday next, March 6. The first party of boys for Canada will sail about the middle of March, a fortnight earlier than usual. As our readers may recollect, Fairknowe, Brockville, Ontario, is now the Canadian Distributing Home connected with the work.

SIN IN THE SAINT'S HEART.

DR. ALEXANDER WHYTE'S Bunyan lecture in Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh, last week, was based upon the following extract from the ninety-sixth paragraph of "Grace Abounding":—"Whole floods of blasphemies, both against God, Christ, and the Scriptures, were poured upon my spirit to my great confusion and astonishment." At the opening of the lecture a comparison was instituted between Bunyan's book and the memoirs of Fraser of Brae. Dr. Whyte said he always liked to think of the two together, for they were brethren in tribulation, and we are the heirs of their splendid faithfulness. Fraser's book had an extraordinary value of its own, although he lacked Bunyan's imagination, dramatic power, and sweetness of spirit. He regarded his book as one of the four great books written on experimental religion. After choosing the subject of that lecture he had often shied at it, and felt a strong inclination to pass by the page, and fix on another. And he would have done it if he had not read the sixth chapter of Fraser's Memoirs, where he says that he could never get book or minister to speak to his case. After reading that, he said to himself, What am I that I should not give what is put into my hand? Perhaps, I thought, there may be some blasphemer in the prayer-meeting of Tuesday night, some young Edinburgh tradesman, or an earnest student who has had his faith shaken and stands in need of this word.

John Bunyan expected that his "Grace Abounding" would be read by some who felt they had sinned against the light, and therefore he was not afraid to sound the deepest depths of his past life. Our Lord said that "Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, blasphemies." What does that word "blasphemy" mean? The Greek word means evil-speaking, but in our language the word has been appropriated to mean evil-speaking against God. Bunyan and Fraser make blasphemy to mean anything from atheism to a momentary forgetfulness of God, and they regard irreverence even in the saintliest and most watchful soul as being of the nature of blasphemy. Thomas Goodwin says, "There are secret entrails of atheism in us all." All these things direct our thoughts to that great mystery of Satan's power over regenerate men. The power of sin and Satan in a regenerate heart is one of the darkest mysteries of our faith. When our Lord said that blasphemies proceed out of the heart of man he was speaking of the unregenerate man, but the difficulty is as to how sin gets into the heart of those who are regenerate. How is it that regeneration does not take away all our natural aversion to goodness and those entrails of atheism? To that mysterious region of sin's power over the regenerate heart all this belongs. Philosophy does not deal with this subject; your boy will never hear of it at college. It is only the Puritan theology that opens up the inner life, and deals with such mysteries as these.

Fraser in his book indicates some of the ends of God in permitting man to be tempted with blasphemous thoughts:—(1) We are thus tempted that we may see the evil of our own hearts in such a degree as we never saw it before. (2) To acquaint us with the Lord's ways of conversion and the terrors of the law. (3) To make us live by faith and wean us from sense and feeling. In addition to these ends of God, Fraser points out some lessons for us to learn:—(1) That there is much corruption to be mortified in every religious man. (2) That the greatest flowings have also the greatest ebbings. He means that the greatest saints have the deepest consciousness of sin and grace; and if you know nothing of the ebbings it is because you know nothing of the flowings. (3) Folks most often have sharper convictions of sin after conversion than before. (4) The evil under which the soul mourns will never destroy it. Bunyan took comfort from the fact that those blasphemies which flooded his soul were distasteful to him. How do you entertain those thoughts of evil with which you are sometimes invaded? Can you say that you hate both them and yourself for entertaining them? If you can, that is an evidence of grace, although it may not give you much comfort. Distaste of sin is the best evidence of grace.

REVIVAL INCIDENTS.—4.

THE prayer-meeting was about to close, and I had just finished pleading with an avowed atheist, when he turned sharply round upon me, saying, "If your God can save anybody, why does He not do something for that poor chap," pointing to one of the most ugly and depraved young men I have ever met. He was a criminal, and the son of a criminal, his father at that very time being in penal servitude.

I confess, with shame, that even I looked upon his case as hopeless, but the taunt of the atheist had stung me, and sent me away dumb; do what I would, I could not shake it off, and I felt utterly wretched. That night, at family prayers, I happened to read Psalm xlii., and was much impressed with the last verse: "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope thou in God." While engaged in prayer, the words, "With God all things are possible," came tremblingly from my lips, and I was enabled to hope that the poor criminal youth might yet be won as a trophy for the Lord Jesus.

The next night he was at the meeting, and sitting close to the atheist. With a strange feeling of timidity I approached him, and told him I had been praying for him, at which he burst into a loud jeering laugh. I began to tell him it was no laughing matter, when he deliberately spit in my face, and hurriedly left the hall. While I was wiping my face a small Christian boy laughingly said to me, "If at first you don't succeed, try, try, try again." And I did try again, many a dozen times, but seemingly to no purpose. Suddenly we missed the youth from the meetings, and on inquiry I found that he had gone to prison once again for six weeks. A few of us prayed for him daily, and arranged that on his release from the House of Correction I should meet him, and bring him home to breakfast.

The morning arrived, and a beef-steak was being grilled for him, and I was standing outside the gaol patiently waiting. Soon the iron gates opened, and out he came, looking so fearfully evil and ferocious that—how shall I write it?—I ran away as fast as my legs would carry me, and did not stop till I was safe inside my own home, when I felt like a second Jonah! But that night, and the next, he was present at the meetings, after each of which we had a special half-hour prayer-meeting, pleading with God on his behalf. He stayed to both.

When we had finished prayer on the last night, and were about to leave, we noticed that he did not move, but sat with his head buried in his hands. On my asking him if anything was the matter, he burst into tears, and said, "I don't know; I feel like a blooming baby, I never remember crying before." We asked whether we should pray with him. "Yes, if you like," he said, and quite a little crowd of us were soon on our knees. As may be imagined, there was no little emotion manifested, while, with tears, we made our requests known unto God, with the result that poor N——, so ignorant that he did not even know the alphabet, so wicked that he was looked upon as a kind of outlaw, left that service in possession of "the gift of God, which is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Very many beloved friends seemed afraid that the change was not real, and that it might prove a nine days' wonder. But a little incident happened on the ninth day which wonderfully strengthened our faith in the reality of his conversion. Poor N—— was met by an unconverted priest, who stopped him and sneeringly said, "I hear you have been converted." "Yes, sir," was the reply. "Well, now, have the goodness to tell me how you know that?" The question was asked in a sarcastic manner, and poor N—— was terribly confused. He had no religious phraseology at his command, and could answer nothing. Then the priest reproachfully said, "I tell you what, N——, God can do without such chaps as you." Poor N—— looked up, with tears streaming down his rough cheeks, and replied, "Yes, sir; you are quite right. God can do without N——, but poor N—— cannot do without God!"

It is now four years since this incident occurred. A few months ago I heard that N—— is still a humble, steadfast, devoted follower of his Lord and Master Jesus Christ, who came into the world to save sinners, not excepting the very chief. J. B. W.

A GOOD WORK AT BARNES.

AN evangelistic mission, which was commenced nine years ago in a poor district, known as Westfields, Barnes, has from time to time been brought before our readers. During these nine years members of the Evangelisation Society have preached the Gospel three times weekly, in a small room holding only one hundred and twenty people. Evangelistic and temperance work of all kinds has also been systematically carried on. The work has been much blessed, and the services so well attended that a hall capable to hold nearly three hundred people has been built opposite the old room.

The opening services will (D.V.) be held on Tuesday, March 20, at 4 and 7.30 p.m. Friends of the work are specially invited to be present. A mission will be commenced in the hall on March 21, conducted by Mr. E. Matthews and Mr. H. Murch, of the Evangelisation Society. Any help towards the needs of the work will be thankfully received by Miss Ellen A. Wilkinson, hon. secretary, Morden House, Barnes Common, S.W.

HOME FOR THE FATHERLESS, 64, 66, 70, to 76, Lewisham-road, S.E.—Mr. Henry Toye, Superintendent of this Home, has received notice from a Railway Company that nearly the whole of the buildings will be wanted. As the greater portion are only rented, Mr. Toye is in great anxiety, although he has no doubt that the apparent calamity will issue in good. We have known him for twenty years as a faithful man above many.

WESTBOURNE GROVE Y.M.C.A.—The second annual meeting of this Association was held on Tuesday, Feb. 21, at the Paddington Baths. A good number of young men and others were present, and a deep earnest tone marked the proceedings. Mr. W. Wild, the secretary, read the annual report, which told of much blessing during the year. The Earl of Aberdeen (chairman) gave an admirable address on the importance of the Y.M.C.A. work. Revs. T. B. Harvey Brooks, Joseph Olphert, Pastor F. H. White, Messrs. J. D. Allcroft, F. C. J. Miller, Q.C., A. T. Schofield, and W. H. Mills, gave stirring addresses. This is quite a young branch, but no one present on Tuesday evening could doubt that the hand of the Lord is with the workers. The expenditure for the year was £500, and the year was closed with £2 5s. 9d. in hand. The Committee thank God and take courage.

REV. A. G. MARMENT.—This servant of God went to Texas in 1872, where he laboured as a missionary to the Indians and negroes. He received injuries during the whisky riots, and was invalided home in 1882. After partially recovering his health, he commenced as a temperance advocate, and held missions in Great Britian and Ireland. In January, 1886, he was engaged as missionary at the Central Hall, Newcastle, and his labours were bearing much fruit. Unfortunately, he fell down some stairs, breaking a blood vessel and injuring his spine in a way that has left him for the time being in a helpless state, without means, and totally unable to support his wife and three children. Any of our readers who may be disposed, in view of the circumstances, to minister to the needs of this tried brother, should communicate with Rev. G. Mallet, Chaplain, Mariners' Church, Kingsholm, Gloucester, where Mr. Marment is at present residing.

AUSTRALIAN NOTES.

From a Melbourne Correspondent.)

A PROSPEROUS YEAR.

The past year has been a most prosperous one for most of the colonies. It is pleasing to note that the wealthy in their prosperity have not forgotten the poor. The contributions to the suffering humanity of Melbourne have never been so large as they were at Christmas, 1887. The leading daily paper of this city acknowledged the receipt of £2500 for charities in two or three days.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATIONS.

The year 1888 will be memorable in the history of Australia, as it is the centennial year of the colonies, and also that in which the International Exhibition is to be held in Melbourne. Great preparations, both in New South Wales and Victoria, are being made for the celebration of the centenary. A Centennial Mission in the two colonies will be formed for the purpose of spreading the Gospel throughout the land. Representatives of the Episcopalian, Wesleyan, Congregational, Presbyterian and Baptist Churches in Victoria have joined in the mission. One of the most active and energetic members of the committee is Dr. Ll. Bevan.

TEMPERANCE REFORM.

In this sunny land, where for everyone with brains and hands there are work and food, it seems strange that intemperance should be so crying an evil; but such is the case. Temperance evangelists hold missions; Blue Ribbon armies are formed; the Victorian Parliament has passed a local option Bill that has closed many of the hotels and gin-palaces. One of the most recent ideas of temperance reformers is a large milk palace in one of the chief streets of Melbourne. Here in cold weather hot and spiced milk may be obtained. In the summer, frozen milk, iced soda and milk, and milk pure and simple are sold. This institution deserves the fostering care of all friends of the temperance reform.

THE SABBATH IN SYDNEY.

The ministers of Sydney seem to be roused by the Sabbath desecration prevalent in that city. Christmas Day falling upon a Sunday, last year, the lessees of two Melbourne theatres ventured to try to hold concerts on Christmas night. The Premier at once checked the holding of these entertainments. But in Sydney, concerts and entertainments of a more or less sacred kind are held regularly on the day of rest. It is only quite recently that the sale of Sunday newspapers has been suppressed in the capital of New South Wales. At a recent meeting of the leading ministers of Sydney, special attention was directed to the extent of Sabbath desecration, which, it was considered, would not be tolerated in any other Australasian city.

BISHOP BARRY

has lately been lecturing on Methodism and the Evangelical Revival. He is a large-minded and clear-brained prelate, and is always ready to give honour where honour is due. His Lordship is a great force in the Southern Hemisphere; one reason of this is his power of recognising the merits of all sections of the Christian Church.

MR. HENRY VARLEY.

This well-known evangelist is expected in Melbourne next month. He has two sons and a daughter in this city, besides other relatives. His friends are looking forward to his visit with pleasure. Many Australians regard him as more than an ordinary evangelist, a great power for good, and a dauntless champion of right against wrong.

DR. MARSHALL LANG,

of Glasgow, has been warmly received by the Christians in Melbourne. At a public breakfast given in his honour, he delivered an eloquent speech in which he deprecated petty distinctions in the Christian Church, and acknowledged himself to be broad and evangelical in the true sense. If the word "broad" meant dissolving Christianity into a soulless morality, he certainly was opposed to it. It is the general opinion that Dr. Lang's visit to the Scots' Church is timely, and all Australian Christians hope that the unhappy broils that have torn asunder the Presbyterian Church in Melbourne, are now at an end.

Melbourne, January 12.

PREVENTION OF CRIME.

To prevent misery or crime is sounder philanthropy than to relieve or suppress it. To rescue boys at an early age from the wretched courts and alleys of London, and train them to earn an honest livelihood, is wiser and more practical than to neglect them until they swell the ranks of pauperism. The report lately issued of two years' work at the Chertsey Preventive Industrial Home bears encouraging witness to the success which attends even a modest enterprise of this kind under judicious management.

The scheme contemplates the accommodation of one hundred and fifty boys in five houses, only one, however, of which is yet completed. In this sixteen boys, chosen out of "the most destitute and deplorable cases," and many of them "exceedingly difficult to deal with," were lodged and taught last year, with most encouraging results, the inmates having acquired great proficiency in carpentering, dairy work, and gardening: the latter department having, after supplying all home requirements, yielded a profit of £100. Such an undertaking deserves all support, and some of the vast amount of money spent every year in indiscriminate and misdirected benevolence might with great advantage be diverted into similar channels.

ITALIAN PENINSULA MISSION.

By the blessing of God, my companion, Signor Ambrosini, and I have now accomplished our evangelistic journey from the Alps. Having crossed the Peninsula, we came down the Adriatic coast, along which we found a vast field for work. Several have professed conversion; as the firstfruits of the Gospel in these towns, I feel deeply interested in these lonely souls, and hope soon to be able to send an evangelist there. Romish priestcraft has held the people in this district in painful ignorance, out of which Christ is leading his redeemed.

Here in Calabria, although the work presents special difficulties, it is comforting to observe how the Gospel conquers these. We have found several openings for the preaching of the Word in this the darkest province of Antichristian Italy. I pray the Lord of the harvest that He may provide the means, so that his evangelists may soon enter upon this urgent work of further evangelising the tribes that lie in darkness from the Alps to Calabria.

Rossano, Calabria. John S. Anderson.

THE EARL OF ABERDEEN delivered a lecture on Thursday evening, last week, at Exeter Hall, entitled "The Australian Portion of a Tour round the World." The lecture formed one of a series of "pleasant evenings," specially intended for young men. With regard to emigration, Lord Aberdeen divided emigrants into three classes. Firstly, the people who had got capital and want an opening for it; secondly, those with a fair allowance of brains and a good education, who are well qualified to engage in mercantile pursuits without capital; and thirdly, those prepared to use their hands in manual labour. He could not speak as to capitalists, but with reference to the second class of emigrants he could not say he saw any great encouragement for men of that stamp to go out to Australia just at present. Then with regard to those prepared to go out to do manual labour, he was afraid that for them, too, there was not exactly a very large field of enterprise at the present moment, partly from circumstances of a temporary nature.

DOING THE WILL OF GOD.

By Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

The importance of doing the will of God has been pressed on my mind lately as never before. The words of the Lord Jesus are very striking:—"Not every one that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." How easy to say, "Lord, Lord," and yet all the time being, and intending to be, our own master; doing our own will. There is a great deal of spurious conversion about, which leaves a man just where he was before—pleasing himself. Have we got the right kind of conversion? If we have we shall not find it difficult to have faith in God. Pharaoh asked, "Who is the Lord, that I should obey Him?" Let us take more time for meditation, especially on the character of God, on the person and work of the Lord Jesus Christ, and then we shall find it easy, and not difficult, to "have faith in God."

If we really know God we shall not be able to doubt Him. He is our Father with unlimited resources. Realise this, also his wisdom and love, and unbelief will disappear, and a glad trust will take its place. Our circumstances are such as God has arranged for us and not those that have come to us by chance. They are prepared for us in order to give Him the opportunity of blessing us and making us a blessing in them. There are no adverse circumstances for the child of God. Everything comes to us from our Father, and is the very best for us. Everyone of his own is surrounded by the very best circumstances. Let us glorify Him in them.

What wonders were wrought by those of old, who had faith in God in various circumstances. Look at the record in Hebrews xi. What a difference it made in their lives. What confidence and joy it gives us to have faith in God!

We are the children of a King, with a royal endowment, the promise of God to supply all our need (Phil. iv. 19).

One may say, It grieves me that I have not the faith in God that I should have. How am I to get this? Now just imagine a mirror struggling and trying to produce a reflection. Turn it to the object to be reflected, and you have it. If you want faith in God, do not struggle and try, but look at Him—his love and his power. God never falls short of our faith, but always goes beyond it. As Miss Havergal has said—

> Those who trust Him wholly,
> Find Him wholly true.

The original may be translated, "Have the faith of God," that is to say, reckon that God is faithful, count upon it. It is very important to realise, when we come to God in prayer, that it is not what we are, but what He is, that is the ground of our confidence. We are authorised to come to God in the name of the Lord Jesus. What is that name worth? Do not look within and measure your faith, but look at Him and the measure of his faithfulness which is so great that it is immeasurable. Thank God He never leaves us without difficulties, because He always wants us to come to Him, and gives us reasons and excuses for coming.

Our Father never feels that we come too often. He wants to see holy confidence in his children. It is not presumption on the part of the little child to reckon on the mother's love. Reckon on his love and faithfulness. Hold God's faithfulness. Whatever else you let go, hold that. When you reckon on God's faithfulness you will not be able to doubt. Keep in the right position. Walk in the light. Be altogether given up to Him. If there is a curtain between the mirror and the object there can be no reflection. If there is anything between us and God, we cannot expect his faithfulness to be seen, as it otherwise would be.

For the Young.

WHAT IS YOUR LIFE?

JAMES iv. 14.

RATHER more than a thousand years ago our forefathers used to worship idols, the gods Tiu, Woden, Thor, &c., after whom our days of the week are named. But missionaries came to England to tell us about the true God and eternal life, and up in Northumbria a great meeting of the wise men was held to decide whether they should give up idolatry and become Christians.

After some other speakers, an old Saxon noble stood up and said he was in favour of the new religion. "Our life is," he said, "something like this:—Sometimes on a dark night, when we are having a banquet in a brightly lighted hall, a sparrow flies suddenly through an open door or window; for a moment only it stays in the light, and then darts out at the other end into the darkness. Our life," said the old noble, "is like the short moment when the bird is in the light. We know nothing about the future before us, it is all dark; but now these missionaries have come with the Bible, which tells of a bright hope for the future, so I am in favour of their religion."

Well, our life on earth is like the swift flight of the bird through the room; St. James says, "It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." Job says, "Man cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down: he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not" (Job xiv. 2).

Where are all the flowers that bloomed last spring? Can you find any of them alive today? No, they are all faded and dead. But still you have something besides that sort of life.

> Life is real, life is earnest,
> And the grave is not its goal,
> "Dust thou art, to dust returnest,'
> Was not spoken of the soul.

No, these words were only spoken of the body. Then how long will the soul live? Suppose for every drop of water in the sea we could count a thousand years, for every blade of grass in the world another thousand, and then count a thousand years for every star in the sky. Add all those years together, but they would not be so long as eternity, for it has no end. So that this life on earth is only like a span compared with the life of the soul for eternity.

FOUR SORTS OF LIFE.

Everything that is alive uses or enjoys something outside of itself. (1) A flower enjoys the sunshine, air, and moisture. (2) A bird enjoys more than a plant; it moves and works, builds its nest, sings its gay songs, can see, and hear, and feel—it has a higher life. (3) Human life. A man enjoys far more than any other animal. He has the power of speech, he enjoys work and rest, love and friendship, reading, music, and much else, which the plant or bird can have no idea of. (4) Spiritual life. This is to enjoy the love of God, the presence of Jesus Christ, reading his Word, and speaking to Him in prayer and praise.

Two years ago I met a boy at the seaside. His name is Dick. He gave his heart to the Lord Jesus during the holidays, and a few weeks ago I had a letter from him. He wrote: "My little pocket Testament is a true friend to me, and I know the benefit of prayer. I used to be careless, shirking my lessons at school. So I prayed to the Lord Jesus to help me with my lessons, and He heard my prayer, and has helped me ever since."

When I read this letter I said to myself, "That boy has got spiritual life, for he knows his Saviour, and he enjoys his Bible and prayer." These are the marks that show whether you are sham Christians or real; whether you are alive or dead. All of us are "dead in trespasses and sins," until we have received new life from Christ. "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

To trust in Jesus as your Saviour is the same thing as taking the gift of eternal life, and if ever you are in doubt about it, whether you have it or not, look straight to Him at once, and remember the words, "He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life" (John vi. 47).

VISITING THE ZENANAS.

IT is the custom among the natives of India for the children to be married while they are very young. The parents choose husbands for their girls, and when they are old enough they go to live with them, but they usually stay in their father's house for some years after they are married.

The women and girls of the higher classes are never allowed to be seen in the streets. They do not often go out, and then always in a closely covered carriage. The little girls are allowed to go out to school until they are nine years old; but after that age they are expected to stay in purdah (seclusion).

In consequence of this, many of the women, even the wives of teachers and educated men, are very ignorant. They cannot read, or write, or sew, and have nothing to do all day long but sit and listen to the stories told them by their servants. The wives of rich men have a great many servants to wait on them, and they employ some solely for the purpose of telling them stories, as that is their only amusement.

The missionary ladies who visit in the Zenanas are now teaching some of these women to read and write English. They teach them also history, geography, and music, and other useful things, so that they may have some pleasant employment. They often read the Bible with them, and the Bible-lessons are valued very highly by many of the women. One girl complained that she had not had her English lesson for some time and was afraid she would forget all she had learned. Her teacher said—"Then, shall we have the English instead of the Bible-lesson, to-day? You shall choose." She answered, "Why, of course, the Bible."

One of the Zenana workers took us with her into some of the houses. The first was the residence of a well-to-do Bengali, who is a master in the college. We saw his wife and three daughters. One of them, a bright intelligent girl, who appeared to be about fifteen years of age, has learnt English sufficiently to read simple books and to join in conversation. She is married to a young man who is studying for his B.A. degree, and she is soon to go and live with him. We were told some interesting facts about her childhood. When she was a very little girl she went to the mission school, and learned to love Jesus. A little girl, who was married to the eldest son of a Babu (or teacher), came to live near, and they played together. She soon told her little companion about Jesus, but her parents were idolaters; and, when it was found out, they forbade her to speak of Him.

One day her teacher at the school was surprised by her coming up, tearful and unhappy, with a written request that she should be beaten before the whole school. The teacher inquired why she must be beaten; she was one of the best girls in the school, and always obedient and attentive. She answered, "For disobeying my parents. But I could not help it," she added, bursting into tears. And then she went on to explain that her parents had forbidden her to speak to her little companion of Jesus.

"But," she said, "we used to play together, and all the time we would be thinking of Jesus, and we used to look at each other, and want to speak of Him, and at last we did speak. We were talking of his death, and my little playmate was crying. Her father found us, and he was so angry that he has turned my father out of his house, for he is our landlord." The teacher, of course, refused to beat the child, but she was not allowed to play with her little friend any longer.

A few years afterwards, the teacher was called to visit a young girl who was dying. She went, and found her very weak and ill, but rejoicing in Jesus as her Saviour, and she found that this was the little girl who had heard the story of a Saviour's love from her friend who could not help speaking of Jesus, though her father had forbidden it.

This dear little Bengali girl had a baby brother of whom she was very fond. One day as the Zenana missionary entered the house she greeted her joyfully, exclaiming, "Oh, Mamsahib, what name do you think my little brother can say? The first word he has learned to speak." "I don't know," the lady answered, "was it mother?" "No," she said, "I would not teach him that first: it was the name of Jesus." And then she told how she often took her little brother on to the top of the house, and said to him, "Where does Jesus live now?" and he would point to the sky. And when she asked again, "And where else does Jesus live?" he would put his hand upon his heart. The baby could not have understood the beautiful truth of what his little sister had taught him, but it showed how earnest she had been to teach him, even from his babyhood, about the Friend who was so dear to her. When he was four years old, this little boy one day saw another sister bowing before an idol. He said, "Why do you worship that thing? It is only made of mud."

We went to another house where an old woman lives who is a widow. She is an earnest Christian, and every day gathers together all the young people who live in the same compound, and they sit round her and listen as she reads to them from the Bible, and prays. On being told of a lady who was an invalid, she said, "But there is one thing she can do—she can pray for the others."

A lady who has been working in the Zenanas has just gone away. She was dearly loved by the people, and they miss her very much. One little boy came home to his mother crying bitterly because she was going away, and for some time would not be comforted. But presently he said, "When I go to bed to-night I must say, 'Our Father,' and that will include my teacher and all, and I shall see her again in heaven."

We are very glad to know that some of the women and children in the Zenanas have accepted the Gospel simply, as little children, and though they are looked down upon in this world, as being only women, they are none the less children of the King. E. A. C.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, March 4, John ix. 30—41; Monday, March 5, John x. 1—18; Tuesday, March 6, John x. 19—30; Wednesday, March 7, John x. 31—42; Thursday, March 8, John xi. 1—16; Friday, March 9, John xi. 17—31; Saturday, March 10, John xi. 32—46.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

PENNY BANKS.—In a recent issue we called attention to the excellent results of the working of the Liverpool Penny Banks Association. A correspondent informs us that these banks are of Glasgow origin. "In that city the number of these auxiliary Penny Banks is at present 228, with 65,000 depositors, whose deposits last year were over £40,000. As the Glasgow Trustee Bank has besides 137,000 depositors, of whom 103,000 of the smallest have an average deposit of about £10, the fact of so many people having even so small a balance has been a great help in tiding through the recent bad times, which have been chiefly felt by the well-paid shipbuilders, who were not [illegible] improvident." The system is also in operation in Manchester and other places.

THE OLD HOME OF INDUSTRY.

AT THE SIGN OF THE SPITALFIELDS "BEEHIVE."

As our readers know, Miss Macpherson and the main body of her helpers have migrated from Spitalfields to Bethnal Green, where the wonderful work associated with her name seems to have taken a new lease of life. But the old Home at 60, Commercial-street, has not been forsaken or diverted to lower uses. The sign of the Beehive still hangs there for all the world to see; and the reality within is not belied by the symbol without. The needs of the neighbourhood seem to be as great and pressing as ever; and the old building, sacred to so many hearts by reason of its precious memories and associations, is still the busy centre of daily work for God and humanity. Though it remains in affiliation with Miss Macpherson's general work, the old Home is personally supervised by Miss Okell.

In epitomising the varied forms of Christian work that find a common centre in the old Home, we naturally begin with the children. Under Miss Okell's régime these are by no means forgotten. For their special benefit a soup kitchen has been established, and day by day, at dinner time, many a hungry little stomach is filled with a warm and nourishing meal. On one of the most biting of the wintry days of last week, our representative was present during the dinner hour, when a little cavalcade of children, of all ages, flocked in and had their bodily wants supplied from the basins of soup and bread served out to them by Miss Scott. It was most pathetic to hear some of the sorrowful tales that the children whispered into the sympathetic ear of Miss Okell; telling of destitution and sickness in the home; or perchance of a lonely orphan life in the lodging-house. Most of the children showed ample traces of the pinch of want, and it was delightful to see how they enjoyed the hot and savoury soup, anon retiring quietly and contented, each carrying a substantial slice of bread and jam. There was a sprinkling too of poverty-stricken men and women who claimed one's sympathy more, perhaps, than the children, seeing that with them the hopeful period of life had passed away, and the outlook was drear enough. Things must have come to a sore pass with grown men or women before they will confess their utter poverty, and thankfully accept a halfpenny dinner of soup. For this democratic coin represents the charge made by Miss Okell for a dinner, and she finds it sufficient to meet the cost, if every visitor were to pay down hard cash. But even a halfpenny is more than can be raised in all cases, and every day a proportion of the diners have to be admitted free, or to go unfed. The soup, we may say, is a most savoury and substantial compound of potatoes, carrots, peas, oatmeal, barley, and other vegetables, boiled with a due quantum of meat bones. When served out, bread-crumbs are added. The whole forms a dish off which we should be glad to dine any day, yet it is produced at so small a cost. Any generous-hearted friend of the starving poor could, therefore, by the gift of a five-pound note, allay the hunger pangs of quite a host of children. The little folk as they enter are interrogated, if they be strangers, as to their home circumstances, and Miss Okell verifies their stories by after visitation. In this way an entrance is gained into many a poor and sorrow-laden home, and help is rendered in various ways, while words of cheer and spiritual consolation are the more readily received that they are backed up with something tangible. Among the greatest needs in connection with this department of the work are clothing, boots and shoes. After seeing the ragged attire, and naked, shivering feet of some of these young immortals, we felt constained to go home, clear out a parcel of unused attire, and forward it to Miss Okell, at 60, Commercial-street, Spitalfields. Will not many who read these lines follow suit, taking care to prepay the carriage of their parcels? [In a private note, dated Saturday last, Miss Okell writes: "I have been visiting to-day. Words would fail me to describe the suffering and destitution I have seen."]

This work for the children, however, is only a small corner of the programme. Twice a week the factory girls troop in for their sewing-class, which now numbers nearly two hundred. As they sit and sew, they are encouraged to learn to sing some of the sacred songs now so plentiful, and in this way empty gossip is avoided. Words of counsel are addressed to them, so that the evenings pass away cheerfully and profitably. During the day Miss Turner visits the factories where the girls work, and finds many opportunities, in the dinner hour and otherwise, for influencing them for good. This is a very happy and hopeful part of the Mission. Scarcely less so is the effort to train young women in the Home, chiefly for domestic service. At present there are ten under training, one of them being a young Jewess who has endured not a little in her open confession of the Messiah, but who keeps true to her Lord, and plays an active part in the household economy of the establishment. She hopes, by and by, to devote her life to Christian work among her own kinsfolk after the flesh.

A considerable work is carried on in the Home among Jews and Jewesses. On Monday evenings there are Scripture classes for Jewish boys and girls. On Thursday afternoons the class for Jewish mothers, so long sustained by Mrs. Way, is held under the charge of Mrs. Pridham. On Saturday afternoons Mr. Paul Aschkenazi has a splendid meeting for males, when free conversation is encouraged on matters touching the mission and work of Jesus Christ. There are meetings of a similar kind on Sunday evenings, and a spirit of earnest inquiry is abroad among these sons of Abraham. Opposition is so strong that open confession of Christ is not easy in their case. There are Gentile mothers' meetings on Wednesday afternoons, and on Friday evenings an effort is being made to gather together the matchbox makers, a class with whom the early history of the place is closely associated. Sunday, of course, is a busy day for the workers, when the four resident ladies are reinforced by helpers from without. In addition to the meetings and classes inside, these friends have invaded Wentworth-street (the famous Petticoat-lane), and have planted the Gospel flag among the crowds who flock thither to do business on the day of Gentile rest. There has been a good deal of opposition, but the workers continue to hold the fort, and tell out the Gospel story.

It will thus be seen that there is plenty of active life circulating in and about the old Home; which, in fact, may be said to have made a new start with the infusion of fresh blood. We warmly commend the efforts of Miss Okell and her devoted helpers to the prayerful sympathy of our readers, who, we trust, will sustain their hands as they seek week by week to minister to the needs of the population that lies so thickly around.

DEACON ABRAHAM, writing from Geog Topa, Oroomiah, on January 14, gives an account of the week of prayer with which the year was opened in that part of Persia. On the Sunday some five hundred people assembled; on week-days the attendance ranged from fifty to two hundred persons. Altogether, in houses and public places, thirty-six meetings were held in the week.

"A LITTLE TESTIMONY."—Mr. Wm. Joseph Lewis, of Ryde, I.W., in a circular letter, says:—"I have entered upon my 30th year of service for the Lord, and upon my 22nd year of dependence on Him for temporal support; and now, after so long an experience, I bear testimony to his praise and glory I that have never rested and trusted in Him in vain. For five and twenty years I proved the power of the Gospel in the darkest, lowest, and vilest dens I could discover in sunken Spitalfields. Since I removed to this town in 1883, on account of the complete breakdown of my health rendering me quite unfit for active labour any longer amidst the fogs, &c., of East London, I have proved the grand reality of his word more than I had done in all my past experience."

NOTES FROM THE NORTH.

EVANGELISTIC.

UNDER the pointed appeals of Mr. J. M. Scroggie in the London-road Free Church many have professed faith in Christ. Mr. Daniels is conducting a fortnight's mission in Blochairn Free Church, Glasgow. Many difficulties had to be contended with, but the workers' faith and prayer have not been in vain.

FREE CHURCH TEMPERANCE WORK.

Although but three years old, the Glasgow Free Church Temperance Society has accomplished great things. Fifty-four branches have been formed, and untold numbers have been rescued from the curse of drink. Mr. J. H. Dixon mentioned at the annual meeting in Glasgow last week that for thirty years past there has been no increase in the number of public-houses in Glasgow. Vigorous addresses were delivered on the question of liquor traffic among the native races.

GLASGOW'S FEMALE PRISON MISSION.

There was ample justification for the warm words of commendation which the speakers at the annual meeting of the houses for sheltering female prisoners in Glasgow bestowed upon the report of those Institutions. It told of effective and successful work both in the House of Shelter and the Mission Shelter. The extracts from the letters of previous inmates bore testimony to the change of heart many of them had experienced. Dr. Wallace, of the U.P. Church, gave several striking examples of the beneficent results of the work done in the Homes. Other speakers addressed the meeting, all of them emphasising the fact that drink was the potent factor in the degradation of men and women.

THE SILENT WORD.

At the noon-day prayer-meeting in Glasgow last week three different testimonies were given to the power of the silent word of Scripture. Mr. George Jackson, an Edinburgh cab-driver, said he had had painted in his cab for twenty-five years the Spirit's question: "What think ye of Christ?" and many had praised the Lord for it. Mr. M'Lachlan said that a revival of religion had been caused in Musselburgh by a man who had been seen at the races there with the words printed round his hat, "God is Love." A third testimony came from Mr. Farwell, of Chicago, who said that at the door of the building where Mr. Moody carried on his work in Chicago they had a gas jet illuminating the words "God is Love," which led to a remarkable conversion in the case of a half-drunken soldier who had seen it as he passed by.

MR. STEAD IN EDINBURGH.

A crowded and enthusiastic meeting gathered in the Free Church Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, last week, to hear an address from Mr. W. T. Stead. Dr. Alex. Whyte moved a resolution pledging the meeting to attack immorality in all its forms. In support of this resolution Mr. Stead delivered a remarkable address. He said there were three great reasons why it was pre-eminently important that this subject should be taken up seriously and thoughtfully at the present time. A great change is now taking place in the position of woman. Hitherto there had been two distinct standards of morality in relation to all questions governing the sexes. That cannot last. The great divine and human institution of the family is going to pieces in the press of modern industrialism in civic life. In proportion as we take the man or the woman out of the family, and make him or her a lone unit in the workshop or in the counting-house, we take a retrograde step, which is certain sooner or later to be followed by disastrous immoral influences. Mr. Stead was warmly thanked for his past services in the cause of social reform.

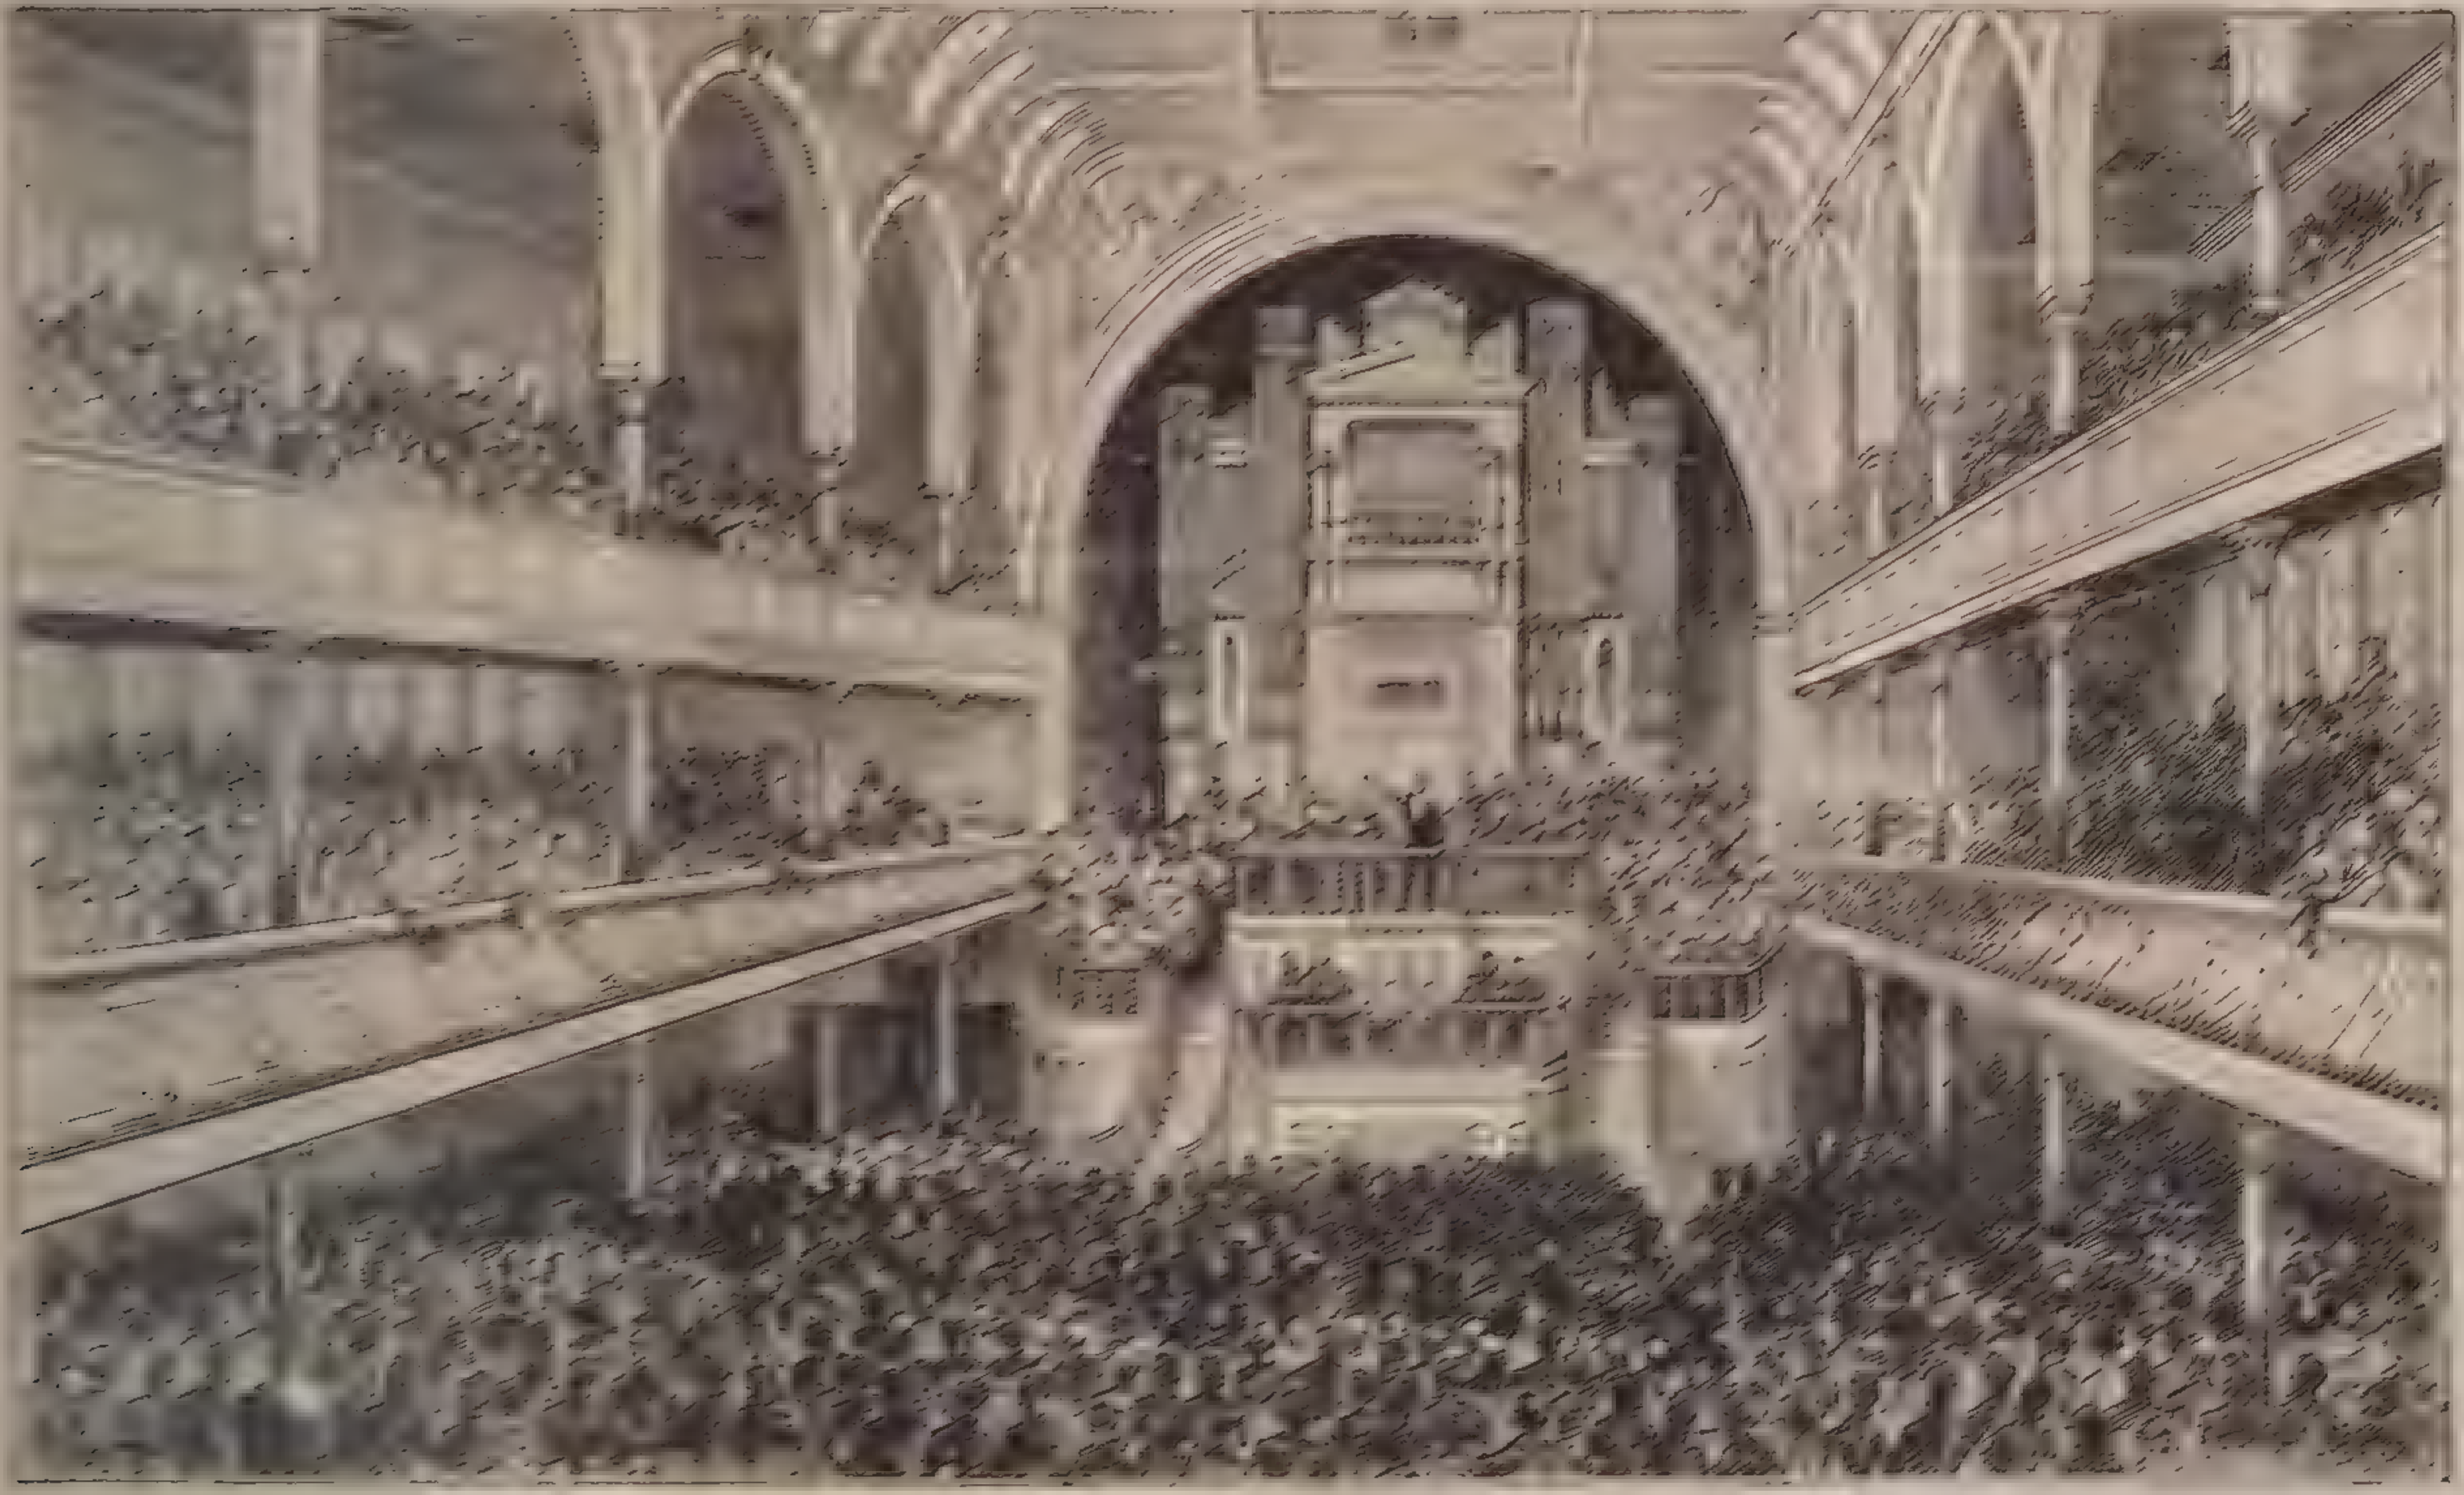
TOWER HAMLETS MISSION.

OFFICE—31, MILE END ROAD, LONDON, E.

Sunday Evening at the Great Assembly Hall.



Open Every Evening all the Year round.

The above picture is a faithful representation of an ordinary Sunday evening at the Great Assembly Hall, which is also pen every night in the week. This alone is a considerable expense in itself; but we regret to say we have a large debt still maining on the building, and we now earnestly appeal to the readers of "The Christian" to help us remove this heavy rden. One gentleman has kindly offered condition that others come forward and clear off half the debt. Will our readers respond to this generous offer?

Our recent successful efforts in the Purity Cause, in closing about Fifty Houses of Ill-fame and rescuing and assisting any of the inmates, have also entailed an additional expense. One kind donor has already sent us

r this object, with the promise of a similar amount if the work is continued, but we still need a considerable amount to p r Rescue Home out of debt.

Altogether we are just now greatly in need of immediate help, and Donations (large or small) will be gratefully received by

Yours most faithfully,

FREDK. N. CHARRINGTON, Hon. Supt.,

EDINBURGH MEDICAL STUDENTS.

Sir,—May I ask space in your columns to present your readers with a few statements bearing upon a subject which, at the present day, shares the attention of a somewhat large section of the Christian community, and which I understand was recently dealt with in your columns in a letter from an Edinburgh correspondent.

Although, in the face of adverse criticism, it is due to Professor Drummond and his supporters that a fair and true account of his Mission among the students of our University should be given; yet I write, not in the spirit of controversy, which, in this case at any rate, would be in poor harmony with the spirit of Christianity, but in the hope that such an account may be of some use, as a source of encouragement to those who may perhaps be taking a too despondent view of whatever Christian work they may be struggling to maintain against difficulties. For, if difficulties existed anywhere, they did so in this city four or five years ago, when the entire being of the average student, as I knew him, was so steeped in a mixed atmosphere of scientific and worldly thoughts, that the energising influence of Christianity was but little allowed to interfere with his actions, or mingle with any of his studious reflections.

At that time the most sanguine of us would hardly have dreamt of the present condition of the Edinburgh student; and indeed, when, on my return, after an absence of three years from college, I take advantage of the opportunity which has been given me of comparing the students of former days with those I now meet, I feel that God has richly answered the prayers and exertions of his people.

One of the most marked results of the Mission is seen in the institution of religious services in the wards of the different hospitals of Edinburgh and Leith. These services are conducted entirely by medical students, who, every Sunday morning, invade each ward in small bands, and there join the patients in Divine worship. The benefits resulting from this spiritual communion cannot be too greatly insisted upon; but, apart from these benefits, it serves to unite the patients and students in close friendship and sympathy, while at the same time it creates in the minds of the sufferers a greater trust and faith in the students as their medical attendants. A most remarkable increase is seen in the membership of the Medical Students' Christian Association, which some four years ago was the smallest society connected with the University, while it is now the largest, so that its success dates from Professor Drummond's meetings. I may also refer with pleasure to another child of the Mission, which began its existence a few weeks ago—viz., the Art Students' Christian Association.

With some hesitation I refer to the Foreign Mission movement, for though I was greatly impressed with the fact that a large number of undergraduates were preparing to enter upon this work, yet I am uncertain that there is a definite increase in the number of candidates for the mission field as a direct result of Professor Drummond's teaching. Still I am pleased to know that they are earnest and faithful workers with him. Somewhat amusing, but still signally characteristic of the earnestness which guides them, is the eagerness with which they lie in wait to entrap some unsuspecting missionary home on furlough, and, having got him to their meeting, subject him to such a cross-examination as will leave him dry-sucked of all the mission experience of which he is possessor.

What a glorious way of enjoying the vacations it is to those little batches of students, who enter some of the outlying labour districts, and there plunge heart and soul into the good work. Some are sent bearing the seal of authority from the Association; others engage in the same work independent of all commands save those of duty and conscience.

A distinctly new feature in University life is the establishment of what are known as "Settlements," which can only be compared to miniature Toynbee Halls, and consist essentially of a students' residence situated in the midst of the dwellings of the poor, among whom duties both socially and spiritually elevating are carried on by some half-dozen settled students. This work can never be sufficiently estimated, but, judging from their pleasant meetings together, their classes for working men, and their social gatherings for the wives and children, all conducted in the spirit of friendly communion, and with a levelling of caste distinctions, one cannot help regarding these mission settlements as of the first importance in furthering Christian principles.

Among the most visible and truly satisfactory results of the Mission is the altered life, the changed manners and bearing of students in their relations with each other, as compared with the habits and demeanour of the students of four years ago, when the chief bond of union between man and man lay in the delirious experiences of the previous night's debauch; when serious views were received with indifference and contempt; when one never knew whether his neighbour in the Lecture Theatre was a churchgoer or not, for one would have been as shy of inquiring as the other would have been ashamed of confessing.

But now, as the new bond of Christianity has been increasing, so do we perceive its influence in the heart of College life, and, instead of a diffidence and shyness, we everywhere meet with a growing interest in, and a readiness to talk of religious questions. Frequently we are asked on Monday morning, "How did you like the sermon last night?" and very often during the few odd moments which can be snatched from the busy round of classes, views are exchanged, and feelings are uttered, which prove how deep the words of the preacher have sunk in the minds of his hearers.

Never have I observed among College men such a desire to perform those little acts of kindness which go so far to make life happy, and labour easily borne, and such a kind and encouraging way in which helpful advice is given; and how glad some of them are to aid in smoothing over those little difficulties which daily beset the young student. And besides, we do not need much telling to understand the efforts which are made to reclaim the fallen brother: the plans to which his fellow-students resort, and the influences which are brought to bear upon him, in the way of controlling his movements; in one very bad case which I recall, even managing his finances, and sharing his room with him turn by turn.

Following naturally upon the better-conditioned student, we now see springing up a closer relationship between him and his Professors. And, while referring to this topic, I gladly pay a warm tribute to some of our Professors for the almost fatherly interest which they exhibit towards their students; for while there is a corresponding increase of affection and respect felt by the latter towards their teachers, there is also engendered a greater earnestness in the pursuit of knowledge, better attended classes, and busier note-taking.

When one brings to mind the medical student of former days, one cannot help feeling a strange pleasure in being able to record and testify to all the wonderful blessings which, by God's grace, have been so plenteously shed upon our University, and everyone will pray with me that Professor Drummond may be long spared to carry on his work, and that he may be further encouraged by still greater blessing.—I am, Sir, yours faithfully, Jean D'Hugo.

Edinburgh University.

DOCK LABOURERS.—By the kindness of Messrs. G. and R. Wills & Co., of Chapel-street, E.C., and their clerks, free suppers have been given at Medway Hall, Ratcliff, to dock labourers and other needy men, whose case had come under the notice of visitors to lodging-houses. We hope that such a good example will be followed by other commercial houses.

REVIVAL AT ST. HELENS.

For three months past a remarkable work of grace has been going on in St. Helens. In connection with the Congregational Church there are two mission halls, one at Gerard's Bridge and another at Cyril-street. Both these are situated in the midst of a working-class population, and are under the charge of Rev. W. Arthur.

In November last, at a conference of Baptist and Congregational ministers in Liverpool, which was addressed by Rev. F. B. Meyer, Mr. Arthur received such a blessing to his own soul by full surrender and faith, that when he returned home a new stimulus was at once imparted to the work under his care. A week's mission was arranged in Cyril-street, and fruit appeared immediately in a marvellous manner. Some of the most wicked people in a low neighbourhood were brought under the power of the Gospel. Week after week the meetings were continued nightly, and the result has been such that the police declared that the neighbourhood is completely changed.

The revival spread to Gerard's Bridge, where a similar harvest was reaped. Then it went on to Peasley Cross, where a fortnight's mission was held with great success. All this has been done without any external help or attraction in the way of special missioner. The services at the three places that have been mentioned went on nightly for eight weeks, and at the close of this period it was found that more than 300 had declared themselves on the Lord's side.

In view of the connection between all this good work and Mr. Meyer's visit to Liverpool, it is not surprising that special interest should attach to a visit paid by Mr. Meyer to St. Helens a few days ago. Only two days could be spared by Mr. Meyer, but they were fully occupied and greatly blessed. Various churches and ministers united in the services, which were held in the Congregational schoolroom. On Tuesday evening, February 14, after a preliminary prayer-meeting, Mr. Meyer addressed a large audience on the subject of "Christ's Rights to us."

On the following morning, Wednesday, a ministers' meeting was held, the gathering including Nonconformist ministers of the town and district, and three clergymen of the Church of England. Mr. Meyer unfolded the story of his own life, and told of the mighty change which had come over him since his full surrender to the Lord Jesus three years ago. In the afternoon, to a well-attended meeting, Mr. Meyer spoke on "Abiding in Christ." Two meetings were held in the evening. At the larger one, in the Assembly Room, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe spoke on missions, and Mr. Meyer on the Holy Spirit. He also addressed a roomful of young men on the subject of purity.

One of the many blessed results of Mr. Meyer's visit to St. Helens has been the establishment of a weekly united prayer-meeting on Saturday evenings. R. J. W.

HOMES FOR GENTLEWOMEN, Warwick House, Upper Tulse Hill, Brixton, is an Institution affording homes for elderly ladies of small means. It has fifteen inmates, whose needs (not luxuries) are contributed to by the charity. Particulars may be obtained from Miss Jane Crombie, 47, Hogarth-roads, Earl's-court, S.W.

NEWFOUNDLAND.—Rev. Charles F. Hubbard, New Harbour, Trinity Bay, Newfoundland, writes:—I thank you for inserting my appeal for "The Gospel in Newfoundland." Some sixty-three cases of conversion have cheered our hearts since that appeal was mailed to you, and the special services are being well attended. We need small books, tracts, &c., for our fishermen on the Banks, to Labrador, and the railway labourers. Any of your readers who send me tracts, copies of The Christian, The British Workman, Band of Hope Review, or small Gospel books, would be doing much in promoting the spiritual welfare of their poorer friends here.

REV. DR. SOMERVILLE IN HUNGARY.

On Feb. 19, Dr. Somerville completed his five months' mission in Austro-Hungary. During that period he has visited Bohemia, Moravia, Lower Austria (Vienna), Styria, Transylvania, and Hungary, and has preached in about fifty different cities and towns. As may be supposed, this mission has entailed an immense amount of labour. The greatness of the distances, the numerous difficulties of transit, the unpropitious weather, the hindrances and loss of time connected with obtaining permission to hold certain services, and with procuring suitable places for meeting, and the countless obstacles in the way of making the services known, &c., have all tended to make this latest mission one of the most arduous.

In many respects, however, it has been one of the most remarkable. The permission granted by the authorities to hold public religious meetings for Jews and Gentiles (a thing hitherto quite unknown in some quarters), the heartiness of reception and co-operation on the part of the ministers, the thronging of the people in multitudes to hear the simple Gospel, even in the coldest weather, when snow lay deep on the ground, the open door to the House of Israel, and the readiness with which the Jews came out to listen to a Christian Gentile, and the general stirring in the towns where the mission was carried on, make us acknowledge that God's Holy Spirit has been manifesting Himself specially at this time, and cause us to praise God for answering our prayers.

In Hungary the size of the audiences was sometimes surprising. There, in many towns, the Reformed Church consists of a single congregation, composed of many thousand members—e.g., 20,000—and meets in one huge building. On one occasion Dr. Somerville addressed the largest audience he has ever spoken to under a roof, numbering 7,000. He had many other opportunities of preaching in Hungary to congregations of from a few hundred people to those of two or three thousand. These audiences consisted of ministers, professors, students of theology, and persons of all classes.

A very special feature of the mission has been the manner in which Dr. Somerville has been received by the Jews. Not only did they attend the ordinary public meetings; but, when on several occasions Dr. Somerville gave a public address, specially to themselves, they came together in crowds, both men and women, even to the number of 1,500. Instead of referring to controversial points, which would have aroused his hearers' indignation, Dr. Somerville adopted the plan of showing how much Christianity owed to the Jews, and having gained the ear and hearts of his audience, he then set forth Christ as the crucified Messiah.

With one or two exceptions, the method of interpretation has been used, the interpreter in each case belonging to the country. No less than twenty-four different interpreters have assisted Dr. Somerville on this mission. Rev. Mr. Szalay, of Nagy Becskerek, translated with great efficiency twenty-two times in Hungary. The service of sacred song has all along been conducted by Mr. Frank Knight, the Doctor's grandson. Mr. Sankey's hymns were used, and the singing led by Mr. Knight and choir was hearty and stirring.

After finishing with Hungary, Dr. Somerville passed on to Servia. For some weeks permission to hold meetings was refused him, the reason given being "the unsettled state of the country." But at last, through the action of Mr. MacKenzie, of Belgrade, Dr. Somerville was allowed to hold private meetings in that city. Dr. Somerville is now on his way to Kischineff, in South Russia, to see Rabinowitz; and, after visiting him, he expects to return to Scotland. His health is better than it was a month ago, but the severe winter and hard work are trying for him at his age.

"CHRISTIAN WORKERS' RÉUNION."

In response to a widely expressed desire, a weekly gathering of pastors, evangelists, and other Christian workers of both sexes has been established for the study of God's Word, for prayer, and for mutual acquaintance and edification.

This Réunion will be held every Thursday afternoon until further notice, from 3.30 to 5.30 in the parlour of the Young Men's Christian Association, 186 Aldersgate-street, E.C., which has been kindly lent for the purpose, as being a central meeting-point. The parlour will accommodate about one hundred persons.

A portion of time is devoted to praise and prayer, in relation to the special needs of revival. A speaker, previously selected, opens the Bible topic appointed for the day, his exposition occupying twenty minutes. The subject is then open for conversation and inquiry. After the meeting tea is provided for those who desire it at a small cost.

The first of these reunions was held on Thursday afternoon, last week, and proved to be a season of spiritual power and refreshment. Mr. R. C. Morgan introduced the subject of "Sin as a Hindrance to Christian Work," that subject also being pursued at this week's gathering.

THE LEEDS GUARDIANS OF THE POOR have selected from among the children in the Union workhouse twenty, whom they intend to put through special domestic and industrial training, with a view to emigration in August next.

MR. GAWIN KIRKHAM, secretary of the Open-air Mission, commenced work again last week after his recent illness by expounding his picture of "The Broad and Narrow Way," in Hatherley-lane and Lower Alstone Schoolrooms, both in the parish of St. Mark's, Cheltenham. The vicar, Rev. G. P. Griffiths, presided on both occasions. Mr. Kirkham has now expounded this allegorical picture eight hundred and seventy-three times in public during the last eighteen years.

KING'S LYNN.—Within the past ten years three mission-rooms have been erected in different parts of the parish of Terrington St. Clements, affording accommodation for three hundred worshippers. An evangelist visits the people at their houses, and holds meetings throughout the week. In connection with the third of these rooms, the Vicar, Rev. Marlborough Crosser, has personally incurred serious liability, and he seems to have but few helpers on the spot.

EAST LONDON.—A new branch of work among the East-end poor folk has just been opened in connection with the East London Institute. About three weeks since a medical mission was commenced to give free advice and medicine to such needy cases as were met with during the ordinary house-to-house visitation. So far the result has been entirely satisfactory. Many persons gladly avail themselves of the opportunity thus given, and they come in constantly increasing numbers. Dr. Guinness wishes to establish a "Flower Mission," and would be glad to receive from interested friends gifts of flowers, sent per parcel post, so as to arrive at Harley House on Tuesday and Thursday mornings, addressed to Mr. W. M. Upcraft, Harley House, Bow-road, E.

ARBITRATION IN THE UNITED STATES.—Mr. David Dudley Field, the eminent American jurist, has sent to Mr. Henry Richard, M.P., the hon. secretary of the English Peace Society, 47, New Broad-street, E.C., some interesting documents, showing the recent progress of International arbitration. Mr. Field has drawn up a list of fifty-eight instances in which, since the year 1815, various disputes between nations have been referred to and settled by this mode of disposing of differences. Mr. Field and five other gentlemen, including the Mayor of New York, have forwarded a memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives at Washington, urging their members to support the President in any efforts which he may make to arrange for a permanent resort to arbitration in disputes henceforth between the United States and other countries, but especially with Great Britain. The Committee of Congress on Foreign Affairs have already given a hearing to Mr. Field and his colleagues, and have reported favourably to their proposals.

CONVALESCENT HOME, SANDGATE.

This Home, which has done excellent work in past years, has been in active operation during the winter months. Situated almost upon the sea, and in the midst of many charming features, both by land and water, "Beach Rocks" enjoys exceptional advantages as a health resort. The gratitude of hundreds of patients has been freely expressed for the kindness shown to them, as well as for the blessing of health restored.

In the coming season there will be a large extension of the system of relief to the suffering under the management of Mr. Jones. A new Home for women and children will be opened at Sandgate, in a truly palatial residence facing the sea, and seated in the midst of beautiful grounds.

At Brighton, also, it is in contemplation to open a Convalescent Home. These, with Beach Rocks, now so favourably known to so many, besides the additional house secured last year, and also that at Bournemouth, will constitute a series of Convalescent Homes suited to the various needs of patients.

The London Samaritan Society is to be congratulated on the remarkable growth of this branch of effort, by means of which so great benefits are being conferred on the large class to whom a stay at the seaside during the period of returning health is of inestimable value. Communications should be addressed to Mr. John James Jones, 98, High-street, Homerton, London, E.

RYDE Y.W.C.A.—The ninth annual report states that this Institution is making its influence felt in the town. During last summer about three hundred young women from different parts of the country availed themselves of the accommodation and comforts of the Seaside Home connected with the Association. The large mission-hall which was opened in May last has proved very serviceable in promoting Christian work. The Home, which is known as Garfield House, has been purchased by the Committee with borrowed money, £400 of which has yet to be repaid. Mrs. J. T. O. Johnstone, Caithness House, Ryde, is the hon. secretary.

EAST LONDON NURSING SOCIETY.—The committee, in their report of last year's work, state that the increasing interest taken by the general public in nursing has enabled the Society to add to the number of its nurses. Much has been done to relieve suffering, and to cure disease as well as to prove that by good, well-trained nurses, comfort and hope can be introduced even into the most miserably poor homes. Commencing 1887 with a deficit, the Society closed the year with a balance in hand. Copies of the report, which gives full details of the year's operations, may be obtained from the Society's office, 49, Philpot-street, Commercial-road, London, E.

DUBLIN VISITING MISSION.—Work was steadily pursued last year, and though there are results patent to the eyes of those who sow the seed, yet it is unquestionable that very much of what has been done will not be apparent until the great day of account. The Mission is connected with the Society for Irish Church Missions; its operations are ordered with excellent judgment, and all the agencies seem to be in a state of healthy activity. The report for 1887 emphasises the need for evangelical effort in Ireland by setting forth in brief "the way to God in the Church of Rome." Mrs. Smyly, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin, is secretary of the Mission.

THE PURE LITERATURE SOCIETY was established thirty-four years ago to counteract the pernicious influence of impure literature. It has been most useful, and has encouraged a taste for thoroughly wholesome reading. The Society, during these thirty-four years, has granted 7,547 libraries at half the cost of the books. Its agents have visited, in London and the country, 20,842 shops and towns, 1,100 parcels of suitable periodicals are sent out monthly. £1000 is required from the public, in addition to the amount raised by annual subscriptions. Mr. George Hanbury, of 21, Portman-square, appeals by circular to all who have the welfare of the rising generation at heart to assist in carrying on this excellent effort.

CHRISTIANITY IN INDIA.

On Friday evening last, Sir William Wilson Hunter, the accomplished author of the "Imperial Gazetteer of India," read a paper on "The Religions of India," before a distinguished audience at the Society of Arts. Sir William was apparently moved to make this survey by last year's controversy concerning the relative progress of Christianity and Islam in India and elsewhere.

Holding that a religion must stand or fall by what it does for the well-being of its own people, Sir William considered the effects of Mohammedanism, Hinduism, and Christianity upon the population of India. In the course of his preliminary remarks, he said:—

> There is a dense and dark mass of fifty millions of human beings in India, lying on the outskirts or beyond the pale of orthodox Hinduism and Islam. I believe that within fifty years these fifty millions will be absorbed into one or other or the higher faiths, and that it rests in no small measure with Christian England whether they are chiefly incorporated into the native religions or into Christianity. But a cordial recognition of the wide field for evangelical labours does not exempt Christianity in India from being judged by its present results. Nor need the friends of missionary enterprise shrink from the test; for while the number of native Protestant Christians has increased by fivefold during the thirty years preceding the last census, the number of their communicants has multiplied by nearly tenfold. The progress has been a progress of conversion, concurrent with a progress of internal growth and of internal discipline. It is the result, not alone of the zeal which compasseth the earth to make a proselyte, but also of the pastoral devotion which visits the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and labours to keep its flock unspotted from the world.

It was shown that converts to Mohammedanism in India are attracted less by religious fervour and conviction than by considerations of social convenience. Islam offers "to the teeming low castes of Eastern Bengal, who had sat for ages abject on the outermost pale of the Hindu community, a free entrance into a new social organisation." Hinduism, in like manner, exhibits within itself a principle of emancipation and adaptation more gradual, and, therefore, comparatively speaking, less attractive.

Having given an interesting account of the introduction of Protestant Christianity into India, Sir William shows that, if figures are to be taken as the test, Christianity has no reason to shrink from it. Numerical comparison is, however, only a small part of the matter. The question is, "How does Christianity compare with Islam and Hinduism in its capacity to adapt itself to the social needs and spiritual aspirations of India?" With the spiritual aspect of the question Sir William Hunter does not directly concern himself. "Christianity," he says, "holds out advantages of social organisation not offered by Hinduism or Islam. It provides for the education and moral supervision of its people with a pastoral care, which Islam, destitute of a regular priesthood, does not pretend to. It receives the new members into its body with a cordiality and completeness to which Hinduism is a stranger...Christianity also raises the position of woman to a degree unkown to Hinduism or Islam." All these are, of course, contrasts to the advantage of Christianity.

On the important question of temperance Sir William said:—

> The native Christian is exposed to a terrible temptation. Islam is a great teetotal society. Among Hindus to touch liquor is the sign of low caste. I do not agree with the old Colonel who writes in the newspapers that every Christian servant in India drinks. But it is very sad that the careless, honest observer should so often arrive at this generalisation. I, for one, believe that if Christianity is to be an unmixed blessing in India it must be Christianity on the basis of total abstinence. This self-imposed restriction would, in India soon grow into a binding custom, and would raise the Christian communities out of the rank of the liquor-drinking castes.

The future of Christianity in India was thus referred to:—

> I believe it is reserved for Christianity to develop the highest uses of Indian caste, as a system of conservative socialism which has for ages done the work of a poor-law, of public opinion, and of a moral police. But it will be Indian caste humanised by a new spiritual life. The wonderful growth of the native clergy in recent years has done something to bring Christianity closer to native institutions. The appointment of native bishops, for which the time is manifestly at hand, will do more. Indian Christianity, organised on the Indian communal basis, and in part directed by native spiritual leaders, would reproduce, as far as the divergent creeds of modern times permit, Tertullian's picture of the early Churches united by "the communion of peace, the title of brotherhood, the token of hospitality, and the tradition of one faith"...Speaking as an Englishman, I declare my conviction that English missionary enterprise is the highest modern expression of the wide-world national life of our race. I regard it as the spiritual complement of England's instinct for colonial expansion and Imperial rule. And I believe that any falling off in England's missionary efforts will be a sure sign of swiftly coming national decay.

KABYLE MISSION IN TUNIS.

Mr. Jocelyn Bureau, agent of the Kabyle Mission in Tunis, in a recent letter, refers with satisfaction to the conduct of the young Arab whom he baptized some months ago, as the first-fruits of his labours. Mr. Bureau says:—

Five months ago we established the mission station in the centre of one of the suburbs of Tunis, which consists of a population of 60,000 inhabitants—nearly all Arabs. Through bills stuck on the walls, I announced that I was going to open a school, wherein French, geography, and arithmetic would be taught, as well as the Bible. During the first month the prejudices against us were so strong that nobody came. But when the people saw through our daily intercourse with them that we really wished to do them good, these prejudices vanished, and Arabs began to come. At first we had but two scholars, then five, and now we get between seventeen and twenty people every night, all Mohammedans. Amongst them there is a priest, and one of the teachers in the great Mosque in Tunis. Besides, I generally have a good number of visitors during the day. Through Mrs. Robertson's kindness, I have been able to give either a copy of the Bible or of the New Testament to all the men who frequent the Mission: some of them seem anxious to understand God's Word, while others have already been tainted with European scepticism.

THE CALLANDER Y.M.C.A., which is eighteen years old, is in a remarkably flourishing condition. Last year a junior branch was started, and has been carried on most successfully.

BRIXTON Y.W.C.A.—During the recent week of special prayer for young women, a prayer-meeting was held every evening, followed by a Gospel address. Much blessing followed, several were led to decision for Christ, and Christians were encouraged and strengthened. Several joined as members. As an outcome of the mission, 200 shop-girls and dressmakers of the neighbourhood were invited to a tea, the members bearing the cost.

M. E. Garrett, Hon, Sec.

VICTORIA JUBILEE NEW TESTAMENTS.—The committee which had charge of the movement for presenting all the scholars of the State schools of Victoria with a Jubilee New Testament, containing the fac-simile of a verse of Scripture chosen and written by Her Majesty, and also Her Majesty's autograph, has issued its report. For the purposes of distribution, the colony was divided up into about a hundred and eighty districts, some of them covering areas ranging from a hundred to two hundred miles. Parents and scholars of all classes gladly received the Testaments, 200,000 in number, supplied by the British and Foreign Bible Society.

TYNDALE MEMORIAL CHURCH.—There is a Church of forty-four members, already joined in Christian fellowship, awaiting the erection of these buildings in Brookfield-road, South Hackney, E. The indifference of the parents towards the religious education of their children makes them an easy prey to the proselytising labours of the sisterhoods of both the Roman Catholic and the Ritualistic churches; and it is absolutely necessary, if these children are to be saved from the errors of such organisations, that there should be clear and faithful Protestant ministries. Until Protestants give both their money and their lives to Christ and his Gospel, as Romanists and Ritualists give their lives to the systems to which they have consecrated their all, the mere mourning over sacerdotal triumphs is a fruitless procedure.

OBITUARY.

REV. DAVID PAYN.

This faithful minister of the Gospel has finished his course after a somewhat trying illness. He died on February 9, at Leamington, at the age of 80, and was buried at Albion Chapel, Kenilworth.

MRS. VAWSER.

After some years of intense suffering from cancer, Mrs. Vawser, wife of Mr. W. K. Vawser, superintendent of the Theatre Mission, Cambridge, fell asleep in Jesus on February 21. The end was very peaceful. She glorified God in suffering more than many in active service.

MR. JAMES CLARKE.

We regret to record the death, on Friday last, of Mr. James Clarke, proprietor of The Christian World. He had been in poor health for some time. We understand that for a good many years past Mr. Clarke has not taken any active share in the conduct of his journal, which is now the inheritance of his three sons.

REV. GEORGE BOWEN, BOMBAY.

About three months ago we announced that this well-known missionary had met with an accident whereby in all probability he would be rendered lame for life. Two months ago, when presenting an illustrated sketch of him to our readers, we expressed a hope that his useful life and testimony might yet be spared to India for a season. But the time of Mr. Bowen's departure was "at hand," for we now learn that he has been called to rest, aged 72 years.

MR. JOHN HENRY STURMAN, CHINA.

This devoted agent of the China Inland Mission died at Chefoo on December 8. He was a native of Rothwell, in Northamptonshire, and went to China in 1883. At T'ai-yuen, where he laboured for some time, he was smitten down with typhus fever. He recovered, however, and betook himself with renewed vigour to his work. Being again attacked with the malady, he endured with fortitude much pain; now he sleeps the sleep of the righteous, after having done what he could in a great field of toil.

DR. ENOCH WOOD.

A career somewhat remarkable for missionary activity has just been closed by the death of Dr. Enoch Wood, at the age of eighty-five. At the age of sixteen he exerted himself in his native town, Gainsborough, Lincolnshire, in conjunction with his friend, Thomas Cooper, to educate the poor by means of a Mutual Improvement Society. In 1826 he entered the mission field, and for two years laboured in the West Indies. His next sphere was New Brunswick, where he laboured for eighteen years, chiefly in Frederiston and St. John. During his declining years infirmity debarred him from active work. He endured much in the way of domestic affliction, but in trouble and bereavement he would say, "I fear God, and that is enough for any man."

MISS BIGGS, ISLINGTON.

A member of Union Chapel, Islington, this lady has just passed away. She had for years consecrated herself to Christian activity, and expired at the mature age of 74. She had weekly classes for parents—men and women—classes for young women, sometimes numbering 300 in attendance. Every Sunday evening she conducted a simple evangelistic service. She was one of the district visitors of the church, and one of the School Board managers for the North of London. She was the manager of a penny bank, an assiduous visitor of the sick, and would take any trouble to obtain relief for the necessitous. She was the life and soul of several agencies. Not satisfied with the possibilities of the church and its neighbourhood, she organised and regularly conducted classes for young women in Regent-street and in Upper Holloway. She was frequently called upon to conduct evangelistic services in different parts of the country, and was the means of the conversion of many.

LODGING-HOUSE FREE BREAKFAST.— On Sunday week the lodgers of the Army and Navy Chambers, Strutton-ground, Victoria-street, were treated to a free breakfast in the kitchen of the house, by the East London Evangelisation Society. About a hundred men and lads partook, and there was Gospel preaching afterwards. Twenty of the company signed the pledge, and some professed to have derived good of a higher nature.

Basis of the Evangelical Alliance.

We said a fortnight since, as one illustration of the objection to creeds, that the article of the Evangelical Alliance Basis concerning Ministry and Ordinances excluded Plymouth Brethren and Friends. It has been replied that Christians of these denominations are not only members of the Alliance but of the Council. This is the article we referred to:—

> (9) The Divine institution of the Christian Ministry, and the obligation and perpetuity of the ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper.

The Friends and the Brethren very decidedly deny the Divine institution of the Christian ministry, as it is generally understood by other denominations. As to Baptism (not to mention Baptismal Regeneration, because it is non-evangelical), some mean by it an ordinance in which an infant makes, by sponsors, certain promises; others regard it as a recognition by the Church that the infant is a child of God; others consider it a sign of a covenant; others as a dedication; while others baptize only such as are old enough to make an intelligent confession of faith in Christ; and, lastly, the Friends abjure the ordinance altogether unless in a spiritual sense. And yet the same form of words is subscribed by all alike!

It has been replied to these remarks of ours that "they are not asked to understand it as others do. If they can satisfy their own consciences it is enough." But what in that case is the use of the creed? A creed is intended to satisfy other people as to the soundness of those who sign it. But if it is not asked that the same words shall mean the same things to all, the document may mean anything, and therefore nothing. If a declaration, consisting of several articles, were signed by twenty persons on this principle, and each of the twenty were to paraphrase it, so as to express what he really believed, it is scarcely probable that any one of the twenty would sign anyone else's paraphrase. Clearly, then, the original document would be useless as a test of their oneness of belief.

The Evangelical Alliance, however, does not impose its Basis "as a creed or a confession," but regards it "simply as an indication of the class of persons whom it is desirable to embrace within the Alliance." We humbly submit that the one word "evangelical" serves this purpose more effectively, and without the incoherence and ambiguity of the articles.

But, asks a friend, "Would not deniers of many of the truths asserted in the Basis call themselves 'evangelical.'" Well, if they were not asked to "understand the word as others do," and if it were regarded as "enough for them to satisfy their own consciences"—as in the above method of signing the creed—perhaps they would.

We should not have referred to the Evangelical Alliance Basis at all, had it not been for the suggestion that subscription to it, or to something like it, should be required as a test of soundness in the faith, thus giving it a significance which the Alliance for itself expressly disavows. We must, in faithfulness to ourselves and to many other evangelical men, who are as firmly opposed to Down-grade theories as any of our most evangelical brethren, declare that we cannot persuade ourselves to build upon so loose a foundation.

It is our daily-deepening conviction that the irritated personal feeling which has been caused on both sides must first be allayed before any useful action can be taken. "The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." Personal amour propre and denominational esprit de corps are at present too much in the ascendant to allow of anything being calmly or wisely settled. Things done now in heat and haste will be repented at leisure by us and our children for years to come. We, therefore, entreat our brethren to wait on God, and on one another: "Let us, therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded; and if in anything ye be otherwise minded, even this shall God reveal unto you: only whereunto we have already attained, by that same rule let us walk."

It is quite evident that any division made at present will not accurately distinguish Down-graders from Up-graders, but will certainly separate evangelical leaders one from another; and the people will follow those they love. Although, therefore, we are misunderstood and misjudged by some of our oldest friends, we declare that we do not believe either side of this controversy is in a condition to take any present action, but that we should all, like Daniel (ix.), humble ourselves and confess our own and our people's sins. Love is the discriminating grace. Only love can discern between the precious and the vile. "And this I pray," says Paul to the first European church, "that your love may abound more and more in knowledge and all discernment; so that ye may approve the things that are excellent [or prove the things that differ]: that ye may be sincere, and without offence unto the day of Christ."

The love which all bear to Mr. Spurgeon is a lever in his hands like that with which Archimedes undertook to do otherwise impossible things. Hard words on either side must be retracted; mistakes of procedure on either side confessed; and the Lord's business will be well done if done in the spirit of meekness.

FIVE HUNDRED STUDENTS of Harvard University (U.S.A.) recently assembled in the Globe Theatre, Boston, for a Sunday evening prayer-meeting.

THE HOME OF HOPE and other institutions conducted under the direction of Mr. G. Ardill, at Sydney, New South Wales, are in successful operation. During the half-year ending December last, 136 inmates were received into the Home of Hope, 60 of them from the police courts. The Discharged Prisoners' Mission has carried the work of rescue and salvation to thousands of souls.

MR. JOSEPH COOK has commenced his new course of lectures in Boston. The subject is "God in the Bible," and the first lecture was devoted to the question, "Did Christ teach by Inspiration?" Mr. Cook said that one cannot escape the doctrine of eternal punishment without lowering the standard of inspiration, and gave as a provisional definition of inspiration this: "Such a Divine superintendence over the books of the Bible as makes them a trustworthy, infallible, and safe guide respecting the way of salvation."

BIBLE-CARRIAGE FOR SOUTH WALES.—On Thursday last, at the Mission-hall, Pontymoile, a new Bible-carriage, specially constructed to work amongst the hills of South Wales, was opened. Mr. Wintle, the hon. superintendent, stated that it was upwards of five years since he first had the desire to pray that a Bible-carriage might be given to the Mission, and now he had the joy of seeing prayers answered. The carriage bore appropriate and striking texts of Scripture in Welsh and English. It is not a commercial speculation or book agency, but like every other branch of the mission is for evangelistic work. Fairs and fêtes will be attended, and every dark corner in the mining districts of South Wales will be periodically visited. Mr. Jas. A. Vicary, Bristol, afterwards delivered an address. The Bible-carriage is fitted up for the purpose of selling Scriptures and Gospel books, and provided with a preaching stand at one end.

MEETINGS OF LONDON MINISTERS.

On the invitation of Rev. F. B. Meyer, a large number of Baptist and Congregational ministers met on Monday afternoon in Regent's Park Chapel to consider the advisability of holding a short series of meetings, with the object of promoting increased spiritual life in themselves and their churches. Mr. Meyer presided, and the spirit of the meeting was most cordial and unanimous throughout.

The resolutions were proposed and seconded by Revs. Messrs. Wigner, Horton, Briscoe, A. Hall, Evans Hurndall, and Fuller Gooch. It was finally decided to hold a ministers' meeting at Regent's Park Chapel, on each Monday in March, from 3 to 4.30; for all ministers belonging to the Baptist and Congregational bodies in the London district. Hopes were expressed that ultimately similar meetings might be arranged without reference to any special religious bodies, and for all ministers wishful to attend.

The subjects proposed are as follow:—"Confession," opened by Rev. Frank White; "Renewal of Consecration Vows," by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch; "The Reception of the Holy Spirit," by Rev. R. F. Horton; "Fruitfulness in Work," by Rev. J. F. B. Tinling.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Promise for March 10 (Ps. l. 15):—"Call upon Me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me."

SEASONABLE BENEVOLENCE,—Mr. W. J. Orsman, hon. superintendent of the Golden-lane and Hoxton Mission, writes:—"Our expenses during the severe weather are very heavy, and we shall be glad to receive help from the Lord's stewards. In addition to the Irish stew and soup dinners, we are giving a pint of cocoa and bread and butter to 150 poor children who would otherwise go to school breakfastless. The head masters of four neighbouring Board schools discreetly issue the tickets of invitation." Mr. Orsman's address is Milton House, Shacklewell Green, E.

THE THIRD BLACKHEATH CONFERENCE was held on February 21 and 22, and, although the weather was severe, the attendance was still larger than last year, and the Lord's presence realised in a large measure. Revs. Jas. Douglas, M.A., and W. Frith spoke on the Character and End of the Age; Rev. G. D. Hooper and Dr. McKilliam on the Hope of the Church; Rev. Chas. Graham and Mr. F. Newth on the Restoration of Judah and Israel; and Rev. Hudson Taylor and Dr. Robert Anderson on the Millennial Age. Sir Robert Phayre, Mr. J. S. Rivolta, Dr. G. Saunders, C.B., and Dr. R. McKilliam presided over the meetings. Generals Anderson, Halliday, and Field, C.B., also took part in the proceedings.

JUBILEE OF DR. HORATIUS BONAR.—The Committee having charge of the Bonar Jubilee Fund have arranged that the presentation of the testimonial shall take place on Thursday, April 5. As the desire is simply to secure an honourable testimonial suitable to the occasion, the amount aimed at has been limited to £1,000, of which sum about £250 is still required. It is believed that some of Dr. Bonar's friends and admirers are still unaware of this movement, and would be glad to have this opportunity of showing their regard for him, and their appreciation of his services to the Christian Church. These friends should send their subscriptions not later than March 20, to Mr. H. G. Kilpatrick, hon. treasurer, 104, South Bridge, Edinburgh.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a special mission at Bettws, Caedewen.——For blessing on a mission to be held by Mr. D. M. Cameron, at a village near Enfield, from March 4 to 9.——For special services at the Tabernacle Chapel, Bristol, from March 5 to 9, to be conducted by Rev. A. J. Jones, of Newport, Mon.——For a great blessing on a special united mission, to be conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A., at Melton Mowbray.——That Mr. Henry Toye, superintendent of the Lewisham-road Home for the Fatherless, may be sustained in his present trial (described in a paragraph elsewhere), and that in God's own time there may be deliverance.——For special services by Mr. William Forbes, at North Kensington, commencing on Sunday, March 11.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Lord Plunket, Archbishop of Dublin.

We learn with much pleasure that the Committee of the London City Mission have decided to increase their staff of missionaries from 480 to 500. This important step has been taken, we believe, in consequence of some recent bequests to the Mission.

When the Crystal Palace was first opened at Sydenham it was proposed to be a great educational and elevating power; but this was never even seriously attempted to be realised. The people wanted recreation rather than instruction. But they never asked for the indecent abomination with which the grand pantomime of "Robinson Crusoe" disgusted some, and demoralised others, of the spectators during the past season.

Attention has very properly been called by a Western paper to the growing indulgence of the House of Commons in relation to "the shameful way in which the Scriptures are dragged into a debate to cast dust in the eyes of the members by a miserable joke." Certainly a Scriptural joker ought not to be tolerated. Let our Bibles be preserved from profanity. A joke from the Bible to elicit a cheer ought to cover the joker with indignation and confusion.

Reference was made in our columns last week to the refusal of the Bishop of Llandaff to institute an English-speaking clergyman to a parish where Welsh is the only tongue known to a considerable portion of the population. The Marquis of Abergavenny, the lay proprietor of the living in question, went to law in the hope of being able to compel the Bishop to institute his nominee. Mr. Baron Huddlestone, before whom the case was heard, upheld the Bishop's decision. The result is distinctly satisfactory. There can certainly be no good reason why Welsh-speaking people should not have Welsh-speaking pastors.

Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall is doing good service in the Mile-end-road. Real Gospel testimony is given by men like Charles Inglis, James B. Wookey, and others, twice on Sunday and almost nightly during the week. We lately found an earnest band of workers in a warm and hearty prayer-meeting on Saturday night; and, as may be supposed, many of these render efficient help in the after-meetings. Not a week passes without some, sometimes many, being gathered into the kingdom of God. The temperance work, and the operations for the suppression of iniquities forbidden by the law and ruinous to the well-being of the community, are carried on with a capacity, courage, and continuity which have no parallel. It has been suggested to us that gaffs, music-halls, and theatres should be visited in order to obtain evidence of their vicious character. It is worthy of remark that Mr. Charrington, who has done more than most men in opposition to such places, has not been inside one of them, and believes it quite unnecessary. We hope the debt on the Great Assembly Hall will soon cease to be a burden on his mind.

We would direct the attention of our London readers to the formation of "The Christian Workers' Reunion," as announced on p. 10. There is a great need for such opportunities of fellowship and intercourse as these weekly reunions will afford.

We read of "the treasures of the snow." And whatever inconvenience the thick covering of the late snows throughout the kingdom may have brought, there has been a marked providential blessing. Meteorologists predicted a drought unparalleled for a hundred years. Nothing so fills wells and hidden reservoirs as melting snow from plains and hill-sides. Men still see the riches of God's goodness and long-suffering in timely provision for his creatures.

Is Cardinal Manning coming back to the purer faith of his early days? The report of his sermon at the Pro-Cathedral, Kensington, last Sunday morning, as given in The Pall Mall Gazette of Monday, hardly contains a sentence that the most ultra-Protestant could not subscribe to. The subject was the forgiveness of sin, and the exposition of it was evangelical to a degree. He declared a free, full, and immediate salvation, received through repentance and faith in the atoning blood of Christ. He even seemed to go out of his way to discount the idea of penance or good works as a condition of salvation.

Surely this sentence must be regarded by orthodox Romanists as flat heresy:—

> It is a mistake to suppose that only priests, or monks, or nuns can aim at the highest; every child of God may be a saint.

If that is good Catholic doctrine, we should imagine that the days of monasteries and convents are numbered; for who would choose to immure himself for life, and afflict his body, unless some merit could be accumulated in the process? There is one sentence in the report that puzzles us. The Cardinal is said to have explained "at some length that, unless impenitent, man is already in a state of salvation, and is predestined by God." We could wish that the reporter had given us a little of the preacher's lengthy explanation; as the matter stands, it leaves us hopelessly in a fog. But, with the exception of the two sentences we have quoted, the sermon would have done credit to the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and we rub our eyes with wonder, fearing lest they may have deceived us.

But stay: we have overlooked an important phrase at the beginning of the report:—

> Abandoning the elaborate Catholic theology which he so eloquently expounds, the Cardinal, in the simplest of language, and on the broadest Christian basis, explained the words of the text.

What we should like to know is this: Did the Cardinal abandon the "Catholic theology" for this occasion only, or has he forsworn it for ever?

Canon Taylor's eulogy of Mohammedan sobriety and morality has been amply shown to be without ground or reason. Mr. J. Bureau, agent of the Kabyle Mission in Tunis, in a letter to us, tells a sad story of the habits of drunkenness and depravity of morals among Moslems. He says:—

> After having been more than four years a missionary among the Mohammedans, I speak from experience when I say that drunkenness is one of the greatest difficulties we encounter in our work in North Africa.

Mr. Bureau says he could quote numerous facts to show that the Mohammedans, taken as a whole, are a very depraved and immoral people. It is not pleasant to think that in the matter of drunkenness such a poor example has been set by those bearing the Christian name. We trust the weighty words of Sir W. Hunter, given in another part of this issue, will be well considered.

The English are not the only people who carry their vices with them to corrupt and demoralise the inhabitants of the countries which they annex. In a recent debate in the French Chamber one of the deputies severely censured the Government for having licensed gaming-tables in Tonquin. By the Annamite code gambling is prohibited; yet France has officially re-established it. Well might the speaker call it "a strange fashion of civilising and moralising a country."

In another part of the horizon, however, a ray of light appears. It is stated that at Monte Carlo the gambling traffic is depressed, and that efforts are being made to attract a poorer class of dupes. So low, it is said, are the funds, that the subsidies to newspapers for advertising the meretricious charms and subtle attractions of the establishment have been withdrawn. If the press will use its newly found freedom in giving publicity to the many suicides, crimes, and miseries caused by the gaming-tables, it will do good service in the crusade against this "plague-spot of the Continent."

When a body of grave and conservative men like Presbyterian ministers in the north of Scotland meet in public conference (as they did at Dingwall the other day) to consider the land question in its relation to the people, we may be sure the necessity is a pressing one. But it is a question beset by many and complicated difficulties, both ethical and economic. We do not believe it can be solved satisfactorily through the medium of legislation pure and simple. There will have to be a willingness on the part of "owners" of the soil to forego selfish considerations in dealing with the best interests of the community at large. On the part of tillers of the soil there will have to be more enterprise and inventiveness, and a breaking up of the false conservatism which leads men to overcrowd particular spots of the earth's surface rather than scatter to those parts of the globe that await the ploughshare and the reaper. If the earth is the Lord's, the children of men ought to feel at home in any part of it where the conditions of life are suitable.

At the Liverpool assizes the other day one of our judges, in sentencing a sailor to penal servitude for a murderous attack upon his wife, condemned in strong terms the action of the publicans, who, "making unholy profit out of the horrid traffic," had poisoned the prisoner with drink. He said that immediate steps should be taken to punish them. Children, said his Lordship, are dying of starvation, and brutal crimes are being committed, and "rich publicans are responsible." These are just words. But does not grave responsibility also attach to those who find the sinews of this unrighteous war, by investing their money in the vast brewing companies lately launched? For instance, in only four days, applications were received for stock and shares in one of these concerns to the value of six millions and a half.

In these dark and difficult times it is very necessary to remember the two-fold relation in which we are placed. On the one hand we are taught to be gentle unto all men, manifesting the spirit of our Master's yearning love, and meekly instructing those that oppose themselves. But on the other, we are commanded to hold fast the form of sound words, and to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. The two positions are not incompatible. We must be strenuous in our opposition to any form of error which has ever borne bitter fruit in the history of the Church and the world. But we must not employ harsh speeches, or poisoned weapons, or methods inconsistent with the most perfect Christian charity. Those who denounce the heterodoxy of the head must beware of the heterodoxy of the heart.

We live in an age of associations. When men approach any great enterprise, they band themselves together with other men, and share with them the toil and the reward. This is a sign of the times, and is consistent with what Scripture has led us to expect. And this spirit has latterly invaded the Christian Church, so that we hear on all hands of unions, and societies, and united action. And it is this state of things which has brought the question of creeds so prominently to the front; because men must have an agreed and common basis of action before they can co-operate. Now we have no hesitation in admitting the immense amount of work which has been effected by combinations of Christians for specific purposes. We would be far from pronouncing them to be inconsistent with the genius of the New Testament. But we are sometimes tempted to wonder, and the more especially when we see the difficulties that crop up as to the basis of association, whether they are as much according to the mind of the Lord as the work of individuals, in sympathy of course, but each doing his own work in dependence on the Master alone.

Most of the great work of the world has been wrought by individuals. A Moses, an Ezra, a Paul; a Wycliffe, a Luther, a Calvin; a Wilberforce, a Müller, a Shaftesbury. It would appear as if, when our God has had some vast scheme in hand, He has chosen his instruments in comparative obscurity, has curiously wrought them in the lower parts of the earth, subjecting them to special preparatory discipline; using them as He willed, and then laying them aside, when his purpose was accomplished. Of course, other men, of lesser calibre, have been drawn in to assist them; this has resulted from the very force and momentum of their movement. But they were by no means necessary to the lifework of the elect ones around whom they gathered; and they dropped back into obscurity when it was done, as the phosphorescent waves in Southern seas drop back into the dark, after one brief gleam in the vessel's wake.

It is a marvellous tribute to the Divine wisdom of our Lord, that He has left no creed to his Church, but has been content to leave us to the guidance and teaching of the Holy Spirit. Who can be more jealous of the truth than He is? Is it not He who fills our hearts with dread of anything which might seem to detract from the glory of the truth as it is in Jesus? He is resident with us still. Let us trust Him. He will not fail in his special office. There may be times in the history of the Church, when it would seem as if truth were to be submerged by error, and the beauty of the Gospel hopelessly obscured. But no such calamity can ultimately befall. The Ark may rock, but it cannot be upset. The pendulum may swing far, but it will reach its limit, and return. The enemy may come in like a flood, but the Spirit of the Lord will check it, ere his victory is complete, saying, "Thus far but no farther." The Spirit of God is the sure guarantee that Gospel truth shall hold its ground. If quenched in one place, it will break out in another. Let us trust and not be afraid, willing to be used in accomplishing his designs.

The differences which have arisen between Dr. Dallinger and other members of the Wesleyan body, with reference to evolution and prayer, are deeply to be regretted. If, however, the Doctor's declaration that—

> In all supplication touching the things of Nature and the present life we pray, not to change God's will—that were blasphemy—but to be mentally and morally changed to his,

has been correctly quoted, it is difficult to see how the dispute could have been avoided. We trust that Dr. Dallinger will yet explain away some of the points which have been objected to in his recent statements. We remember with delight his pulpit utterances of some years ago, when he was not less celebrated in science than he is to-day, and we should be sorry to learn that he has in any way departed from the settled belief in regard to the nature and effect of prayer.

We are glad to see that Mr. De Cobain is again bringing forward in Parliament a measure to provide for weekly payment of wages in Ireland, as we are given to understand that in some districts much suffering is caused by payment being deferred. The men have in the meantime to patronise credit shops, and to pay more than would otherwise be the case. It seems strange that a Bill of the kind should be necessary; for it must be evident to every employer of labour that the value of wages is much depreciated by delay in payment.

A pathetic story has appeared in the papers with reference to a death from exposure and want. It appears that two old women, named respectively Pearce and Piggott, each over seventy years of age, got their living by hawking a few domestic articles. Owing to the severe weather, Pearce was unable to leave the room in Alfred-street, Bermondsey, which they occupied, and although her companion helped her as well as she could "out of her own scanty means," she died "of starvation upon her bed of rags." Yet there are people who spend upon luxuries for a single dinner what would have kept these two industrious old creatures in comfort for years.

The question has been propounded, "Why orthodox men do not preach the Gospel." No more important one could be asked. It is not enough to reply that it is because Gospel preaching is thought to be commonplace. Neither can it be that it has been found useless. Two reasons are obvious: The supreme truths which constitute the Gospel message are not really believed. Men may indignantly repudiate denial of orthodoxy, and yet be out of sympathy with God's great controversy with alienated men. And this also is true: it requires more labour in prayer and study to preach the Gospel powerfully than to dilate on the circumstantials of a text, about which modern books furnish an abundance of information.

There is another cause. We cannot blink the fact that all modern customs of public worship have on them a dark shadow of apostasy. Who can think of Apostles deriving their means of support from men who did not receive their message? In our days, do not ministers of Christianity look for their income from seatholders who dislike Gospel preaching, because they know it carries high spiritual requirements? Who can measure the temptation to even orthodox men from this cause? The times are crying out for prayer that the Holy Spirit may give the age preachers who, like the prophets, shall proclaim the Word of the Lord, whether men shall hear or forbear.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.—Miss Petrie gave the second of her lectures at Steinway Hall, on Tuesday afternoon, Feb. 21. The subject was "Mediæval Missions." Incidentally sketching the rise of Mahommedanism, she pointed out that it excluded Christianity from heathendom on the East and South, and changed missionary effort in those directions from preaching into crusades. By crushing the great patriarchates of the East, it indirectly helped on the exaltation of the Papal power. In the North and West, missionary effort reached the invaders of the Roman Empire, and gradually evangelised them all, the Lithuanians being the last to accept the truth.

RESCUE WORK.—A gathering of those interested in the work of rescuing the fallen, took place at the house of Mrs. Gussey, in Ladbroke-terrace, on the 23rd inst. Some information of the work carried on at 195, Ledbury-road, which is a branch Home of the Reformatory and Refuge Union was afforded by the workers, and addresses were given by Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Revs. W. Tucker and L. Caley, Pastor Frank White, and others. The chairman, Mr. Frank Bevan, commended the efforts of those engaged in the work to the sympathy of all Christians. Mr. A. B. Stoney gave some encouraging facts, telling of the truly Christian lives now led by many of those who have been reclaimed.

THE KABYLE MISSION.—This Mission will henceforth bear the name of the NORTH AFRICA MISSION. Mr. Baldwin, his wife and daughter are arranging to break new ground, probably in Morocco. Considerable interest has been felt in his work by friends in America, as well as some in England, to whom he thinks he can now, under God, look for support, and thus relieve this Mission of any further necessity of sending him funds. Although the Council are no longer responsible for the direction of Mr. Baldwin's work, it will be carried on in full harmony and sympathy with the North Africa Mission. Records of Mr. Baldwin's labours will be given from time to time in North Africa.

COUNT CAMPELLO reports from Terni that he has opened a room for mission services close to the steel factory in the Via Cornelio Tacito, where meetings are held twice a week. This room was taken at the express desire of some of the workmen, as being nearer their work and for their sole use, is likely to be the centre of an important mission. Count Campello has also opened a new station or mission at Castel di Lago, a village about an hour's walk from Arrone. Mission services are held once a week in a room expressly set apart for the purpose, and four times a week there is an evening school for adults, which is very well attended. At Arrone an evening school has been opened, which is attended by about thirty young men.—The Record.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION. — Prebendary Tate presided last Friday evening at a meeting at Kippington, Seven Oaks, on behalf of this Society. He expressed his warm admiration of the efforts being made to take the Gospel to the men in their ships on the Thames. The Society had been nursed in prayer, and he was glad to know that its one grand object was to tell to men the story of the redeeming love of the Lord Jesus Christ. Speaking of the improved condition of the sailors, he said it was no uncommon thing to hear men who aforetime blasphemed now singing the praises of the Saviour while they were at their work. Rev. Henry Bloomer, secretary and superintendent of the Mission, gave an interesting lecture illustrated with dissolving views.

Letters to the Editor.

DR. CLIFFORD ON THE SACRAMENTS.

DEAR MR. EDITOR,—Had I anticipated the possibility of your objecting to my reply, I should have cited some of the Scriptures on which the usage in question rests.

The point in dispute is, whether such phrases as "the cousin of our Lord," "the boy Jesus," "the babe of Bethlehem," "assert what the Holy Spirit does not assert"; "emphasise what He does not emphasise"; and "tend to throw the revelation He has given us out of proportion"? (See THE CHRISTIAN, February 17, page 20.) You will, I know, allow the finality of an appeal "to the law, and to the testimony," and therefore I say nothing of the fact that similar phrases are used by Justin Martyr and Cyril of Alexandria, Godet and Pressensé, Delitzsch and Neander, Ellicott, Fairbairn, and many others. If your charge of misrepresenting the teaching of the Holy Ghost can be sustained, then the list of names is only another proof added to the melancholy catalogue of illustrations of the way in which good and wise teachers may be mistaken.

Now to the proof. First, the angel of God speaks distinctly of the mother of the Baptist as the "kinswoman" of Mary, the mother of our Lord (Luke i. 36). In Matthew's Gospel the angel of God describes Jesus as "the young child"; in the Gospel of Luke we read of Jesus as "a babe," "the babe," "this child," "and the child grew" (ii. 12, 16, 18, 40). Paul does not shrink from saying, "Of the other Apostles saw I none, save James, the Lord's brother" (Gal. i. 19; cf. also Matt. i. 25, xiii. 55; Luke viii. 21; Mark iii. 31; John ii. 12, vii. 3). Indeed, the New Testament writers boldly assert the actual and thoroughgoing humanity of Jesus Christ, and his perfect experience of our human life in its entire range, save that "He did no sin:" John, indeed, going so far as to signalise as the most fatal of denials, the assertion that Jesus Christ is not come in the flesh (1 John iv. 2).

As to emphasis, I need only refer you to the appeals for steadfast faith, unwearied prayer, and thoroughgoing humility contained in Hebrews ii. 5, 18, and iv. 14—16, Phil. ii. 5, 10, and based on the completeness of our Lord's humanity.

I ask, then, in the light of these Scriptures, whether the solitary use of a phrase describing the Baptist as "the cousin of our Lord," in an address extending over 26 pages, many of which are devoted to the exposition of the "Sacraments" as aids to the adoration of our Divine Redeemer, is anti-scriptural in itself or in its emphasis.—I am, sincerely yours, JOHN CLIFFORD.

21, Castellain-road, Maida Vale, W., Feb. 20.

[We are very far from wishing to make a man an offender for a word; and still further from questioning the true manhood of the Lord Jesus in the most far-reaching sense of that word. That the Scriptures affirm this, and speak of his human relationships, Dr. Clifford has sufficiently proved. The only question is whether, when we attempt to do the same, we do so in a way which obscures the equally important truth of the true Divinity of the Man Christ Jesus. In the New Testament, when He is spoken of as babe, or child, or man, the connexion does not permit us to forget that He is the Word made flesh; that his home is the bosom of the Father; that He is the Lord from heaven; or the Son of Man who is in heaven. And when, on three occasions, the mother of Jesus spoke or acted as though her own motherhood were more present to her mind than the claims of the Eternal Father, his reply reminded her that He was the Only-begotten of the Father—the First-begotten sent into the world: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" "Woman, what to Me and thee? Mine hour is not yet come." "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother" (Luke ii.; John ii.; Matt. xii.).

In relation to John's baptism of Jesus, the fact of their cousinship is not brought out in the Gospel narrative, but John acknowledges his greater holiness, and so far from referring to their relationship he says, "I knew Him not; but He that sent me to baptize with water the same said unto me, upon whomsoever thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and abiding upon Him, the same is He that baptizeth with the Holy Spirit. And I saw and bare witness that this is the Son of God" (John i.).

We do not wish to attribute to Dr. Clifford any intention to under-state the Divinity of the Lord, which he asserts in the last sentence of the above letter; but we are persuaded that the tendency of the time is to assert the claims of man more than those of God; and we still think that to speak of the Sent One of the Father as "the young man of Galilee," and to introduce Him as the cousin of John, where John would bow before Him, are symptoms of a tendency in this direction, of which ministers of Christ never needed to be cautioned more than now.

We willingly admit that had not Dr. Clifford previously written of the Saviour as "the young man of Galilee," our reviewer would probably not have noticed his being called "the cousin of John" in the recent pamphlet; and the former was linked with the latter in our mind in writing our editorial note.—ED.]

GIVING OR SELLING SCRIPTURES.

DEAR SIR,—In your issues of January 27 and February 17 you have drawn attention to Mr. Wilkinson's "Plea for the world-wide distribution of the Word of God." I have read and re-read with the deepest interest the pamphlet issued by our beloved friend, and fully agree with him that the various Bible Societies should be supplied with funds much more liberally than they are, and that existing missions in all parts of the world should be utilised to the utmost extent in Bible distribution.

I cannot, however, endorse his conclusion that giving away Scriptures is preferable to selling them, nor can I see the possibility of carrying out Mr. Wilkinson's wish without the employment of colporteurs, especially in such countries as Africa, India, and China, where the number of missionaries is so very small, and tens of thousands of towns and villages can only be reached by colportage. It may be a question whether such colporteurs could with greater advantage be directly associated with the Bible societies or with the missionary societies. Were the latter practicable, the advantages would be very great.

The question of Scripture colportage is one to which I have devoted no little attention. In the year 1854 I threw myself heart and soul into the distribution by gift of the million Testaments. After giving much time to this work for several years, I was fully convinced that this line of work was a mistake. The British and Foreign Bible Society did then exactly what Mr. Wilkinson now urges them to do; nearly every British missionary I then knew gladly assisted them to the extent of his power, and I do not remember one with whom I have had the opportunity of comparing notes, who was satisfied with the results. Their present plan of discouraging gifts as a general rule in China, while assisting largely and liberally any missionary willing to undertake or superintend sales at reduced prices, so fully commends itself to our judgment, that we have declined offers more than once of grants for free gifts. As Mr. Wilkinson's pamphlet shows, and the British and Foreign Bible Society have all along known, sales cannot guarantee against misuse; but from personal observation I can testify that they considerably lessen the danger. The comparison of the gratuitous circulation of books, the character of which is not known, with the gifts of affection of valued friends is, to my mind, utterly fallacious. Do we not all receive gratuitously through the post publications which without ceremony we consign to the waste-paper basket?

The British and Foreign Bible Society, as the pamphlet shows, have always recognised the desirability of giving portions of Scripture to those who were too poor to purchase. They have also in China, for the last 30 years, utilised the efforts of missionaries as far as possible, and have stimulated them by liberal offers of assistance, where necessary, of the very kind that Mr. Wilkinson finds so useful in Europe. They have latterly thought it well to supplement this, as have the National Bible Society of Scotland, and the American Bible Society, by having depôts and colporteurs of their own, and I cannot see that the mere fact that this agency is expensive, as the Societies in question have themselves pointed out, is any condemnation of the system, unless it can be shown that on other grounds there are serious objections to the plan, or that at least approximately good results can be better arrived at.

With great affection for our friend, Mr. Wilkinson, I deprecate exceedingly his method of dividing the gross expense of colportage, &c., by the number of copies put into circulation: it were as reasonable to divide the gross expenses of missions by the numbers of supposed conversions; this method of dealing with work in Mohammedan countries, or in pioneer efforts, would simply result in the two grave evils of discouraging the hearts of supporters at home, and of tempting the more sanguine missionaries to make too much of hopeful cases. One of the chief dangers of colportage by Bible societies arises from this line of comparison. If the colporteur gathers that the number of copies he circulates is of more moment than the spiritual influence he exerts, he may make a good bookseller, but leave an impression behind far from commending the book, or facilitating subsequent missionary operations. It is hard enough for the poor colporteurs who have not the softening influences and joys of gathering native Christians into churches and watching their growth in grace, to be always moving about among indifferent heathen, without their having the commercial feeling pressed upon them that they must show a sufficient number of sales to compare with the expense of the work. Unless the colporteur be a spiritual man, actuated by the highest motives, and as sincere, earnest, and enthusiastic as missionaries engaged in other branches of labour, it were better not to employ him at all. If on the other hand he is such, the highest results of his work can never be tabulated.

Excuse the length of this letter. The importance of the subject is one which cannot be exaggerated. —Yours faithfully, J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

BRITAIN'S SIN.

DEAR SIR,—I desire to call the attention of Christians to the fact that Great Britain as a nation is at this moment guilty of the twofold sin for which Israel was overthrown. On the one side we have "idolatry," as displayed in that erection lately unveiled in our once Protestant Cathedral of St. Paul's. On the other side there are the national recognition and legalisation of sin, in direct opposition to the Divine law, as shown by Mr. Dyer's recent letters.

Is it not time that true children of God, whatever the section of Christ's Church to which they belong, should rise above their petty differences, and cry mightily unto the Lord that He would have mercy on our guilty nation, and purge away the wickedness which is sanctioned in high places. —Yours very truly,

Cambridge. H. M.

MENAGERIE FATALITIES AND BARBARITIES.

SIR,—May I appeal to your readers to discountenance in every way they can the rage for menageries and performing animals?

The report of the "Royal Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals" says: "It is a matter of extreme anxiety and regret to the Committee that there is a tendency at the present time to find entertainment for the public in performances and sports involving the ill-treatment, and often the torture, of animals."

A Daily News article three or four years ago remarks: "Probably no animals (except acrobatic children) suffer more from cruelty than the performing wild beasts. Wild animals have no inherited instinct for jumping through paper hoops, or dancing on their hind legs, or firing off guns. It is difficult to teach a bear to dance, and hasty masters have encouraged him by placing him on iron plates inconveniently warm."

The Daily Telegraph, last July, says: "Not a week passes without some horrible accident in a menagerie."

Serious and fatal injuries to the showmen and keepers abound, caused by human greed, and cruelty, and recklessness. Your space will not admit of detail. Eyes put out, arms torn off, bodies crushed and mangled to death.

The Daily Telegraph describes, a few months ago, a tamer having "half his skull snapped off, and his spinal column cracked in twain, as he was making his beasts perform before a large crowd."

Well does one of your contemporaries say, in referring to a similar fatality: "Such are the terrible scenes, which, at intervals, more or less lengthy, are presented within the cage of some lion or tiger that has been irritated beyond endurance."

A letter to The Daily News, of last October, calls public attention to the prolonged and cruel beating, and piteous cries, of performing wolves, which the writer saw and heard at the Royal Aquarium.

The Daily News, of February 6, tells of a female lion tamer at Dublin being photographed with her head in a lion's mouth resulting in the animal's closing his mouth suddenly on her head.

Within the last few days, a pack of wolves, belonging to Sanger's Amphitheatre, got out of their iron-barred cage, and ravenously devoured one of the circus horses, spreading terror through the neighbourhood of Westminster-bridge-road.

It is true that, in order to stamp their nature out of them, you can beat bears with a thick stick on their shins till the stick breaks; you can stab elephants, and strike them with pitchforks, and put out their eyes; you can beat lions with iron truncheons and pitchforks.

But, after all, is it safe for men, and is it use, or abuse, of animals? Surely the lower creation suffer enough for our necessities, without our imprisoning them, and wantonly tormenting them for our entertainment.

It is to be feared that, for the sake of amusing children, or for some other such object, even humane persons thoughtlessly encourage menageries, and circuses, and wild beast shows, where cruelty is generally so cleverly kept out of sight that the animals almost appear before the public to enjoy the performance.

Earnestly trusting that Christians will use their influence against this popular source of suffering, and wrong.—Faithfully yours,

Bonchurch, I.W. S. S. MONRO.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Birmingham.—A correspondent writes that great blessing attended the mission at St. Basil's, Deritend, one of the churches joining in the Birmingham mission lately reported at some length in our columns. Dr. Morris was the mission preacher.

Rev. G. Frankling Owen has conducted a week of special services at Marlborough Baptist Chapel, South Devon. Much interest was taken in the services. God's blessing was upon the work in the conversion of souls and in the refreshing of believers.

Revivals are reported from several places in the State of New York. More than two hundred persons have been converted at services held in connection with the First Reformed Church of Albany; while at Herkimer hundreds of souls—no one can tell how many—have found peace in believing in Christ unto salvation.

Mr. William F. Holt, evangelist, having completed a three years' charge of the Cuckoo-road Mission, Nechells, Birmingham, was recently about to look for another sphere of labour, when the people among whom he had been so successfully working besought him to remain among them. A new mission hall, to hold seven or eight hundred persons, is to be built for Mr. Holt's use.

Hereford.—Gospel services have been held by Messrs. Leonard Weaver and William Grove, in the Corn Exchange, and other places in this city, during the past fortnight. All the meetings have been numerously attended, and many have confessed Christ. Both evangelists have laboured earnestly and successfully amongst the masses of people here. They have left for Oldham, and then intend visiting Blackburn and Liverpool, after which they proceed to Belfast.

Mr. Henry Thorne conducted services in connection with the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., Swansea, from February 15 to 20. The Bible-readings were most profitable, and at the Gospel meetings a number of persons desired prayer, or decided to serve the Lord Jesus. On Sunday, Feb. 19, a large meeting of men was held, and several desired prayer. While praising God for his blessing, we desire prayer that those who decided for Christ may be kept steadfast in the faith.
W. N.

Ottawa, Canada.—Messrs. Crossley and Hunter have been holding evangelistic services in the Methodist Church, Ottawa, for the past five weeks. Over one hundred have professed conversion. Christians also have been wonderfully refreshed and strengthened. The daily papers must have credit for the bountiful space they have given in publishing the good news. Another evangelist, Rev. Mr. Meikle, is labouring in the Presbyterian churches of Ottawa, and truly the Lord is with him.
J. C. D.

Tollington Hall, Hornsey-road, N.—Several earnest Christian brethren have lately been working here. The Lord has blessed the effort, and manifested his saving grace in setting some souls at liberty. We have a short, bright service in the afternoon for any poor wanderer who may feel disposed to come in. We visit the public-houses as they close, at 3 p.m., and give an invitation into the service, when the Gospel is preached plainly and simply. On Sunday week one dear man stepped out of darkness into light, and went home rejoicing in the Lord. A Gospel service is also held in the evening, and an after-meeting for dealing with anxious ones.
JOHN R. BULLOCK.

Mr. G. C. Needham at Springfield, Mass.—The first week of the special services under the direction of Evangelist Needham has, says The New York Observer, closed in the State-street Baptist Church, Springfield, Mass. From the first there were signal indications of a genuine work. The pastor and people had been on their knees for weeks before the arrival of the evangelist, who was immediately impressed with the spiritual and reverential tone of the meetings. Mr. Needham's preaching is literally teaching. The people were taught day by day their privileges in Christ, their dignity as sons of God, their ground of present joy, and the full assurance of faith. The outworking of this method of preaching soon became apparent in the steadily increasing tide of enthusiasm and earnestness possessing the audiences. There has been no appeal to workers, and yet the Christian people are not only ready for work, but are doing it. There has been no appeal to sinners, notwithstanding the scheme of redemption in its systematic presentation has brought peace to many, and there have been several conversions—clear, intelligent confessions of Christ.

Mr. James B. Wookey, during the past month, has been working with much success at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End. On Sunday next he commences a month's mission at the Gospel Hall, Southgate-road, Wood-green, N.

Mr. Packer, of the Evangelisation Society, recently conducted a mission in Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke's district (East-street, Marylebone), with much blessing. His clear, earnest preaching of the simple Gospel went home to many hearts.

Inverness.—Mr. J. A. Smith, evangelist, has concluded a series of meetings in the Shore-street Hall. The labours of this earnest evangelist have been much appreciated by those in the district, and manifest tokens of blessing have attended his work.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has conducted eight days' special mission services at Moseley-road Church, Birmingham (Rev. George Type, pastor). In spite of the unfavourable weather, the congregations were good and the results encouraging, a number having been brought to decision.

Dr. Pentecost, assisted by Mr. Stebbins, has held a series of very successful meetings at Lawrence, Mass. He delivered seventy addresses, and conducted a large number of after-meetings. At the last after-meeting over fifty persons acknowledged Christ. The effects of the mission are declared to be far-reaching, and of a lasting character.

Darlaston.—Captain W. W. Dennis has conducted a fourteen days' mission here with blessed results. During the mission, services were held for men only, women only, and adults only, which latter embraced the adult Bible-class, the membership of which is now nearly 800. This class furnished a good proportion of the converts. Bible-readings of a very interesting character were given every afternoon. The total number of names taken was 370.

Stapenhill, Burton-on-Trent.—A very successful mission was held in this parish in connection with the Church of England from Feb. 5 to 19, conducted by Mr. J. Wood. His addresses were very searching, and believers were brought into close contact with spiritual realities. The mission rooms of the parish were well filled each Sunday, and on the last Sunday afternoon Mr. Wood addressed a very large congregation of young people in the parish church.

South London.—For several months very successful evangelistic services have been held every Sunday evening in the Peckham Public Hall by Rev. Frank M. Smith, pastor of Norfolk-street Baptist Church. Conversions are frequent. During the last fortnight a great impetus has been given to the work by a mission conducted by the Misses Bax and Smith, of Southsea, through whose earnest Gospel services of speech and song, a large number have been brought to decision for Christ. Special services for children were held and with blessed results. Many of the little ones testified to having received Christ.

Kingston-on-Thames.—The Elms-road Mission Hall, Kington-on-Thames, was erected by the kindness and generosity of Mr. David Hallett, a resident in the town. It was built to provide Gospel teaching for those who did not attend the Churches. The hall was finished and prepared, but the people did not seem disposed to come. At this critical period the Evangelisation Society supplied relays of able preachers, who have succeeded in gathering a steadily increasing congregation. Mr. Taylor has been delivering a series of addresses on Sunday and Wednesday evenings, ending Feb. 29. His soul-stirring words and simple explanation of Gospel truth have been greatly blessed to many. The audiences have been chiefly composed of working people.

Rev. Robert Balgarnie has lately conducted mission services at the Victoria Park Congregational Church (Rev. Thomas Evans, pastor). Each night during the week the church was filled by congregations which listened with eager attention to the words of the preacher. Every address was of a most soul-stirring character, and suitable to the occasion. While the youngest child could understand, the most experienced Christian could find spiritual food suited to his appetite. A large number confessed decision for Christ. Teachers and Christian workers have been stimulated by seeing their senior scholars come forward in large numbers, while many of the regular attendants of the church, who before were following afar off, have declared themselves as serving under the banner of the Cross.

Mr. J. E. Simester has been conducting special services in Kensington Town Hall, with much success, blessing having followed each service.

Hawick, N.B.—Mr. Richard Weaver has concluded a successful two weeks' mission here. Some professed conversion every night. Christians of all names attended the meetings and gave their help. In fact they have been the best meetings we have seen for many years. Mr. Weaver has left to go to the Edinburgh Castle, London, where many prayers will follow him.
J. H. H.

Low Fell, Newcastle-upon-Tyne.—A three weeks' successful mission has been held in the Southern Memorial Hall by Mr. T. Canning, and, notwithstanding the very inclement weather during the greater part of the time, the hall was nightly filled, and great power rested on all. Many have professed conversion, and believers have been abundantly blessed. A thank-offering of £25 has been sent to the Evangelisation Society.

MR. DENHAM SMITH'S physicians again report an increase in the symptoms of his malady, which is making decided progress, and reducing his already feeble strength.

THE GOSPEL IN THE OPEN AIR.—From the seventh annual report of the Brighton United Open-Air Mission, it appears that during last year many fresh Christian workers added their names to the roll of preachers. The meetings were well attended, and nearly every one of them was characterised by blessing.

EAST-END FACTORY GIRLS.—On Tuesday evening, last week, nearly two hundred of this class were gathered to a social tea. The meeting was in connection with the Factory Girls' Institute, of the East London Tract Mission, which is opened two nights a week. The object is to bring them under good influences. The lady superintendent, Mrs. Merrel, will be pleased to receive any left-off clothing or help at the Institute, Welcome Hall, Culloden-street, Poplar, E.

FLOODS IN CHINA.—The disastrous inundations of the Yellow River, in Northern China, have been followed by another terrible occurrence. During the repairing of the embankment of the river two thousand bamboo rafts were laden with stones to create a breakwater. They put out into the stream, and were all engulfed, three mandarins and 4000 coolies being drowned. The operations on the river consist in stopping the gaps, strengthening the banks, widening and deepening the channel, digging parallel channels, and cutting off the curves.

ATTACK ON MISSIONARIES IN AFRICA.—News was received on Friday last at the Free Church Offices, Edinburgh, by mail, that Arab traders had attacked the missionaries at the upper end of Lake Nyassa. Rev. Dr. Laws, writing from Bandawe on Jan. 19, says that Consul O'Neil and all the Whites had been attacked for five days and nights by Arabs. The Consul digged trenches and pits, affording shelter in the enclosure to three hundred Whites and friendly natives. The battle ended in only two natives being wounded. Dr. Laws further states that the assistance of 5,000 natives was procured, after which the Arabs withdrew. Dr. Kerr Cross, writing from Nyassa says that he had gone to procure more ammunition, and they intended making a strong stand. The Free Church authorities intend to bring the state of affairs before the Government, as the outbreak is entirely due to the slave trade.

AN EARLY-RISING MISSION BAND.—Mr. G. H. Hooton, of 19, Miranda-road, Upper Holloway, N., writes to The Methodist Recorder:—Every morning for years past, by the 7.3 Midland train from South Tottenham to St. Pancras, a band of Christians (who are good singers) on their way to business assemble in a specially-engaged compartment sanctioned by the company, who have given instructions to their servants that they are not to be molested. Amongst the number are two ladies, whose voices blend nicely with the men's. A few only start from South Tottenham, but at each station they increase. When Upper Holloway is reached they are closely packed. The hymns they select are from Songs and Solos and The Christian Choir. At Kentish-town, where the train stops for a few minutes, many of the passengers who change for the City gather around the carriage and listen with rapt attention. The good seed sown in the early morn, when men are fresh for the day, and when they are most susceptible to good influences, may abide in some hearts and bear fruit to the glory of God.

REV. F. B. MEYER'S LATEST BOOK.

ELIJAH: and the Secret of his Power.

By the REV. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

With NINE Illustrations.

"This is a most stimulating Book. It sparkles with Heavenly light, and glows with Heavenly fire, from beginning to end. Mr. Meyer has thoroughly caught 'the Spirit and power of Elias.' He has very fully brought out where the Prophet got his fire and fervour. In this particular, Mr. Meyer's Book is unique, and most valuable to God's people, especially to Christian Workers. Let cold-hearted Christians read it, and get warmth and heat imparted; let lazy Christians read it, and get shamed into life and action; let stumbling Christians read it, and learn the path of power and victory; let tried Christians read it, and find true peace and comfort; let uninstructed Christians read it, and be taught the deep things of God. Seldom have we read a Book more calculated to do good than this one. We honestly and heartily recommend it." Presbyterian Messenger, Feb. 3, 1888.

PERCIVAL'S PICTURE GALLERY

By A. L. O. E.

With Attractive Frontispiece in Colour.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"We have walked through 'PERCIVAL'S PICTURE GALLERY' with great pleasure, admiring the chaste productions of a rich fancy, and the skilful interweaving of the moral with the picturesque. We would recommend our readers to follow our example."—Footsteps of Truth.

"Percival is a bright, gifted, true-hearted young artist. His 'PICTURE GALLERY' consists of representations of Scripture incidents from the Old and New Testaments, which are here delightfully narrated, and no less clearly expounded. For the young the volume will prove deeply interesting and instructive."
The Baptist Messenger.

PEARLS OF WISDOM FROM THE PARABLES.

By A. L. O. E.

Illustrated with Twenty-four full-page Original Drawings.

Cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 4s.

"This unique volume is sure to be popular. What the 'Schönberg Cotta Family' is to the Reformation; what the 'Prince of the House of David' is to the days of Christ; and what the 'Pillar of Fire' is to the Israelites in the Wilderness—this book is in a certain sense to Christ's parables."
The Christian Commonwealth.

"These are 'PEARLS' indeed. The gifted authoress has added a rare volume to her already large stock of books, and the reading public will thank her for this delightful work."—The Christian Treasury.

"OUT OF EGYPT."

A SERIES OF DISCOURSES AND BIBLE READINGS ON THE EXODUS OF ISRAEL, AND ITS SPIRITUAL LESSONS.

By Rev. Dr. G. F. PENTECOST, M.A.

Presentation Edition: Cloth boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"A truly living and freshly suggestive book; scriptural in teaching, and enriched everywhere with suitable anecdotes and apt illustrations. A most practical commentary on the portion of the Word with which it deals."
British Messenger.

"A capital book, full of both mental and moral force, and all aglow with evangelical sentiment."—Primitive Methodist.

"A powerful and brilliant work. Dr. Pentecost is not only a man of marked ability and scholarship; but he is also a pulpit orator of the highest order."
Oldham Chronicle.

CHOICE SAYINGS.

By ROBERT C. CHAPMAN.

Presentation Editions: Cloth, gilt edges, 2s.; morocco, gilt edges, 3s.

"Here we have gold-dust; 'and the gold of that land is good.' We hardly know a man more noteworthy for abounding grace and deep piety than ROBERT C. CHAPMAN. This name has never been sounded abroad; but those who know him value him beyond expression. Some of these brief 'SAYINGS' contain whole sermons. Personally we expect to gather many discourses while studying this little book. A dew from heaven rests upon Mr. Chapman's expositions."
The Sword and Trowel.

RUTH, THE MOABITESS.

A SERIES OF BIBLE READINGS ON THE BOOK OF RUTH.

By HENRY MOORHOUSE.

Presentation Edition: Cloth limp, 1s.

"Containing many fresh and original remarks, all tending to practical usefulness. A capital sixpennyworth of commenting on a favourite book."
The Sword and Trowel.

Cheap Edition: Tinted covers, 6d.

NEW BOOK by ANNA SHIPTON.

"THE LORD WAS THERE."

INCIDENTS FROM MY JOURNAL.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, gilt edges, 2s. (Cloth, 1s 6d.)

CONTENTS.

I. THE WALK TO EMMAUS.
II. THE SHEPHERD'S VOICE.
III. A STRENGTH TO THE NEEDY.
IV. THE MASTER'S MESSAGE.
V. THE SHADOW OF A GREAT ROCK.
VI. THE PAVILION OF JEHOVAH.
VII. A FRIEND THAT LOVETH AT ALL TIMES.

"A book which will be valued by decided Christians of ripe experience. It contains a record of wonderfully exact answers to prayer, of providential guidance conveyed in outward circumstances, and by inward convictions. The facts are imbedded in a mass of devout meditations and reflections of the sort to which readers of Anna Shipton's numerous works are well accustomed. Care should be used in the distribution of this little book; to place it in the hands of the careless and profane would be casting pearls before swine. We are glad to see the doctrine of sinless perfection strongly condemned in this quarter, and further to find the power of faith portrayed in so vivid a manner in this sceptical age. The publishers deserve a word of praise for the extremely pretty binding."—The Record, February 3, 1888.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY BIRTHDAY BOOK.

With Beautifully Illuminated Frontispiece. Cloth boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Editions: Morocco, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.;
Rich coloured leather, padded, gilt edges, 4s. 6d.

In this country very few books, except the "Pilgrim's Progress," have been so largely circulated or so widely read as BOGÁTZKY'S "GOLDEN TREASURY." In addition to the issue of BOGATZKY in the ordinary form, the Publishers have also produced an Edition, ARRANGED AS A BIRTHDAY BOOK, a form in which it is believed the volume will be welcomed by many. In this "Birthday" Edition, four additional pages are introduced at the close of each month's portions. These extra pages are arranged with thirty or thirty-one blank squares or spaces—one for every day of the month. Each of these squares is adapted for receiving four entries; consequently, the total number of names which can be inscribed in the special pages of the "Birthday" Edition amounts to OVER FIFTEEN HUNDRED.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY

OF TEXTS FOR THE CHILDREN OF GOD. A Series of Scripture Texts and Meditations for Every Day in the Year.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.
Also in Roxburgh style, 1s.; Cloth, 1s. 6d.

ISRAEL: A PRINCE WITH GOD.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THE STORY OF JACOB RE-TOLD.

Cloth, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s 6d.

"Exceedingly good. Not only spiritual, as everything from our brother Mr. Meyer would be, but also thoughtful, fresh, suggestive, and thoroughly practical. We rejoice at every remembrance of the good work done in Melbourne Hall, Leicester, by this laborious worker, and we are glad to see that Mr. Meyer is likely to be useful with his pen, as well as useful with his tongue. Oh that hundreds of our younger men gave signs of such real godliness, such true devotion, and such clear knowledge of the Gospel, as we see in this pastor."
Sword and Trowel.

NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS.

A RECORD OF THE LIFE OF A BELOVED SISTER.

By FRANCES E. WILLARD.

With Introduction by BISHOP FOSTER; and a Prefatory Note by the Poet, JOHN G. WHITTIER. With Three Portraits, and View of Miss Willard's Birthplace.

Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s.

"A book that may be safely put into a young lady's hands, with the assured confidence that it will serve to strengthen and deepen all influences for good."
The Christian.

"The young girl whose short life is here portrayed by a sisterly hand was a charming character, and exemplified the graces of a Christian experience. The pages of her diary are a revelation of the writer's bright heart and keen observation of her surroundings. The portrait and pictures are capital. A delightful biography."—The Christian Commonwealth.

D. L. MOODY AT HOME.

HIS HOME AND HOME WORK. Containing a Description of the Educational Institutions at Northfield and Mount Hermon: together with some account of the various Christian Conferences held, and the best Thoughts therein exchanged. With Eight full-page Illustrations of the Educational Buildings. Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"This is a book calculated to interest and help Christian workers. They will find in it many thoughts that will arrest their attention, and prove helpful and practical: some that may be fitly compared to gold, silver, and precious stones."—The Friend.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CHRONIC BRONCHIAL AFFECTION WITH HÆMOPTYSIS. — TESTIMONY OF A PATIENT AT BOW.

Mrs. Mary Ann Immins was suffering from the above, and had suffered for more than four years, until Rev. J. F. Foster, of Old Ford, recommended her to adopt my treatment. It was scarcely to be hoped that such immediate benefit would be realised as that which followed the use of my medicine—the patient being sixty-two years of age. She writes me, October 17, as follows:—

"I beg to tender my sincere thanks for the great and lasting benefit I have received.

"It was in April last the Rev. J. F. Foster induced me to try your remedies, which I did with wonderful success.

"At that time my symptoms were bad Cough, and expectoration mixed with blood (this had been a long-time trouble), pains in the chest and side, great irritation, loss of appetite, sleeplessness. I was brought into a state of great debility.

"I tried three medical men, without deriving the slightest benefit or advantage in any way.

"But in one single week I felt better, with your medicine, than I had felt for four years under other treatment.

"I trust this acknowledgment will afford you great satisfaction," &c.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

THE DOWN-GRADE CONTROVERSY.

THE BAPTIST UNION COUNCIL.

At its adjourned meeting last week the Council resolved, after a four hours' discussion, and with five dissentients, to adopt a declaration of belief in evangelical doctrine, the points of which were enumerated. They do not differ from those usually ranged under that head except that, in the case of "the eternal punishment of the wicked," a clause was added to the effect that some have interpreted the Scriptural statement of this doctrine in a way different from that commonly understood, and that the Council had found no difficulty in holding fellowship with them.

MR. SPURGEON'S COLLEGE.

(Communicated.)

An important meeting of the London Committee of the Pastors' College was held in the College buildings on Friday last, to receive the scrutineer's report of the poll taken of the entire body of the ministers in great Britain educated in Mr. Spurgeon's Institute as to the original basis of the College Association. There had not been time, of course, to receive that of the foreign brethren. Professor Gracey occupied the chair.

The result was announced, and it was found that of the 496 replies sent in, 432 were in full accord with Mr. Spurgeon's interpretation of that basis; sixteen voted an unqualified, seven a qualified, "No." With a very few exceptions, the letters which in many instances accompanied the returns expressed the heartiest concurrence in the step taken, and, even in cases where the "Yes" was not recorded, breathed the warmest affection personally to the President, and the strongest loyalty to the truths which he has spent his life to promote and defend. In proposing a hearty vote of thanks to the scrutineers, Professors Gracey and Fergusson (seconded by Pastor A. G. Brown), Pastor Frank White said he believed that the result, when known, would redound in much thanksgiving to God far beyond the circle of the Pastors' College.

Mr. Gracey read a letter from Mr. Spurgeon, to the effect, that though he did not know in whom was vested the power to do so, as such a step was never contemplated, he, as its founder and president, did thereby dissolve the Pastors' College Conference; adding that if any objected to this course as unwarrantable he should resign the Presidency. He trusted to be able in a few days to invite those brethren who had sent in "Yes," and as many others as could conscientiously sign its articles, to join a new Conference established on the same basis as the old, only with that basis more clearly and fully defined. He hoped that there would be no break in its history, and that it would meet at the time appointed.

Mr. Spurgeon's letter contained some touching and affectionate allusions to those who had differed from him. We believe the future Association will be open to the admission of brethren who have not been educated in the Pastor's College, but who heartily approve of its terms of brotherhood. Though, of course, not unexpected, the receipt of the letter gave unmingled satisfaction to all present. This was unanimously expressed by a show of hands, not one being held up either as "contrary" or "neutral."

Mr. Spurgeon intends to carry on the new Conference on the identical lines of the old, and to conduct its sittings with the sole view to the spiritual edification of its members. Every reader of The Christian will, we are sure, join in the prayer that whatever may be the future of this new, yet old, association of Gospel ministers, it may be largely possessed by the spirit "of power, and of love, and of a sound mind," and that its example may encourage in all evangelical denominations very many others in these days of division and peril to draw closer together on the old lines of the old Gospel, and, at the same time, "as far as possible, live peaceably with all men."

OUR OPIUM TRADE.—On March 24, Rev. Goodeve Mabbs lectured on our opium trade with China, in the Albion Hall, Horsham, by request of the Total Abstinence Society. The Rev. J. Hill occupied the chair, and urged that those who had votes should use them at election times against this iniquitous trade. The statement made by the lecturer that, during the current year, there had been a falling off of upwards £1,000,000 in our opium revenues, was received with marked applause. A hearty vote of thanks was passed at the close.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

FRANCE.—Protestants are thankful that M. De Mahy has resigned his office as Minister of the Marine, for which his extreme prejudice against England and Protestant missionaries of whatever nation evidently unfitted him. He is now succeeded by Admiral Krantz. And so once more God has heard the cry of the oppressed. Evangelical Christendom.

THE SABBATH IN ITALY.—An Italian journal deplores the growing disregard of Italian employers of labour for the Sabbath. The day is "brutally disregarded and trampled under foot in Italy." The Government and the municipalities, "the omnibus and the railway companies, and numbers of contractors for public and private undertakings" make neither cessation or abatement of labour on Sundays.

RUSSIA.—The Emperor of Russia is not, as is generally thought, the chief authority in religious matters. In the Holy Synod, composed of the Metropolitan, Archbishops, and Bishops, rests all spiritual power as to worship, discipline, &c., only as regards temporal affairs is the sovereign chief. The Bishops are chosen almost exclusively from the convents. In Russia there are not fewer than 667 monasteries, 420 for men and 247 for women.

ITALY.—Dom Bosco, who in Italy has carried on a work similar to that of George Müller in England, died in Turin, January 31, in his 73rd year. In the space of thirty years he founded thirty homes for destitute children in different countries. These houses have received gratuitously nearly 150 thousand children. This Christian hero exercised an extraordinary moral power over his fellow-workers and the children. The popular voice attributes miraculous cures to him.—Semaine Religieuse.

THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR MOVEMENT.—There are now 3500 Societies of Christian Endeavour in all the evangelical denominations in America, containing 250,000 members. It is not unusual to hear of a hundred new societies formed in a week. Nearly every State has its Christian Endeavour Union. The local unions have been of great benefit in bringing the young people of the communities together two or three times a year, to talk over the best plans for Christian work, and then sending them back to their churches to put these plans into operation.

FRENCH FOREIGN MISSIONS.—There are flourishing stations in Lessouto, Senegal, Zambesi, Algeria, and Tahiti, with work just beginning at the Congo. The Journal des Missions for February makes known the deep poverty of the Lessouto tribes and missionary station, resulting from the commercial crisis. A very hopeful sign of progress has appeared in the union, at the dedication of a new chapel, of the partisans of the brothers Joel and Jonathan, whose irreconcilable hatred has for years proved a real calamity to the country, and a great hindrance to missionary work.

NOTES FROM INDIA.—Special revival services at Bangalore have been greatly blessed. A number of soldiers and medical students were amongst the converts.——The 13,958 native Christians attached to the North Indian Bengali Mission of the Church Missionary Society, contributed in twelve months some £600, or about half a rupee per head.——A new Wesleyan chapel has been opened at the Kolar (Mysore) Gold Fields.——By a recent decision it has been laid down that a Travancore man loses all claim on his family property as soon as he becomes a Christian convert.

MLLE. CHRISTINE HERMANN fell asleep at Heidelberg on February 8, aged fifty-one. She had been an invalid for many years, and was endowed with a special ministry of consolation and encouragement to other sufferers far and near. From Germany, Switzerland, England, and America letters from invalids seeking counsel and prayer were addressed to her. To help these she wrote an account of her life, which, with some of the letters to the members of the Invalid Union, has been published in German and French. Christine, as she was usually called, though blind, and quite dependant on others, carried on by the help of a friend a vast correspondence in her mission of consolation.—Journal Religieux.

AMERICAN STUDENTS.—A very large number of Yale students gathered recently to hear a deputation from Princeton College. Three young men spoke earnestly of their personal interest and experience in religious things, referring to the stimulus given to the students there by the visit of Professor Drummond, who has urged this deputation service in various colleges, and the young men have taken up the work in earnest and with blessed results. Yale has sent out deputations to, and received them from, different colleges, and this simple, earnest, witnessing for Christ, and his renewing Spirit and grace in their hearts, often by the athletes of the classes, is very effective, reaching the unconverted in the colleges as no other efforts have done. The good work is increasing.

SCHOOL FOR EVANGELISTS.—The Johanneum at Bonn, which is directed by Dr. Christlieb, is making favourable progress. During the first winter only three young men were there; now there are already six, and a few have entered into practical work from thence. The question of evangelisation, and kindred matters, will be treated at the "Free Conference of Christian men" which is to take place at Gnadau in May. The Conference is convened by men, laymen and pastors, who take an interest in the greater development of real Gospel work, especially also of lay preaching. The necessity of lay work, sanctification, and Christian fellowship are to be the chief topics. It was originally intended to hold the meetings in Berlin; but, owing to some difficulties, a smaller place has been chosen.—Evangelical Christendom.

NEW ZEALAND.—In the New Zealand Parliament a Bill was recently discussed advocating the introduction of the Bible into the public schools. The Bill was defeated by sixty-four, but in a subsequent division on a similar measure fourteen of the opponents came over. Perhaps with a little perseverance the friends of the Word of God may succeed in carrying the Bill; it is not a good beginning in a young colony to banish the Bible from the scheme of public education.

PUBLIC MORALS IN FRANCE.—At the Oratoire, Paris, a meeting was recently held by the "League for elevating Public Morals in France." M. de Pressensé showed the necessity of stopping by all means, legal and personal, the spread of corrupting literature. M. Jalabert, a lawyer, made known the law as at present existing and how to apply it. M. Tallot, the instigator of the campaign, spoke of their programme, and led the subject to its true standpoint—the rights of woman.—Signal.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Mr. Richard Coad has concluded a successful six days' temperance mission at the Public Hall, Rusholme, Manchester.

A great failure in the spirit trade occurred recently in Glasgow, and it was feared the result might cause another crisis in the trade.

"G," in The Alliance News, fears that unless much altered, the new Local Government Bill may prevent rather than further prohibition.

The licensing authorities in Inverness-shire have unanimously decided to close all public-houses and licensed grocers' shops at 10 p.m., in terms of the recent Act.

Rev. J. M. Hewson, Baptist Temperance Travelling Secretary, recently gave an interesting account of additions made to church membership through his temperance work.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, presiding at the opening of a new hall in Bethnal Green, spoke of drunkenness, and early reckless marriages as great hindrances in the East-end.

A writer in a Belfast paper points out that whereas whisky was formerly in request even after the most solemn religious ceremonies, it is now seldom seen on the tables of church members.

Mr. Malins told the President of the Board of Trade at a recent interview that compensation was due, not to the publican, but to the community to which the drink traffic has caused such damage.

The Bond of Union tells how, at a public lecture—not on temperance—a dissipated young man was led to resolve to sign the pledge and "turn over a new leaf" by seeing the blue ribbon in the lecturer's coat.

The police of Dundee lately seized a quantity of liquor at an unlicensed "club," and afterwards proceeded to sell it at the police-office—of course without a licence! Much better have poured it into a common sewer.

Rev. Robert Primrose, a young Greenock minister, the other evening delivered his soul on the subject of the drink traffic. He pointed with indignation to the fact that of the 169 public-houses not one was situated at the West-end. "It is a shameful injustice," he said, "that the rich should be able to keep public-houses from their villas, while the poor are left helpless and unprotected to their most foul temptations."

FOREIGN.

A liquor licence law has been passed for the city of Atlanta, Ga. The drink seller has to pay 1500 dollars to the city treasury.

The customs of Norway favour drinking, but the temperance societies are making rapid progress. The Good Templars have done noble work.

In the recent discussion in Parliament on India, Sir John Gorst assigned as one of the causes of a deficit in the Indian revenue the falling-off in the opium revenue.

The St James's Gazette says that at a commune near Mon, Belgium, a man found drunk has next morning to choose between sweeping the streets and being prosecuted.

A Local Option League is flourishing in Sydney. A committee of its members was recently appointed to consider the advisability of bringing out a local option newspaper.

A Bill has been introduced in the New Jersey legislature providing that, on the petition of one-tenth of the voters in any county, the question of the sale of liquor shall be submitted to a popular vote in that county.

The New South Wales Royal Commission on the drink traffic has presented a report. It appears that the colony consumes more and worse liquor than almost any other place in the world. The evil consequences are terrible.

The Hope and Help Mission for Women, started one year ago by the W.C.T.U., of Washington, D.C., has proved a success and far exceeded the expectations of its projectors. The Mission started with 100 dollars in the treasury, and has sustained itself during the year. Many women have been reclaimed, and the work has so grown that it has been found necessary to secure a larger building for the Home.

One evening recently a party of Hungarians took to drinking in a house at Hazelton, in Pennsylvania. They naturally became quarrelsome, and in a short time fought. Being drunk and fighting, they not unnaturally overturned a lamp, which set fire to the house. The net result was that seven men, two women, and one infant were burned to death, and six persons severely injured in attempting to escape from the flames.

The Book World.

A Temperance Veteran.

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton have issued a third and cheap edition of Mr. Thomas Whittaker's rousing autobiographical narrative, LIFE BATTLES IN TEMPERANCE ARMOUR. With the earnest-minded author, we hope for it a wide distribution. Temperance workers need all the encouragement they can get, and much of that commodity may be gathered from this stirring and hopeful record of triumphs won in the cause of social sobriety. (3s. 6d.)

Talks by Talmage.

AROUND THE TEA TABLE (Wm. Paterson) is a collection of eighty brief, chatty chapters, by the popular pastor of Brooklyn Tabernacle. Dr. Talmage seems at home on every conceivable subject, and in these gossipy pages gives free rein to his gift of entertaining and improving loquacity. The talks have the defects as well as the virtues of his exuberant literary style, but the uncritical reader will overlook the one and find much satisfaction in the other. (2s. 6d.)

A Noted Authoress.

There are few more charming biographies than THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF ELIZABETH PRENTISS, the well-known authoress of "Stepping Heavenward." We gladly welcome a new edition. The volume is largely made up of the letters of this gifted Christian lady, who has carried comfort and counsel into countless homes all over the world. The young woman who possesses a copy of this book has a treasure trove into which she will often dip, and never without genuine profit. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

Purity Poems.

WOMEN MUST WEEP. By Professor F. Harold Williams. 1s. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. Professor Williams is the laureate of the "New Crusade." These poems are red hot with holy passion and fierce with the righteous indignation that rises unbidden at the sight or the story of woman's woes and wrongs. Here and there the thought seems to us to be overlaid in the rush of rhythmic feeling, but those who are in sympathy with the writer and can read between his lines, must at least catch somewhat of his glowing hate for the devices of evil men, and his all-consuming pity for the weak and unsuspecting victims.

"Prove the Spirits."

HERMES, A DISCIPLE OF JESUS. This book, of 450 large pages, not only professes to give the "life and missionary work" of Hermes, but also an account of the "travels of Anah and Zitha, two Persian evangelists sent out by Hafed," and likewise some "unrecorded incidents in the life of Jesus." The whole of these claim to be "spirit communications received through the Glasgow Trance-painting Medium, Mr. David Duguid;" and altogether the notes give the results of sixty-eight "sittings." The matter is extremely puerile and mysterious, and the style discursive, but the language is vigorous withal. "Hafed" seems to be the "familiar spirit" of Mr. Duguid, for this book is a sequel to a previous publication entitled "Hafed, Prince of Persia." Those who know Jehovah will, we believe, "seek unto" Him, rather than lend themselves to "spirit communications." The apostolic injunction is still timely, "Believe not every spirit." (Glasgow: Hay Nisbet & Co.)

"The Story of the Nations."

Surely there is no more fascinating sort of literature than history, written by impartial and well-informed experts. It has been generally recognised that these characteristics belong to Mr. Fisher Unwin's finely conceived series, two volumes of which are before us. IRELAND, by the Hon. Emily Lawless, is a deeply interesting review of the chequered story of the Green Isle. She appears to us to hold the balance with an unbiassed mind, and her record will help to an understanding of how it is that Irish rule remains still an unsolved problem. We are glad to notice that the book has reached a second edition. CHALDEA, by Z. A. Ragozin carries us much further into the remote antiquities and uncertainties of the past, and deals largely in legendary lore, which may or may not be history. The introduction gives a lucid and learned résumé of Layard's explorations and those of his successors, and so we gather a goodly store of information to which the coming years will doubtless add. These volumes are 5s. each, and ought to be in the library of every student.

Cassell & Co.'s Publications.

These include: THE CROWN BIBLE, which has reached part 7: its plates and illustrations give it a special value.—THE OLD TESTAMENT COMMENTARY FOR ENGLISH READERS, of which the forty-second part has appeared. This is a work of great erudition.—THE COUNTRIES OF THE WORLD is a publication of wide interest: part 46 is as instructive and entertaining as its predecessors.—CASSELL'S ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF ENGLAND is a copious and impartial work: part 17 brings the history down to 1543.—THE ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY, of which part 50 is to hand, is a storehouse of practical lexicography, beautifully arranged.—MILTON'S PARADISE LOST, illustrated by Doré, is really luxurious.

New Testament Homilies.

FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO TIMOTHY. By Rev. Alfred Rowland, B.A., LL.B. Nisbet & Co. Forty "sermonettes," as the author entitles them, or short homilies, form the chief feature of the book; but these are prefaced by a brief introduction, and a few pages of simple, exegetical notes. The homilies cover the entire Epistle, and are a faithful and interesting exposition of its words, and of its spirit. The author's treatment of the Atonement, as given in his discussion of chapter ii. 5—7, where he deals first with the "Godward" and then with the "man ward" side of the Atonement, and then points out "the moral power of the Atonement," is a most satisfactory exposition. We commend the book to those students of the Bible who wish to make a thorough acquaintance with the contents of the Epistle in question.

God and Mammon.

CONSCIENCE AND SYSTEM IN THE STEWARDSHIP OF MONEY. By a Business Man. There are in this little book some plain words on a great subject. The Christian sense is appealed to very strongly, both in the work itself, and in an introduction written by Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, M.A. "Countless facts," writes Mr. Hughes, "compel me to confess that, inside my own church, the love of money is a more disastrous curse even than the love of drink. What drunkenness is outside the pale of the Church, that Mammonism is inside." An active partner in one of the largest houses of business in Great Britain, "A Business Man," is no mere theorist. His very practical remarks are given under seven heads, as follow:—The Principle of Christian Stewardship; Objects Demanding our Financial Help; Advantages of Systematic Giving, with Examples; Unfaithfulness in Giving; Motives which Must Underlie all Acceptable Giving; The Principle of the Tithe, with its Scriptural Authority; and, How it Applies to Various Cases and Social Grades. This is a tract for the times, and it is devoutly to be hoped that it has not been written in vain. (2d. London: Morgan & Scott.)

MARCH MAGAZINES.

THE FIRESIDE (6d.) is a good number of a good magazine. "Hand and Heart," "The Day of Days," and "Home Words," from the same office (7, Paternoster-row), are all well illustrated. The editor is very successful in his endeavours to provide instructive and entertaining reading matter.

Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.'s magazines are, as usual, very attractive:—THE WELCOME (6d.) contains matter on a wide range of subjects, which are fully illustrated.—THE ILLUSTRATED MISSIONARY NEWS (2d.) furnishes much information on the progress of mission work, and on topics relating to evangelisation in foreign parts.—THE MOTHER'S COMPANION (1d.) is a very useful magazine.—"The Family Friend," "The Friendly Visitor," "The Infants' Magazine," "The Children's Friend," "The British Workman," and "The Band of Hope Review" are all eagerly looked for and highly prized in thousands of homes throughout the world.

THE QUIVER is this month exceptionally strong in interest of a personal kind. Rev. John Telford briefly recounts the story of Dr. Morley Punshon's life. An article on the United Kingdom Alliance has portraits of seven of its leading temperance advocates. There is also an admirable sketch by a special commissioner of Rev. W. H. Aitken and his connection with special missions in the Church of England. Besides a lifelike portrait, there are views of Mr. Aitken in his study, and preaching to business men in the Guildhall, London, with the Lord Mayor as President of the meeting. Among the other contributors are Rev. P. B. Power and Prof. Blaikie.

ON AND OFF DUTY, the Policeman's Monthly, contains a good selection of suitable matter. Copies of this magazine for distribution may be obtained by addressing the Editor, 18, Adam-street, Adelphi, W.C.

Among the cheap monthly magazines of the Religious Tract Society are:—FRIENDLY GREETINGS 4d. Capital reading for humble homes.—THE TRACT MAGAZINE (1d.), which contains a specially interesting "talk" for the young about the Sparrows, by Rev. A. N. Mackray.—THE CHILD'S COMPANION, an excellent juvenile instructor.—OUR LITTLE DOTS, with its big type and pictures of pretty children, cannot fail to delight those for whom it is intended.—THE COTTAGER AND ARTISAN (1d.) is full of sound and simple reading, well fitted to interest and instruct its special clientèle.

In GOOD WORDS, the Duke of Argyll begins an inquiry into "Darwinism as a Philosophy," and finds it no difficult task, as it seems to us, to expose the hollowness of the theories which the great naturalist built up on the facts disclosed by his painstaking researches. We quote two weighty paragraphs from Mary Linskill's clever portraiture of north country life in the same number: "I do not believe much in that old and wretched adage which declares that every house has its skeleton. I, for one, am acquainted with houses wherein the study of the anatomy of secret misery would certainly be impossible."..."If the histories of all the lives that have been wrecked by a few angry words could be written faithfully, what a record would be before us! And for the most part the harm is wrought between those who love and are loved greatly." The contributions by Bishop Thorold, "On Children," and the Countess of Aberdeen on "Our Mothers and Girls," help to make up a fresh and readable number.

In the current SUNDAY MAGAZINE, Dr. George Macdonald thus describes the down-grade in the commercial ethics of the Wall street speculator; we suppose he would apply it equally to Capel-court:—"Constantly under the softly persuasive influence of low morals and extravagant appreciation of cunning, he came by rapid degrees to think less and less of right and wrong. At first he called the doings of the place dishonest; then he called them sharp practice; then he called them a little shady; then close sailing; then he said this sort of transaction was deemed clever; then the man was more rogue than fool; then he laughed at the success of a vile trick; then he touched the pitch, thinking all the time it was but one finger, was presently besmeared all over—as was natural, for he who will touch is already smeared." Dr. S. Cox expounds the parable of the householder and his hired labourers, with their unequal work and their equal pay, with a view to show that the inequalities of this life are a strong proof of human immortality.

No. 53 of THE NEW BIOGRAPHICAL SERIES (1d. Religious Tract Society) is devoted to the noble career of Henry Cooke, of Belfast.

The March number of IN HIS NAME, the Ragged-School Record, contains a faithful portrait and sketch of the late Sir Robert Carden, one of the warmest friends of Ragged-school effort.

THE CITY PULPIT. Every Thursday afternoon a sermon is preached in Bow Church, Cheapside, by Rev. E. A. Stuart, M.A., the well-known vicar of St. James's, Holloway. These discourses are published weekly by Mr. J. Kensit, 18, Paternoster-row. Price one penny.

POVERTY, PAIN, AND PATIENCE is the title of a tract giving some account of work in Bethnal Green by the Christian Instruction Society of Victoria Park Congregational Church. The cause is not one of sect or party, but rather it is an endeavour to help the needy and unfortunate. The bread which perisheth is dispensed, that the bread of life may be presented. The writer of the tract is Mr. William George, 19, Church-crescent, South Hackney, E., honorary secretary of the Society.

THE CONDITION AND OCCUPATIONS OF THE PEOPLE OF TOWER HAMLETS—1886-7. This is a paper which Mr. Charles Booth read last year before the Royal Statistical Society. It should be interesting to Christian workers in Whitechapel, Stepney, Poplar, St. George's-in-the-East, and Mile-End Old Town. The sections dealing with work at the docks, the Jewish immigration, the sweating system, and the unemployed, are valuable contributions to social problems. (Edward Stanford, Charing Cross.)

CREED-FOUNDATIONS: DO THEY HELP OR HINDER? A month ago Rev. J. P. Clark, of Streatham, read a paper on this subject to the London Baptist Board; this is the paper in pamphlet form. Mr. Clark has put forward some strong arguments in a very kindly spirit, for the consideration of his brethren in the ministry of the Baptist denomination, at the present critical time. He holds, among other things, that, in case of appeal, creed-subscription displaces the Word of God; it becomes a question of "How reads the Creed?" rather than of "What saith the Scripture?" Mr. Clark maintains that the true defence against error lies in "a constant insistance on such principles as the supreme authority of Scripture, our individual responsibility to God alone, both to find his truth and to obey it, and our freedom from all human authority." (2d. Alexander & Shepheard.)

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, MARCH 4.—HOSEA IX.

1.—Thou hast loved a reward upon every cornfloor.—See ii. 12: "These are my rewards which my lovers have given me." The prophecy contained in this chapter "appears to have been suggested by some idolatrous festival, on the occasion, probably, of a good harvest."—S.C.

3.—The Lord's land.—"Canaan was, of all countries, that which Jehovah claimed as peculiarly his own" (Jer. xxv. 23; Matt. v. 35). Ephraim shall return to Egypt.—"Egypt" seems here used figuratively of the Gentile world, into which Israel was to return, as they had originally been called out of Egypt to be a separate people. "Assyria is mentioned immediately afterwards as the actual land of banishment."—Keil.

8.—Ephraim was a watchman with my God.—This verse is better rendered, "The watchman, O Ephraim, is with my God; even the prophet, on all whose ways there is the fowler's snare, even rancour in the house of his God."—S.C.

9.—As in the days of Gibeah.—Referring to Judges xix. xx., where the sin of Gibeah nearly brought extermination to the tribe of Benjamin.

10.—They went to Baal-peor.—A figurative way of describing the lengths of idolatry to which Israel went. "Baal-peor had stamped itself indelibly in the national remembrance as a most flagrant instance of national transgression. See Deut. iv. 3; Joshua xxii. 17; Ps. cvi. 28—31."—S.C.

15.—All their wickedness is in Gilgal.—It was in Gilgal (Joshua v.) that Israel consecrated themselves afresh by circumcision, and kept the first Passover in the land. This aggravated their sin in there asking for a king, and afterwards making it a centre of idolatrous worship.

MONDAY, MARCH 5.—HOSEA X.

1.—Israel is an empty vine.—R.V. better, "a luxuriant vine." "The Hebrew for 'empty' is more properly 'emptying,' i.e., emptying itself forth, pouring forth its internal strength in abundance of growth and fruit."—S.C. It was difficult to see how an empty vine (A.V.) could bring forth fruit, even to itself, but the point evidently is that all this exuberance is for itself, not for God. See Isa. v. 2. R.V. misses this point by rendering "to himself" as if it merely meant "his." The fruit indicates temporal prosperity "in the reigns of Joash and Jeroboam," which betrayed them into deeper idolatry.

5.—The calves of Beth-aven.—For "Beth-el" (see iv. 15). It means "house of vanity," instead of "house of God." The plural is probably "a sarcastic application of the Hebrew plural of majesty, for the words which follow make it clear that only one calf-idol was in the prophet's thoughts."—S.C.

6.—It shall also be carried unto Assyria.—We have no reason to doubt that this was the fate of the great idol of Israel. See 2 Kings xvii. 3, where the word "presents" is the same as that here used.

8.—They shall say to the mountains, Cover us.—Our Lord applies these words to the approaching judgment on Jerusalem, with the significant addition, "Then shall they begin to say," &c. (Luke xxiii. 30). The further full and final fulfilment is connected with the great day of the Lord in Rev. vi. 16.

9.—The battle...did not overtake them.—Better in margin R.V., "Shall not the battle...overtake them?" As in Gibeah (Judges xix.) of old, sin provoked punishment, so shall it be now.

14.—As Shalman spoiled Beth-arbel.—An allusion to some unrecorded deed of cruelty, of which nothing is now known.

TUESDAY, MARCH 6.—HOSEA XI.

1.—Called my son out of Egypt.—The primary reference is to Israel; but, as the Messiah is called "Israel" (Isa. xlix. 3), a further reference is traced in Matt. ii. 15 to a literal fulfilment in the infancy of Him who is the glory of his people Israel.

2.—As they called them, so they went from them.—"Wherever or by whomsoever they were called, they turned away in the opposite direction to serve their idols. So when Christ came and called them ('If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink'), the more diligently He called them the more diligently they went away from Him."—Pusey.

4.—I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love.—The latter metaphor explains the former. Men are more drawn by that which touches the heart than by that which forces the body or even the mind. "The love of Christ constraineth us" (2 Cor. v. 14). "Draw me, we will run after thee" (Cant. i. 4). As they that take off the yoke on their jaws.—"As merciful masters lift up the yoke upon the cheeks of their oxen, i.e., push it so far back that the animals can eat their food in comfort, so has the Lord made the yoke of the law, which had been laid upon his people, both soft and light, partly by alluring them to reciprocate his love, partly by the institution of sacrifice by which was shown the forgiveness of sins."—Keil.

5.—He shall not return into the land of Egypt.—This seems to contradict viii. 13, ix. 3; but there the reference is to Israel scattered amongst the Gentiles, and so virtually sent back to Egypt. Here, it is to the historical fact of Israel not having been permitted to return to Egypt as they wished to do (Num. xiv. 4).

9.—I will not enter into the city.—As He did (Gen. xviii. 21) to see "Whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it." For Admah and Zeboim see Gen. xiv. 2, xix. 25.

10.—The children shall tremble from the West.—"For 'from the West' have most come in."—Pusey. See Matt. viii. 11 and Acts xvi. 29, 30.

12.—Judah yet ruleth with God.—See the language of the Lion of the tribe of Judah (John xvii. 24), "Father, I will." See throughout the same chapter his faithfulness with the saints.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 7.—HOSEA XII.

1.—Oil is carried into Egypt.—"Oil was a chief product of Palestine." In bribing the Egyptians therewith to help them, Israel foreshadowed in type one of the great sins of Christendom, which first appeared in Simon Magus (Acts viii. 18).

3.—And by his strength.—R.V. renders it "in his manhood." "As the words 'in the womb' point to God's electing grace (see Rom. ix. 11), so 'in his strength' refers to the time when he put forth hearty endeavours of his own."—S.C. It is, however, worthy of note that "his strength" might be rendered "his nothingness" (see Gesenius), and this was certainly the secret of Jacob's having "power with God."

4.—Yea, he had power over the angel.—"The angel is the Angel of Jehovah, the Revealer of the Invisible God."—Keil. The words "had power" and "prevailed" are from Gen. xxxii. 28. The weeping is not mentioned in Genesis, but was a natural concomitant of the earnestness with which Jacob solicited a blessing, and of the distress of Jacob's mind at the time (xxxii. 7—12). See also Gen. xxxv. 3."—S.C. He found Him at Beth-el, and there He spake with us.—This does not refer to Gen. xxviii., but to xxxv., where Jacob found God when his household "put away their strange gods." These words of Jacob (xxxv. 2) are still applicable to Israel, which is probably the meaning of "there He spake with us." See v. 6.

8.—Yet I am become rich.—Comp. Rev. iii. 17.

THURSDAY, MARCH 8.—HOSEA XIII.

1.—When Ephraim spake tremblingly, he exalted himself in Israel.—"It is better with the great majority of commentators to render, 'When Ephraim spake there was fear,' i.e., his words were listened to with deference, through the power with which he could back them. Compare Job. xxix. 21, 22, and as to the pre-eminency of the tribe of Ephraim, see Gen. xlix. 26; Deut. xxxiii. 17; Judges viii. 1, xii. 1."—S.C. Notwithstanding his former prosperity, sentence of death has gone forth upon him for his idolatry.

2.—Let the men that sacrifice kiss the calves.—"It has been the practice of idolaters, both in heathenism, and in Roman Catholic countries, thus to express affectionate adoration."—S.C.

7.—Therefore I will be unto them as a lion.—The lion, leopard, bear, and wild beast may be an anticipation of the four Gentile powers of Dan. vii.

9.—O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself; but in Me is thy help.—R.V. gives the rendering most approved by modern criticism, "It is thy destruction, O Israel, that thou art against Me, against thy help." The passage is difficult, owing to the extreme conciseness of the original, but A.V. seems on the whole best to express the sense. Dr. Benisch (Jewish school and family Bible) renders it, "O Israel, thou art thine own corruption; but in Me is thy help."

14.—I will ransom them from the power of the grave.—St. Paul quotes the words which follow (1 Cor. xv. 55) as referring to the resurrection; and thus this passage would seem to teach that only through death and resurrection can Israel attain ransom and redemption.

FRIDAY, MARCH 9.—HOSEA XIV.

1.—O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God.—This is not only an exhortation to repentance, but a prophetic anticipation of Israel's conversion in the latter day.

2.—Take away all iniquity.—"The position of 'all' in the Hebrew is peculiarly emphatic, 'all do Thou forgive of iniquity."—S.C.

5.—I will be as the dew unto Israel.—Reversing the malediction of xiii. 15. "The Assyrian was 'the east wind' to Israel; but Jehovah Himself will be to them for dew."—S.C.

Joy cometh in the morning!
  O Israel it shall be
Indeed a glorious dawning—
  Long banished one for thee.

Transplanted from the desert
  To where thy fathers grew,
Thou shalt be God's own lily,
  And He shall be thy dew. J. T.

6.—His branches shall spread, &c.—"Jehovah confers upon his people perpetual fruitfulness in population; the unfailing exhibition of virtues and graces; and sweet acceptableness before God and man."—S.C.

8.—I am like a green fir tree.—"God compares Himself to a green cypress, not only to denote the shelter which He will afford his people, but as the true tree of life on which the nation finds its fruits."—Keil.

SATURDAY, MARCH 10.—JOEL I.

Joel was "the earliest prophet of Judah, in the early years of the reign of Uzziah."—S.C.

4.—That which the palmerworm hath left.—The four kinds of locusts here mentioned are supposed to have a mystic significance. The Jews of St. Jerome's day interpreted them of the four great Gentile empires of Dan. ii. vii.

9.—The meat offering and the drink offering is cut off.—"Israel could not suffer any greater calamity than the suspension of the daily sacrifice; for this was a practical suspension of the covenant relation—a sign that God had rejected his people. Therefore, in the last siege of Jerusalem by the Romans, the sacrificial worship was not suspended until it had been brought to the last extremity, and then through lack of sacrificers."—Keil.

15.—The day of the Lord is at hand.—"The first intimation that the visitation of the locusts is typical of, and completed in, the final visitation on the great day of judgment. This idea is afterwards expanded in the next chapter. The mention of the day of the Lord is first found in Joel."—S.C. If the locusts typify the four great successive Gentile powers who desolate Jerusalem up to the time of the Lord's second coming, the commencement of their work of judgment may fitly be connected with that which is to follow upon its conclusion—the coming of the Lord Himself.

International S. S. Lesson.

Matt. xxi. 1—16. Golden Text: Ps. cxviii. 26.

Ver. 1.—And when they drew nigh unto Jerusalem.—Bethphage lay on the eastern slope of Olivet, probably a little nearer to Jerusalem than Bethany. Bethany itself was fifteen furlongs, i.e., $1\frac{7}{8}$ miles, from Jerusalem, and so just within the limit set to a Sabbath day's journey (two miles). The Mount of Olives was about a mile from the city, and formed the "Park"—the open pleasure-ground—of Jerusalem.

Ver. 2.—An ass.—In the East the ass is not despised, as with us, but highly esteemed. "Statelier, livelier, swifter than with us, it vies with the horse in favour." The latter was used in war, while the ass was the symbol of peace, being ridden by kings and princes on peaceful occasions. "And a colt with her."—Jesus rode upon the colt. "Animals not previously used for labour were accounted specially pure, and fit for sacred services. Hence only oxen unused to the yoke were offered on the altar."—Kitto.

Ver. 4.—All this was done that it might be fulfilled.—See Zech. ix. 9, spoken nearly 600 years before! (Point out the marvellous exactness of this prophecy.) Yet it was not till afterwards that the disciples recognised this fulfilment (John xii. 16).

Ver. 5.—Behold thy King cometh.—Jesus quietly assumes the kingly dignity due to the true Messiah. The only time we hear of Jesus riding. A very great multitude.—At one Passover, in the time of Nero, there were 2,700,000 Jews in and about Jerusalem. Spread their garments in the way.—A just and royal honour. So Sir Walter Raleigh took off his new plush mantle and spread it over a miry place over which Queen Elizabeth had to walk. Branches from the trees, &c.—Palm branches (John xii. 13), the symbol of victory. Strewing the path of a great hero or king with flowers and branches, a common expression of honour and gladness. A modern traveller saw the path of a Persian ruler strewn with roses for three miles.

Ver. 9.—The multitudes that went before, and that followed.—Dean Stanley supposes that a great multitude came from the city, and, meeting the other multitude which was coming from Bethany towards the city, turned and marched before them. Hosanna, &c.—Words that show clearly that the multitude hailed Jesus as the King Messiah. Just here, in the midst of all this triumph and joy, probably when they were still high up the slope of Olivet, Jesus wept for Jerusalem (Luke xix. 41—44).

Ver. 12.—Jesus went into the Temple, &c.—This what happened on the next day—Monday. Cast out them that sold and bought, i.e., from the outer court, the court of the Gentiles. He had done the same at the beginning of his ministry (John ii. 13—17). Worshippers needed to buy beasts, oil, wine, &c., for their sacrifices, and so a great trade was created. In time, the court of the Gentiles became the Temple market, from which the priests drew a large revenue. Thus what should have been the abode of peace, the place of prayer, "for all nations," was filled with noise, confusion, and extortion. True picture of our hearts—the true anti-type of the Temple—till Christ comes to drive out intruders. Tables of the money-changers—Who exchanged foreign money for Jewish coin, especially for the half-shekel, in which coin alone the Temple tax due from every Jew could be paid. Doves.—Required for offerings. The trade in doves very much controlled by priests. One high priest said to have made much profit by his dovecotes on Olivet. A den of thieves.—Strangers were charged extortionate prices, and cheated, and the religion of Jehovah brought into contempt. So God as well as man was mocked.

LESSONS.

This passage gives us successive views of "Jesus as our King."

Ver. 3.—The King in his authority.—The ass and colt were to be taken without leave or scruple. He made all things, so had right to demand as He willed. It was answer enough—the kingly answer—"The Lord hath need of them." (Teachers should apply this, pointing out the Lord's right to all—right by creation and by redemption—show the sin of slighting such rights, and the beauty of simple loyalty to our King.)

Ver. 8, 9.—The King in his triumph.—Picture the most exulting multitude, and ask what it will be in heaven. This scene is but the symbol of the final triumph. May we be there to swell the shout of victory!

The King in his sorrow (Luke xix. 41—44).—Wonderful sight indeed! Weeping in the midst of triumph, and for his enemies! Weeping for their impenitence and for the judgment it will bring!

Ver. 12, 13.—The King in his wrath.—How sublime his indignation! He is unarmed: they are very many and very strong. But conscience makes cowards of them all, and the dignity of holy wrath makes Him terrible. How awful is his wrath! "The wrath of the Lamb"—the most fearful sentence in the Bible! If He comes to our hearts, He will come to cleanse. He will make no truce with sin.

Ver. 14.—The King in his mercy.—First He cleanses the temple, then He shows mercy. The cleansed heart will feel his gracious power.

Ver. 15.—The King in his joy.—How glad He was to hear the children sing his praise! Very little children can give Him joy. He delights in their loving praise.

ILLUSTRATION.

Crowning the King.—When Mr. Dawson was preaching in South Lambeth he spoke of Christ as Teacher and Priest, and then as the King of saints. He marshalled patriarchs and kings, prophets and apostles, martyrs and confessors of every age and clime, to place the insignia of royalty upon the head of the King of the universe. The audience was wrought up to the highest pitch of excitement; and, as if waiting to hear the anthem peal out for the vast assemblage, the preacher commenced singing, "All hail the power of Jesus' name." The audience started to their feet, and sang the hymn as perhaps it was never sung before. That was a moment of thrilling joy to everyone present. But what will it be to sing the King's praise with the multitude that no man can number, in perfect purity, and in his very presence!

CORSICA.—Miss E. G. Grant-Brown, accompanied by a lady friend, is now in Corsica, labouring among the peasantry in the interior, in conjunction with Pastor Mabboux (McAll Mission). This devoted lady writes from Vico (a small mountain town), telling of a meeting at the great Café of Vico, attended by a good many women and all the men of Vico. She experiences some difficulty as to securing places of meeting, though there are not a few encouragements. She says, "My visit to Cauro last week was all joy. The people made me promise to return there. We are going to a village up in the mountains from here."

POOLE FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY.—This institution is a sermon in stone, as well as a memorial of the public spirit of one of its citizens, Alderman J. J. Norton. It cost £2,500, exclusive of site and furniture, and on this Alderman Norton says: "I reckon that two shillings per day is the lowest average expenditure in intoxicants in a tradesman's home, and thus about thirty years' savings at this rate would amount, with interest, to the sum named." While the building is thus a protest against intemperance, the library shelves are a protest against the smoking habit. The volumes, five hundred in number, represent the cost of tobacco to one smoker in ten years. The origin of the Poole Free Library is, therefore, a very interesting one.

Y.M.C.A. Bible Lessons.

OUTLINES PREPARED BY HENRY THORNE.

Sunday Afternoon, March 11.

The Rich Fool.—Luke xii. 16—21.

In our last lesson we pondered the wisdom of Solomon; but, as we read this parable, we may say, "A greater than Solomon is here." In the Proverbs we meditated upon lessons of wisdom suggested by the experience of a wise man; but, in the parable we are now to consider, our Lord teaches a lesson of wisdom from the experience of a fool.

Note.—(1) A Plentiful Harvest (ver. 16).—This harvest proclaims the faithfulness (Gen. viii. 22), the goodness (Ps. lxv. 11), the mercy (Ps. lxvii. 1, 6), and the bountifulness, of the Lord (1 Tim. vi. 16). How painful the contrast between the open hand of the Divine love and the closed hand of the selfish recipient (comp. Ps. civ. 28 and Prov. xi. 26)! The Corinthians were enriched "to all bountifulness" (2 Cor. ix. 11). Bountifulness begets bountifulness (comp. Matt. x. 8).

(2) A Perplexed Soul (ver. 17).—His concern is not about what is spiritual, but what is material. It is not "What shall I do to be saved?" but "What shall I do with my goods?" Even blessings become burdens to unregenerate men. Compare "Cast thy burden"—margin, "thy gift"—"upon the Lord" (Ps. lv. 22). Note how Zacchæus relieved himself of the larger portion of his burden (Luke xix. 8).

(3) A Poor Resolve (ver. 18).—The small soul of the man thinks not of greater liberality, but of greater barns. In this resolve there is no sense of stewardship ("my barns," "my fruits," "my goods"). Note the contrast when the Holy Spirit purged the hearts of the early Christians (Acts iv. 32). See also, "Of thine own have we given Thee" (1 Chr. xxix. 14).

(4) A Pleasant Outlook (ver. 19).—Pleasant from the man's point of view, though sad enough from that of Christ. Eve saw pleasure (Gen. iii. 6) where God saw death. The man here anticipates rest, in the enjoyment of what is material. Ease is associated with goods—rest with riches. How common is this mistake! Here is one aspect of the deceitfulness of riches. The heart can never pillow with comfort upon gold.

(5) A Pitiful Sequel (ver. 20).—Those who sinfully forget God will some day be awfully reminded of Him. How foolish to count upon years of life and worldly ease, when we know not "what a day may bring forth!" Compare James iv. 13, 14.

(6) A Practical Application (ver. 21).—The world's rich men are often spiritually poor (Rev. iii. 17, 18).

> He whose wealth is alone in gold,
> Is the veriest pauper this earth doth hold.

To be "rich toward God" we must realise "his love toward us" (Rom. v. 8); cultivate repentance toward Him, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ (Acts xx. 21); and the manifestation of "good will toward men" (Luke ii. 14).

CLEVEDON CONVALESCENT HOME.—This is an Institution of a distinctly evangelical character, for the accommodation of persons in a weak state of health, upon recovery from sickness, or requiring change of air. The admissions last year numbered 239, of both sexes; these were from sixty-one places in different parts of the country. Details may be obtained from Rev. E. Forbes, Granard, Clevedon, Somerset.

A SERVANT IN A COUNTRY HOUSE writes to us on the subject of "lessening in part the misery of tramps." With the sanction of her mistress, she has adopted a plan which she commends to others who may be in a position to adopt it. Scraps of food and odd meat bones are carefully put on one side, and, with a slight addition to the store, broth is made and warmed for the tramps who call. Failing soup, tea or coffee, fried potatoes or bread pudding, are prepared, and opportunities are embraced to speak kindly words to the needy wanderers.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. W. Carlile is in the South of France, seeking to promote the work of the Church Army.

The Bishop of London has declined to take any part in the great Missionary Conference in June. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel have also declined.

Bishop Harper, primate of New Zealand, has announced his intention of retiring from the Bishopric of Christchurch, after thirty-two years of episcopal work.

It is stated that a clergyman has given £25,000 to the funds of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, probably the largest donation, as distinguished from a legacy, ever given.

Archdeacon Farrar advocates the revival of an order of missioners or organised clergy, living permanently amongst the poorest, and temporarily bound "by vows of poverty and obedience."

Speaking at a meeting of the Free and Open Church Association at Chester, Mr. Thomas Hughes, Q.C., said it was of infinite importance that churches for the poor should be free and open.

Addressing a meeting of the Church Association at Clifton, Bristol, Rev. A. A. Isaacs, of Leicester, said that the way in which ritualistic clergymen were appointed to positions in the Church caused the ritualistic party to become bolder than before.

A daughter of Rev. Robert Gault, Free Church minister of Glasgow, who is at present in India, recently paid a visit to Miss Tucker, better known as "A.L.O.E." She is about seventy years of age, and is still engaged in active work amongst the women of India.

Three Chinese converts, in connection with the Church Missionary Society, were lately ordained by Bishop Burdon, of Hong Kong. Several workers in connection with the China Inland Mission are about to take Orders in the Church of England, and to be licensed by Bishop Moule.

The Record understands that a remonstrance has been addressed to the Committee of the Church Army, by two of their most prominent supporters, directed against the circumstances attending the withdrawal of Rev. F. S. Webster from the principalship of the Training Home.

The staunch Protestants attending a church in a Manchester suburban village are much exercised by the ultra-Ritualistic practices of their rector. The latest innovation is that, on pain of a charge of irreverence, they are expected on entering the church to bow to the "altar."

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Great results in conversions and renewals are following the Gospel labours of Susie C. Berry and Eva Parker in Kansas.

Frederick Sessions, Gloucester, has been giving Bible-readings and lectures, and conducting Gospel meetings in Lynn, and at Newcastle-on-Tyne.

At Dewsbury Mrs. R. F. Crosland defended and urged the duty of women in work for Christ, saying, "The Christian religion is the only one which had something for women to do."

Adult school and mission anniversaries show very encouraging results in Ashford, Oldham, Cambridge, and Dewsbury. Henry S. Newman deeply interested the Cambridge meeting by his vivid descriptions of the East, and Jonathan Grubb spoke on temperance.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Dr. Mackennal, of Bowdon, ex-chairman of the Congregational Union, proposes that Rev. Griffith John, of China, should be elected chairman for the ensuing year.

The new Congregational Mission Chapel at White Roothing, Essex, was recently opened, free of debt. It will comfortably seat 130. The pastor is Rev. J. Rattee.

Rev. D. W. Purdon has accepted the invitation offered him by Queen-street Church, Wolverhampton, to superintend the branch churches at York-street and Stafford-street, under the pastorate of Rev. C. A. Berry.

Dr. Dale's public welcome in the Town Hall, Birmingham, on Monday week was marked by great heartiness of feeling. In his speech of response Dr. Dale said he found that the Christian faith had a firm hold of the vigorous people of Southern Britain.

Rev. Joseph Halsey, of Anerley, declares that the accusations of heresy brought against him are calumnious falsehoods, wicked and wilful perversions of his teaching, based on misrepresentations and garbled reports of private conversations.

Rev. Edward White preached his farewell sermon, on Sunday evening, in St. Paul's Church, Hawley-road, Kentish Town. There was a crowded audience. The text was John iii. 17. The atoning character of the work of Christ was set forth with great power, and "the deadly error" of Universalism shown to be without any Scriptural basis. The Lord's Supper was celebrated at the close of the service.

The Evangelical Union Church, of Scotland, has recently been attacked on the ground that "notwithstanding its broad and sympathetic creed it has not sent a single missionary abroad." Its assailants, says a contemporary, seem to be ignorant of the fact that the Evangelical Union Church contribute to the London Missionary Society every year as much as will support a number of missionaries.

A report for the past year of the Fishergate Congregational Church and Missions states that the pastor, Rev. J. Thornberry, has held 258 services in the Church and Mission Rooms, besides Bible-classes, prayer-meetings, &c. Open-air preaching was carried on during eight months of the year. Sunday-schools at Fishergate and Southern Cross are continuing to do a good work. The pastor spent much time in visitation. Many of the visits were to the sick and dying, irrespective of denomination.

METHODIST.

Methodists have established fourteen Homes for Soldiers, at an outlay of over £20,000.

A ten days' mission has been held at Luzley Brook, Bolton, by Mr. Charles Garnett, with most blessed results.

"Pleasant Evenings for the People" are now being held with success in each branch of the London Wesleyan Missions.

Rev. G. E. Butt, of Lavender-hill Primitive Methodist Church, has sailed for South Africa, where he goes to take charge of the mission station at Aliwal North.

Sir George Hayter Chubb proposes that a Soldiers' Home should be opened at Hounslow, as a memorial of the life and work of the late Miss Elizabeth Ann Wesley.

A Staffordshire gentleman has bequeathed the sum of ten thousand pounds to the United Methodist Free Churches, for the purpose of building and helping to build new chapels in London.

The Mayor of Northampton (Mr. F. Covington), who is a Baptist and a local preacher, occupied the Primitive Methodist Chapel in that town, on Sunday week, both morning and evening, and preached to large congregations.

Intelligence from the Bible Christian missionaries in China reports that they are making rapid progress in the acquisition and use of the language, and that they are greatly encouraged in the work they have undertaken.

In connection with the Old Leysian Mission, Whitecross-street, E.C., a "Girls' Parlour" was opened in November last, and is attended by a good number of factory girls, but there are not sufficient workers. Mrs. Chubb, Chevender, Chiselhurst, Kent, appeals to young ladies to help. The class meets in a room adjoining City-road Chapel.

Bishop William Taylor is now en route for the United States, but it is expected that he will not arrive there before the beginning of May. He is to be present at the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which is to be held at New York in that month. The Bishop says that while in Africa he has enjoyed much better health than when in America.

In an address at Hull, Rev. J. E. Clapham, referring to village work, mentioned that there is a village near Stourport where a Methodist chapel has been closed for two years, because the landowner threatened to turn out of his employment the labourers who attended the chapel. The landlord has evicted from her cottage a poor old woman who had lived in it for thirty-seven years, because she sheltered the man who had preached in that place.

BAPTIST.

Dr. Alex. Maclaren, of Manchester, has stated that it is his intention, with the permission of his congregation, to visit Australia. He will probably sail about the middle of September.

The Freeman proposes that the president of the Baptist Union for next year should be Rev. J. T. Wigner, of New Cross. "The mature wisdom of years of service, combined with an indomitable youthfulness, indicate him to be just the man for the post."

At the annual meeting of the church at Duckpool-road, Newport, Mon., the pastor, Rev. A. T. Jones, reported that during the past year eighty-six new members had been added, and the labours of the pastor and his helpers had been much blessed.

On Monday, a meeting of Baptist and Congregational ministers of London, was held at Regent's-park Chapel by invitation of Rev. F. B. Meyer, to consider some scheme for a series of meetings to promote among ministers "a quickening of the spiritual life, and to seek together for a special enduement of Divine power."

Mr. George Cameron, of the Congo Mission, is at present staying in his native village in Scotland, recruiting his health, a severe attack of fever having sent him home an invalid. He has recently completed the revision of the last proof sheets of his translation of the Gospel according to John into the Congo language.

On Monday week Mr. Archibald Brown sat in his vestry all day, as he is wont to do on this date, to receive offerings from those who have reason to thank God for the Tabernacle being built. The people came in a steady stream all day from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m., and the amount thus voluntarily contributed was £409 2s. 5d.

In connection with the Bethel church, Nantyglo, Mon., a good work is being done by the pastor, Rev. J. C. Roberts. In seven months Mr. Roberts has added sixty to the membership of the church, and gathered around him in a Sunday-school class sixty-five young men, whose ages vary from eighteen to thirty-five. Mr. Roberts's success lies in his happy way of drawing young men around him.

Mr. Spurgeon states that he has been completely inundated with letters of sympathy with him in the present controversy, many of them containing practical help for various departments of his work. One gentleman (a Congregationalist), a perfect stranger to him, a month or two since sent, with a warm expression of regard, the sum of £100 for his institutions, and the same person has now forwarded an additional £500, with permission to draw upon him to any amount needed.

John-street Chapel, Theobald's-road, W.C., for many years the centre of earnest Christian work, under the ministry of Revs. J. Harrington Evans and Hon. Baptist W. Noel, has, during the past twelve months, been the scene of much activity, under the direction of Rev. J. E. Shephard. Dr. Underhill presided at a tea and public meeting held a few days ago, when it was shown that a good work is proceeding among young and old connected with the church and congregation.

SALVATION ARMY.

Work is soon to be commenced in Spain.

At Camberwell, on Monday week, fifty new "soldiers" were publicly sworn in under the Army colours.

Nineteen Swiss soldiers have recently entered the Training Home at Paris to be trained as officers for the work in Switzerland.

At Norkoeping, one of the older Swedish corps, says The War Cry, 200 souls have been saved during the last four months. Of these, 105 are now soldiers. Capt. P. A. Andersson has been sent for repeatedly to pray with people who were in distress about their souls.

Commissioner Tucker, of India, is expected in England in April. He says that the Parsees of Bombay, who have hitherto been hostile, are turning round. One of the richest has promised him £100 per year for three years to be spent in special efforts amongst drunkards.

Some months ago a gentleman made his will, leaving £5000 to his daughter, an officer in the Salvation Army, on condition that she left the Army within six months. The £5000 was to be held by trustees who were to give the money to hospital and other funds, if, at six months' end she had not left the Army. His daughter went on over the six months. The trustees met, and distributed the £5000 in accordance with the will.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Martin Lewis, late of Toorak, Melbourne, is at present assisting Dr. Saphir at Belgrave Church.

Some of the members of the church at Neston, near Chester, in conjunction with the Primitive Methodists, have commenced a mission amongst the colliery-men of the district.

A large number of pupils from the Royal Normal College for the Blind now attend the services at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Upper Norwood, and take a leading part in the singing.

A class for girls engaged in factories has been opened in connection with the church at Bootle, Liverpool. It gives them a much-needed opportunity to meet for pure social intercourse and religious teaching.

Miss Emily White, daughter of Rev. Dr. Verner M. White, of South Kensington, has accepted from the Free Church of Scotland the principalship of the Normal School, Calcutta, for the training of native teachers.

Mr. George Sturge, a member of the Society of Friends, has lately forwarded to the Foreign Missions Committee of the English Presbyterian Church a donation of £100. This is Mr. Sturge's eighth instalment of a gift of £1000 to the Missions.

In two parishes of the island of Lewis a revival of religion is taking place unparalleled since the memorable revival of 1860. The agents of the West Coast Mission state that in some places in the Hebrides visited by them the state of religion is unworthy of a Christian land.

Madame Heiss, superintendent of the Free Church Mission Schools, at Baalbeck, Syria, addressing a meeting at the East Free Church, Arbroath, said that at first she experienced great difficulty in gaining admission to Moslem homes, but now she has a kindly welcome everywhere. The most bitter opposition she has to bear comes from the Roman Catholic missionaries.

At a great children's missionary gathering in the U.P. Synod Hall, Edinburgh, Mr. John Tod spoke very effectively of what the children of that church had done in early days in providing a mission ship, and a few years afterwards in adopting six hundred starving orphans in India, and providing for them. He pressed home the duty of children contributing what they could for foreign missions.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A successful series of evangelistic services has just been held in the Independent Chapel, Cork, by Rev. S. Griffiths, of Belfast.

A pleasant reunion of the members of the various Protestant churches has taken place in Sligo, under the auspices of the local Y.M.C.A.

Rev. Chas. Inwood, Methodist Conference evangelist, assisted by Mr. Mackson, of Liverpool, has held a fortnight's mission in Lurgan, with good results.

Sermons on the subject of temperance were preached in over one hundred churches of the united diocese of Down, Connor, and Dromore, on Sunday week.

An interesting series of six lectures, by Rev. Professor Witherow, D.D., on the Continental Reformed Churches, has been delivered in Magee College, Londonderry.

The Ulster Society for Promoting the Education of the Deaf, Dumb, and Blind has 140 children (of whom 110 are deaf and dumb, and 28 blind) under instruction.

A remarkable spiritual work has been going on for some time in Lagan View Tabernacle, Belfast. Several of the most noted pugilists and drunkards in the locality are said to have been savingly converted.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. John Watt, parish minister of Strathdon, N.B.—Rev. W. H. Hoare, of Oakfield, Crawley, Sussex, an aged clergyman, whose kindness of heart and unselfish love of doing good endeared him to rich and poor alike.—At Koloa, Sandwich Islands, Rev. James W. Smith, who went in 1842 as a missionary physician to Hawaii, where he laboured for many years under the American Board.—Rev. H. G. Walsh, for nearly fifty years vicar of St. John's, Redland, Bristol.—Rev. Thomas May, for forty-six years vicar of Leigh, Tunbridge, Kent.—Rev. Francis Storr, for thirty-four years vicar of Brenchley, Staplehurst, Kent.—Mr. David Kennedy, well known throughout Ayrshire for his earnest evangelistic work.—Mr. J. B. McAuley, of Belfast, an attached member of the Presbyterian Church.—Mr. Forrest Reid, Sessional Crown Solicitor for Londonderry.—Mr. Joseph Nicholson, of Bandon, co. Cork, for many years an able, earnest Methodist local preacher.—Rev. G. P. Badger, late chaplain Bombay Presidency.—Rev. Peter Parsons, Wesleyan minister, of Devonport, for fifty-six years a successful preacher of the Gospel.

Forthcoming Meetings.

The Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of England, Scotland, and Wales on due notice. Hon. Sec., 21, Surrey-street, Strand, W.C.

The Irish Evangelisation Society will send evangelists to any part of Ireland on due notice. Apply to Mr. J. Barton, Hon. Sec., Dundalk, Ireland.

The Church Army will send evangelists (working-men) to any clergymen on due notice, for short or long missions. Hon. Sec., 128 & 130, Edgware-road, W.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle Evangelists' Association will send lay preachers and evangelists to any chapel or hall of any evangelical denomination in London. Hon. Sec., 121, Camberwell New-road, S.E.

The Country Towns Mission supplies qualified missionaries for work in the country. Apply to Secretary, 18, New Bridge-street, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

Y.M.C.A., New Metal Exchange, Whittington-avenue, E.C.—Daily prayer-meeting, St. Peter's Vestry, Cornhill, 1.15 to 2 p.m. (Sat. excepted). Mission work each evening at Bermondsey, Whitechapel, Lambeth, Canning Town, &c.

Conference Hall and Y.M.C.A., Stratford, E.—Sunday, March 4, 3 and 7 p.m., Mr. Oscar Owers. Young men's Bible study, Sundays, 3 p.m., and Tuesdays, 8.15 p.m. Wednesdays, public Bible study, 8.15 p.m.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Monday, February 27, 1888.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

JAPAN.—The number of attendants in December last at the Methodist College was 380, and the prospects of an increase were very good. A thorough education in English science and mathematics is given, and the college finds its lower classes always quite full. The aim is mainly to secure the conversion of the students, and much blessing is reported in this direction. In the past ten months seventy-one have professed Christ, most of these are from the higher classes, and are all energetic and active young men.

SPAIN.—Count A. Bernstorff, President of the German Branch of the Evangelical Alliance, last year visited Spain. He has recently described the difficulties which evangelical truth has to contend with in the Peninsula, and he points out that the little apparent fruit of mission work is explained by the great opposition which converts from Romanism have to undergo. Nevertheless, there are encouraging features in the reality of the work, such as it is, and in the purity of the profession of those who have to suffer for Christ's sake.

Undenominational Christian Mission and Ragged Schools.—Help is needed to carry on the work of this Mission in South Wales. There are four halls for preaching and other work. During the winter many thousands of free meals are given to unemployed parents and their children. Mr. Thomas M. Wintle, Pontymoile, Pontypool, Monmouthshire, is the hon. superintendent of the Mission.

A VERY PRESSING NEED.

IN a village in the West of Ireland a Scriptural School has been carried on with much success for many years. It has been maintained by the personal efforts of the family of the resident Proprietor, whose means, under existing circumstances, do not admit of his rebuilding it. The School is attended by over forty children, who are daily instructed in the Word of God, but the School House is in a state of irreparable decay, the walls being held together by props. A new building is absolutely necessary, if a Romish education, without the Bible, for the villagers, is to be prevented.

"Clarisford, Killaloe, County Clare.

"I most cordially recommend the Appeal for the rebuilding of Abraham School House, the advantages and importance of which I am well aware of.

"WM. B. KILLALOE."

"I beg fully to concur in his lordship's recommendation.

"HORACE W. TOWNSEND, Clerk, M.A.
11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C."

Contributions towards this proposed new School House will be gratefully received and acknowledged by:—

THE FUNDAMENTAL TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.

At the earnest request of a large number of Christian Ministers and Laymen of various Evangelical Churches throughout the country, the Council of the Evangelical Alliance, in July last, agreed to arrange for a series of Meetings at several centres in London, when united Testimony to the Cardinal Truths of the Gospel should be given. A Special Committee was appointed to carry out the details of the plan, and the programme of arrangements is given below. While the Meetings are convened by the Evangelical Alliance, the selection of speakers has not been limited to members of the Alliance.

THE RIGHT HON. LORD PLUNKET, D.D.,

Archbishop of Dublin.

THE present Archbishop of Dublin was born in August, 1828, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin. He was ordained in 1857, and became rector of Kilmoylan and Cummer in 1858; in the following year he was appointed domestic chaplain and private secretary to his uncle, the Bishop of Tuam. In 1863 he married the daughter of Sir Benjamin Lee Guinness, Bart., and in 1864 he was elected treasurer of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin. In October, 1876, he was consecrated Bishop of Meath, which diocese he ruled with such exemplary judgment that, in 1884, it was almost generally felt no better choice could be made for a successor to the Archbishop, who, after long and distinguished service, had, under the pressure of failing health and advancing age, honourably resigned his high position.

The late Archbishop, Richard Chenevix Trench, whose death at a ripe age, and burial in Westminster Abbey, are still fresh in the memory of many of our readers, was one of those rare men, gifted in various directions, who influence their fellows perhaps as much from the study as from the pulpit, the platform, and by personal contact. He was a poet of a high order, whose power over the hearts of appreciative and devout students is growing day by day, and whose poems, written as they were, "beneath the pressure, but in the light of eternity," are quite free from that spirit of doubt which drives so many of our poets into the wilderness, a critic whose opinions are invariably of value, a commentator who brought to his labours a breath of that Spirit which he himself believed the Almighty to be "now and evermore breathing over his Church," and last, but first in importance, a preacher of a masculine type, whose sermons had in them an element of universality which made them eminently suitable to the mixed congregations to whom they were delivered.

(From a Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons.

Dr. Trench held so high a place in the minds and affections of the multitudes who knew him as to make it very difficult for anyone to succeed him without running the risk of provoking invidious comparisons. Therefore when the Bishop of Meath was elected to the position which Dr. Trench had resigned, there were not wanting those who professed to find in the Bishop's evangelicalism, and in the comparative simplicity of his preaching, ground for questionings in regard to his exact fitness to follow one whose tendencies were assumed to be in the direction of High Churchism, and whose pulpit utterances invariably gave evidence of high literary skill and scholarly attainment. It is perhaps due to the fact that the present Archbishop of Dublin has not in any way aimed at "pulpit popularity," or striven to win a name in the world of literature, that he has succeeded in stilling all dissentient voices, and has won undivided and general regard. If his preaching is not marked by signs of deep research and by oratorical effort, it has, what is much better in these days, a matter-of-fact directness similar in its aim to that of the first preachers of the Gospel, and it is marked by the pathetic sincerity of a loving, large-hearted man, deeply influenced by the Divine humanity of Jesus, and burning with a desire to bring others within the hallowing and saving power of the Redeemer. There is, also, the deep, solemn earnestness of one who remembers that the day is far spent, and the night cometh when no man can work. Preaching of this class cannot be left without a seal in conversions, and, although it may never be followed by the rich harvest of the revival, there will be ripe spiritual fruit in changed hearts and lives.

A Bishop's life, however, is not all preaching; it is crowded full of other duties, and in respect of these the Archbishop of Dublin has a full share. They are discharged with a firmness and gentleness which have endeared him to the large body of clergy under his care. His willingness to lend a helping hand in any parochial and mission effort is proverbial; but not more so than his readiness to take part in all sorts of meetings, public and otherwise, having for their object the benefit of charitable and philanthropic societies. Hence his calm, grave-looking face is a pleasantly familiar object in the religious world of Dublin and elsewhere. Those who earnestly desire Christian union pray that it may long be so, for the Archbishop's views in regard to this important matter are of so pronounced a character as to have carried him far beyond the arid regions of sectarianism. Neither have his views on this point remained mere opinions; they have been borne out in deeds, as those who were present at the last Dublin Christian Convention will remember. Those who read in our columns the report of that address will be surprised to learn that the Archbishop's action in attending the Conference and his words on that occasion brought upon him the censure and strongly worded disapprobation of a section of the clergy and of their organs of the press. This fact doubtless gave the Archbishop no little pain, not on his own account but on theirs; for, eminently familiar as his Grace is with the moral and spiritual needs of Ireland, no one better knows how essential Christian unity is to the religious welfare of the country, and what a powerful weapon disunion puts in the hands of the enemies of the Cross of Christ.

With reference to the High Church movement, the flowing tide of which has, as yet, scarcely reached the shores of Irish Church life, the attitude taken by Archbishop Plunket is one of opposition. Preaching last August, on the occasion of the Jubilee service to commemorate the opening of the Mariners' Church at Kingstown, the Archbishop said that in the desire of those who wish to see in Ireland "some reflection of that 'more pronounced Churchmanship' (as it is called), and of that more advanced ritual which prevails in many portions of the sister Church of England," he could have no share; the need being not for "that other new departure," but for more zeal, more holiness, and more self-sacrifice. Those who are anxious in regard to the future of evangelical Protestantism in Ireland may be re-assured by the calm expression of opinion, in the same sermon, given after twenty years' wide experience, that there are in Ireland no tokens of progress in the direction of the Oxford movement. The words of warning which the preacher uttered with reference to "the new departure" may well be taken to heart also by those of his Nonconformist brethren who are making progress on the dangerous lines of unfaithfulness to revealed truth:—

> Development may lead, as experience amply proves, to destruction......It is, indeed, the duty of theologians, as well as statesmen, to be ever struggling for the light. But while it is very right to burst forth from the chrysalis-darkness of error and prejudice, and to seek the blessed sunshine above, there is a danger lest, having escaped from the former gloom, we may, after all, be loved by a candle's gleam, and perish in its flame.

Under the guidance of a Primate whose mind is so evenly balanced, and the chief point in whose creed is "Christ the true ladder, whereby heaven and earth have been brought near—the Intercessor by whom our petitions can be wafted up, the Mediator by whom grace cometh down," there need be little fear, either that the Episcopal Church of Ireland will take retrograde steps, or develop unhealthy growths. If, indeed, in the past she has been far from faithful to her splendid opportunities, there is reason to hope that now, in her new freedom, she will ever make fresh ones, and do her full share in the work of widening the boundaries of the Lord's kingdom in a land which, in the midst of unrest, is sighing for peace. This result will be hastened by all those who at the mercy-seat pray that God may indeed save Ireland.

LINKING HANDS.

The arrival of the Buckie fishing boats was watched with great anxiety yesterday. Heavy seas swept across the mouth of the harbour, and a strong nor'-easterly gale prevailed. In the course of the afternoon the fishing boat Zulu, belonging to Cullen, was struck by a sea when close to the entrance of the harbour, and one of the crew, named Alex. Runlie, was washed overboard. A number of men joined hands, and, at great personal risk, rushed into the water, and rescued the drowning man.—Daily Paper, Feb. 1, 1888.

The fishing boats came back again,
And anxious hearts were watching near;
As rising tempests lashed the main,
And woke the sleep of many a fear.

A bleak nor'-eastern gale blew down,
And snow was on the distant hill;
While angry clouds appeared to frown,
And waves broke rudely, cold and chill.

Across the harbour's mouth there swept
High heavy seas, as if in wrath
The entrance to that rest were kept;
While none came in, and none went forth.

Mark yonder boat! The haven seems
All but within her reach, when, lo!
A wave has baffled all their dreams,
And, in despair, they let her go.

But one is missing! Washed away
By that rude sea. Where, watchers, where?
There, riding in the foam and spray
Of yonder wave! Look, brothers, there!

Near for a moment! Quick, link hands!
'Tis done, and swift the living chain
Obeys an instinct's stern demands,
And braves all danger: nor in vain.

The man was snatched as from the jaw
Of death by that brave, simple deed.
And, as I read, I thought I saw
A model all might wisely heed.

One sometimes cannot work alone
To save a struggling soul from death;
But linking hands it may be done.
"Unite and conquer," wisdom saith.

Has sickness swept a brother down?
Wait not the lifeboat's tedious aid;
Link hands! and, ere he sink and drown,
The threatening danger may be stayed.

Has stern misfortune dashed thy friend
Amid a wild tumultuous sea?
Link hands! and mutual succour lend,
Together you may saviours be.

Has sin, some sudden wave, removed
An old companion from thy side;
Link hands! and grasp the soul still loved,
And lift him from the raging tide.

Fear not the spray, the chill, the grave;
Shrink not to seek another's aid;
Quick! ere the next succeeding wave
Destroy. Link hands! be not afraid.

Who goeth first? Behold, He leads,
Whose hands can show the nail-prints still;
He grasps the sinking, but He needs
Linked hands his mission to fulfil.

AMONG EAST-END POOR.

Rev. J. W. Atkinson's work in the East-end is many-sided. Among young and old, among unemployed men who are willing to work, and helpless people whose miserable condition can hardly be exaggerated, material relief is dispensed and Christian love shed abroad.

In the report of last year's operations Mr. Atkinson says that, as far as possible, relief is confined to the honest and respectable poor, regardless, however, of church association or parochial connection. In coping with the terrible destitution of the winter months it has been found preferable, in many instances, to give relief in kind rather than in money. Thus, after due investigation, thousands of shilling provision tickets, bread tickets, and coal tickets were distributed during the year. This method of relief has been found to work most satisfactorily. Mr. Atkinson writes:—"Who can tell the meaning of a shilling food-parcel in a starving home? How a poor mother's heart is cheered, and little eyes grow bright again, and the pangs of hunger are appeased—for another forty-eight hours, at any rate."

The report contains details of the working of the other agencies, religious as well as philanthropic, of the Mission. Mr. Atkinson's address is 308, Old Ford-road, London, E.

SPEZIA PROTESTANT HOSPITAL.

It is now twelve months since the frequent cases of sickness among our poor brethren gave me the impulse to try and start a Protestant Hospital for this town and neighbourhood that would be open to any poor Protestant, no matter their denomination.

I regret to say that the end of the year came without my being able to take definitely on my hands the premises for the proposed hospital for want of sufficient help, and that at the end of next March both premises and a security of £20 given to the landlord will be lost. These premises could be had on a lease of ten years; and the rent is £120, a portion of which would come out of the well-cultivated land that surrounds the building. The total amount required annually for this work would not exceed £400.

I just wish to point out to our dear friends in England, who give so liberally for the propagation of the Gospel in Italy, that with us a large work of evangelisation is carried on among the poor, and that it is with the poor that most conversions take place. Now, the only refuge for the poor when sick is the hospital; so it generally happens that when these people fall ill they dread going to a Catholic hospital, for fear of being badly treated and molested in their hour of weakness, and they prefer to remain in their uncomfortable homes or squalid lodgings, suffering pains and deprivations of which few only know, especially in the case of a protracted illness.

We have the sad case just now of a respectable old woman, who has kept her bed for the last fortnight in great weakness and pains. Several members visit her and bring her some help; but what is it compared to the comfort and care she would receive in a good hospital? Still that woman would never hear of going to the Catholic hospital, and chooses to remain in her only and lonely room.

La Spezia, Italy. A. A. Coates.

LODGING-HOUSE MEN.—Another tea was given on Friday, Feb. 24, at the Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George's-street, E., when more than 200 poor fellows were welcomed from the dreary streets without to bright rooms and an ample meal. Earnest, faithful Gospel addresses followed from several friends. Over a dozen hands went up indicating a desire that prayer should be made for them, and there is good reason to believe some started that night, by the grace of God, for the bright home above.

THE SPIRIT OF MAN.

BY REV. JAMES DOUGLAS.

IN treating the subject of Biblical Psychology in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN, we shall not attempt to cover the whole field of inquiry; but rather to call attention to one or two points of prime importance in the constitution of man, which concern the fundamentals of the subject, and of which it is scarcely possible to find even in elaborate treatises any clear or adequate explication. Briefly put, our object is first of all to ascertain, what man's distinctive faculty is; and in the next place to show how that distinctive faculty may intellectually and morally be distinguished. The first of these ends need not occupy us long. We think that Gen. i. 27 is decisive as to the leading constituent in the nature of man:—"So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created He him; male and female created He them." Here we have man marked off by a glorious and superb difference from every form of earthly creation. Of man alone it is said that he is created in the image of God. Other creatures, in common with man, are the products of the Divine power and wisdom, and, as St. Basil observes, "Everything that is made bears some mark or character of Him who made it." But of man alone it is said: Let us make him after our own image—a distinction this, as Archbishop Leighton observes, excellently expressed by the schoolmen, who say, "All other works are stamped with the print of his foot; but only man, of all the visible creation, has been honoured with the image or likeness of his face."

Now, with this Scripture before us, we need have no hesitation in arriving at this conclusion, that man in his distinguishing faculty is related to God. Lately, Professor Franz Delitzsch took occasion, the King of Saxony being present at the time, to point out the anti-Darwinistic character of man's constitution, how that "God created him in contradistinction from lower animals, according to his own image, that is, gave him spirit from his Spirit." This sentiment, we hold, is immoveably set in Holy Writ. Since "God is Spirit" (John iv. 24), and man is created in his image, after his likeness, it must needs be that the base, the fundamental and ruling constituent, in the nature of man, must be spirit likewise. Man's distinctive faculty, therefore, is spirit. He is no mere natural product, no mere piece of animated clay, no mere animal, however highly organised. If he were that, and no more, the Scripture which assures us that he was created in the likeness of his Maker would be meaningless; and if it were true that by the Fall he had lost spirit—then it would follow that man by the Fall had ceased to be man, and that redemption was undertaken in the interests of an animal only—a truly unthinkable hypothesis. The conclusion then stands: man has spirit-faculty, spirit-capacity, a capacity for communion with the great Creator, a power, if we may so speak, to take on God, even as Augustine has so well said: "Thou, O Lord, hast created us for Thyself, and hast redeemed us for Thyself, and our hearts are restless until they rest in Thee."

It will be our endeavour now to trace by strictly psychological tests the presence of spirit-power in man, for we believe that it is here all that is mainly distinctive of him is to be found. It is one thing to hold sincerely that man is spirit as well as soul and body, because the teaching of the infallible Word is conclusive on the point, and another thing to discern the hidden quality of spirit, to note its outstanding intellectual and moral lineaments, to perceive the sure proofs of its presence and operation in the domain of intellect and moral sense. Our object now is to make the hidden quality of spirit known so that alike in the regions of morals and mind there may be no difficulty in understanding how much we owe to this magnificent endowment.

And, first, in respect of the intellect, the play and stamp of spirit are seen in the ability which man has to frame notions which are universal and necessary. In this respect man's superiority over the animals is one of kind, and not simply of degree. Mere practical reason fails to evidence forth man's distinctive faculty. The dog is often found concocting schemes and carrying them out with not a little sense and intelligence. The wit of the horse and the sagacity of the elephant have passed into a proverb. Even the domestic birds, and creatures tinier far, such as the ant, possess an intellectual lobe of singular refinement, which fits them for rational processes of thought and action. But, withal, there is a difference in kind, and not simply in degree, between the human and the animal mind, a difference, we believe, constituted by the presence in man of spirit. We refer now to the ability which man has to exercise abstract thought, to formulate notions and conceptions which have the stamp upon them of irreversible necessity, and which, though occasioned by experience, are not really contained in it.

It is manifest at a glance that time could never have produced a conception of eternity, for time does not contain it. Yet though we are but creatures of a day, nevertheless we are assured that eternity is. God has put upon man the stamp of his own eternity, and He has done it by giving him spirit from his Spirit. Likewise with the conception which the human mind forms of immensity. Nothing save the operation of spirit in man could have yielded this intellectual product. For what do we experimentally know of immensity? Not so much as an animalcule knows of our globe in the drop of water which it inhabits. Even a drop of water bears some proportion to the sum of the earth's contents, but our sensible experience of space bears none at all to immensity. Yet the idea of immensity is clearly ours. There is that mysterious something in us which necessitates our belief in the illimitableness of space on every side. Can we come to any other conclusion than this, that that mysterious something which enables us to do this is due to the distinctiveness of man's origin, as one created in the Divine image, and "constituted," as has been beautifully observed, "for the breath of the eternal Father"?

Why should we know that the ends of a straight line produced can never meet? The notion is abstract, incapable of sense verification, and yet it is instantly perceived as necessary and universal. And so with respect to the whole region of abstract and axiomatic truth. Into this region the animal mind, however trained, educated, ingenious, never enters. All this is reserved for the mind that is informed and transfigured by spirit. What a wonderful being, then, constitutionally is man! And how true the estimate of Novalis, "Man is the higher sense of our planet; the star which connects it with the upper world; the eye which it turns towards heaven."

Thus far we have given a tracing from the side of intellect of what is involved in the place man holds in virtue of his creation in the image of God. But spirit-capacity has a moral as well as an intellectual side; a side of conscience and of will, the due consideration of which we reserve for a subsequent paper.

MR. WALTON AT PLYMOUTH.

A VERY successful ten days' mission in St. Andrew's Hall has been concluded by this earnest and successful evangelist. The Bible-readings have been times of refreshing to Christians, and much appreciated by the numbers attending. The evenings were given to evangelistic addresses, and not one evening passed without souls being brought to the Lord. Some very remarkable cases came to light.

This mission was closed by a two days' conference. Mr. Spencer Walton has a remarkable gift in bringing together men from different sections of the Church, who are one in spirit and aim; and the result in the present case was most happy. Amongst the speakers were Revs. Hudson Taylor, Colin Campbell, F. B. Meyer, Messrs. Reginald Radcliffe, E. H. Glenny, E. Arrowsmith, J. McAuliffe, Eliot Walton, and notably Dr. Barnardo, whose addresses excited much interest. Some of the most helpful and enjoyable meetings were those held in the tea-room, when special addresses were given to Christians on their life and work.

The meetings were largely attended, and many of the local clergymen and ministers were present. Altogether a very profound and marked blessing has been received; and the after-meetings on each evening were times of very definite surrender to the claims of Christ, and especially for missionary work. At the closing meeting it seemed as though a tidal wave of blessing was carrying all before it. Surely such times must mark eras in the spiritual experience of many.

GIRLS' SCHOOLS, BEYROUT.

DEAR SIR,—I have read in your issue of Feb. 24, Dr. H. H. Jessup's interesting letter on "The Gospel in Syria." I am identified with Miss Taylor's work, which has now been going on for twenty years, it having been begun in February 1868, under a mulberry tree, with a group of ragged girls, gathered out of the gutters of Beyrout—a class for which, at that time, no one cared. Miss Taylor has dovoted herself to this work without fee or money reward. Miss Turner, who now assists her, has done the same. Neither of them have any money of their own; their necessities are supplied along with those of the children they care for.

At present the work comprises a school at Bashura, where forty Moslem and Druse girls are lodged, clothed, fed, and taught. A day-school, connected with the same, with forty in attendance. A second day-school at the other side of the town in Ras-Beyrout, with from thirty to forty. Three mothers' meetings, two held on Sundays at Bashura and Ras, and one on Thursdays in the house of an old scholar, now the head of a family; and work among the poor in visiting, almsgiving, clothing, &c., on which last year £26 4s. was spent. The total cost of all these operations was about £500. Including teachers and assistants, this gave a cost of about £3 17s. for each person. A work of such extent and of such varied character accomplished at so small an outlay claims the confidence of the Christian public, and will surely be sustained not only with unfailing but with increasing liberality.

Reports are published forming yearly chapters of Miss Taylor's biography. I shall be glad to forward copies of the last to any sending me their addresses.—Yours truly,

WM. FERGUSON.

ABRAHAM: GOD'S FRIEND.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

I.—THE HOLE OF THE PIT.

ACTS vii. 2, 3, and ISAIAH li. 1.

IN the grey dawn of history, the first great character which arrests our attention for any length, is that of Abraham; who would command our notice for this, if for nothing else, that he is spoken of as the Friend of God. Surely it must be well worthy of our devout consideration to study the inner life, and outward carriage, of such a man; that we too, in our smaller measure, may become not servants only, but friends; the favoured confidants of God; from whom He will not hide his secrets, to whom He will make known his will.

Many rays of interest focus in the story of Abraham. His portrait is drawn with such detail, that it lives before us, with the same hopes and fears, golden hours and hours of depression, as are so familiar to us still. Then also, his life is so constantly referred to in the Old Testament, and in the New, that it would seem as if the right understanding of it is necessary to give us the clue to many a difficult passage, and sacred doctrine, in the succeeding pages of the Bible. Nor can it fail to interest us to discover the reason that the wild Bedouin of the desert and the modern Englishman, the conservative East and the progressive and swift moving West, the Mohammedan and the Christian, can find in the tent of the first Hebrew a common meeting-ground, and in himself a common origin.

Our story takes us back 2000 years before the birth of Christ, and to the ancient city of Ur. And it may be well, by the aid of modern discovery, to consider the earliest conditions amid which this life was cradled. We like to stand in that lone spot among the hills, where, amid the bracken and the gorse, or from some moss-grown basin of rock, there springs forth a river, which drains a continent, and flows, laden with navies, to the sea. We ask the biographer to tell us something of the scenes amid which a great life was nurtured; because we think that we can better understand its colour, current, and drift. So do we thank modern discovery for having cast its lantern on the ruins of that old-world city, which was the busy home of life when flocks browsed on the seven hills of Rome; and red deer, with light foot, trod the site of St. Paul's, and came down to drink the undefiled and pellucid waters of the Thames.

We must look for Ur, not in Upper Mesopotamia, where a mistaken tradition has fixed it, but in the ruins of Mugheir, in the near vicinity of the Persian Gulf. Forty centuries, slowly silting up the soil, have driven the sea back some 100 miles. But at the time of which we speak, it is probable that Abraham's natal city stood upon the coast, near the spot where the Euphrates poured its volume into the ocean waves.

"The present remains of the town consist of a series of low mounds disposed in an oval shape, measuring about two miles in extent, and commanded by a larger mound of seventy feet in height, on which are the remains of what must have been once a vast temple, dedicated to the Moon." In olden days it was a large and flourishing city, standing on the sea, and possessed of fleets of vessels, which coasted along the shores of the Indian Ocean, freighted with the products of that rich and fertile soil. It would be foreign to our purpose to attempt a description of the luxuriance of that land, watered by its two mighty streams, and in which the corn-plant and the date-palm attained to an extraordinary growth, and richly repaid the scanty labours of the people; and where pomegranates and apples, grapes and tamarisks grew wild. Suffice it to say, that it was a long green strip of garden-land, sufficient to attract and maintain vast populations of men, and specially suitable for the settlement of those shepherd-tribes which required extensive pasture lands for their herds and flocks.

These sons of Ham were grossly idolatrous. The clearness of the atmosphere, in which the heavenly bodies blaze with extraordinary beauty, beguiled them into a system of Nature-worship, which speedily became identified with rites of gross indulgence and impurity, such as those into which the heart of man always falls, when it refuses to retain God in its knowledge, and gives itself up to the dictates of its own carnal lusts. The human family seemed verging again on the brink of those horrible and unnatural crimes which had already necessitated its destruction; and it was evident that some expedient must be speedily adopted to arrest the progress of moral defilement, and to save the race. This enterprise was undertaken by Him, whose delights have ever been with the sons of men, and who, in after days, could say, with majestic emphasis, "Before Abraham was, I AM." And He accomplished his purpose then, as so often since, by separating to Himself one man, that through him and his descendants, when they had been thoroughly purified and prepared, He might act upon the fallen race of man, recalling it to Himself and elevating it by a moral lever, working on a pivot outside itself.

Four centuries had passed away since the Flood, and they must have been full of emigration. Population multiplied more rapidly than now, and all the world was open where to choose. Leaving the first seats of life, swarm after swarm must have hived off in every direction. Concentric waves of men, pressed outwards by hunger, love of conquest, or stronger hordes behind, spread outwards over the world. The sons of Japheth pushed northwards, to colonise Europe and Asia, and to lay the foundations of the great Indo-European family. The sons of Ham pushed southwards, over the fertile plains of Chaldea, where beneath the lead of the mighty Nimrod, they built towns of baked clay, reared temples, of which the ruins remain to this day, and cultivated the arts of civilised life to an extent unknown elsewhere. They are said to have been proficient in mathematics and astronomy, in weaving, metal-working, and gem-engraving; and to have preserved their thoughts by writing on clay tablets.

Now, it so happened, that into the midst of this Hamite colonisation there had come a family of the sons of Shem. This clan, under the lead of Terah, had settled down on the rich pasture lands outside Ur. The walled cities, and civilised arts, and merchant traffic, had little attraction for them, as they were rather a race of shepherds, living in tents, or villages of slightly constructed huts. And if Noah's prediction were verified (Gen. ix. 26), we may believe that their religious life was sweeter and purer than that of the people amongst whom we find them.

But, alas! the moral virus soon began its work. Their close association with idolatrous and abominable practices tainted the purity and simplicity of their earlier faith, and it is certain that a levelling-down process was subtly at work, lowering their standard to that of their neighbours. Joshua (chap. xxiv. 15) says distinctly that the fathers of the children of Israel, who dwelt beyond the flood of the Euphrates, "served other gods." And there are traces of the evil in the home of Laban, from which Rachel stole the gods, the loss of which so kindled her father's wrath. It is a heavy responsibility, for godly people to live amid scenes of notorious godlessness and sin. If they escape the snare, their children may be caught in it. What right have we heedlessly to expose young lives to foul miasma, which may taint and defile them for evermore! If we are compelled to live in such baleful and noxious atmosphere, let us ask that the fire of Divine purity may be planted like a cordon of defence around our home; and that our dear ones may dwell in the secret place of the Most High.

Amid such scenes Abraham was born, and grew from youth to manhood. But, from the first, if we may credit the traditions which have lingered in the common talk of the unchanging East, he must have possessed no ordinary character. According to those stories, which, if not literally true, are no doubt based on a substratum of fact, as a young man Abraham offered an uncompromising opposition to the evil practices which were rife, not only in the land, but in his father's house. He employed the weapon of sarcasm, used so effectively afterwards by the prophets to his own descendants. He broke the helpless images to pieces. He refused to bow before the subtle element of fire at the bidding of the monarch, and under the penalty of martyrdom. Thus early was he being detached from the quarry of heathendom, dug from "the hole of the pit," preparatory to being shaped as a pillar in the house of the Lord.

There is nothing of all this in Scripture, but there is nothing inconsistent with it. On the contrary, as the peculiar movements of a planet suggest the presence of some celestial body of a definite size, which is yet hidden from view in the depths of space, so the mature character, the faith, and the ready obedience of this man, when he first comes under our notice, convince us that there must have been a long previous period of severe trial and testing. The mushroom is the child of a single night; but the oak, which is a match for the tempest, is the result of long years of sun and air, breeze and storm.

At last, the God of glory appeared unto him. The light had been growing on his vision, and finally the sun broke out from the obscuring clouds. In what form of glory He revealed Himself we cannot guess, but we must believe that there was some outward manifestation which dated an epoch in his life, and gave him unmistakable basis of belief for all his future. Probably the Son, who from all eternity has been the Word of God, arrayed Himself, as afterwards on the plains of Mamre, in an angel form; or spoke to him, as afterwards to Isaiah, from the midst of the burning seraphim. In any case, the celestial vision was accompanied by a call, like that which in all ages of the world has come to loyal hearts, summoning them to awake to their true destiny, and take their place in the regeneration of the world: "Get thee out of thy country and from thy kindred, and come into the land which I shall show thee." If we live up to our light we shall have more light. If we are faithful in a very little we shall have the opportunity of being faithful in much. If we are steadfast in Chaldea we shall be called out to play a great part in the history of the world. God's choice is never arbitrary, but is based on some previous traits in those whom He summons from amongst their fellows to his aid. "Whom He foreknew, He also did predestinate."

It is impossible to tell into whose hands these words may fall. Young men amid the godless tea-planters of India, or the wild bush-life of Australia. Sailors on ship-board, and soldiers in camp. Lonely confessors of Christ in worldly and vicious societies; where there is everything to weaken, and nothing to reinforce the resistance of the brave but faltering spirit. Let all such take heart. They are treading a well-worn path, on which the noblest of mankind have preceded them; and which was much more difficult in those days, when few were found in it, and the Father of the Faithful trod it alone.

One symptom of being on that path is loneliness. "I called him alone." A loneliness that pressed hard on the heart of Jesus. But it is a loneliness which is assured of the Divine companionship. And though no eye seems to notice the struggles, and protests, and endeavours of the solitary spirit, they are watched with the sympathy of all heaven; and presently there will be heard a call, like that which started Abraham as a pilgrim, and opened before him the way into marvellous blessedness.

Despair not for the future of the world. Out of its heart will yet come those who shall lift it up to a new level. Sauls are being trained in the bosom of the Sanhedrim; Luthers in the cloisters of the Papal Church; Abrahams under the shadow of Ur's great temple to the Moon. God knows where to find them. And, when the times are darkest, they shall lead forth a host of pilgrim spirits, numberless as the sand on the sea-shore, and as the star-dust, lying thick through the illimitable expanse of space.

NATIVE WOMEN OF CEYLON.

DEAR SIR,—Returning after six years spent in Trinity College, Kandy, among the young men in the Kandyan provinces of Ceylon, I would bring before the Churches at home, through your paper, the need of making some real effort to reach the women of this beautiful up-country central portion of the island, which is rightly named the Queen of Crown Colonies.

The Kandyan women are as yet practically unreached. Custom and prejudice prevent the ordinary method of schools being successful. Rev. W. Oakley, just gone to his rest, after fifty-one consecutive years of mission work in the district, recommended a Ladies' Visiting Mission to the Kandyan Walowas. The difficulties of this scheme are serious, these Kandyan homes being scattered over a large extent of country, but I feel that the time has come when we really must make an effort.

Our immediate want is, first, two consecrated Christian women who will devote their lives to this pioneer work. The climate, though tropical, is wonderfully healthy; and the numbers of planters in these tea and coffee districts make the circumstances of civilised life far from impossible. If workers are raised up the means for their support will assuredly be given. A special fund for this purpose is opened by the Missionary Leaves Association. There are about £100 in hands, and £60 promised. The baneful influences of Buddhist alliances for our young men, who are starting in the Christian life, urge upon us the need of completing the work of Christianising these Kandyan provinces, which has been well begun among the male population by our missions and schools.

Yours faithfully, J. G. GARRETT, C.M.S.
Chingford, Essex.

THE GRACE OF TEARS.

DR. ALEXANDER WHYTE, of Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh, selected the following extract from the one hundred and third paragraph of "Grace Abounding" as the topic of his Bunyan lecture last week:—"And now my heart was, at times, exceeding hard; if I would have given a thousand pounds for a tear I could not shed one." As a parallel text from Scripture, Jer. ix. 1 was chosen. Dr. Whyte said that in the first place he would advise his hearers always after sin to seek the grace of tears. As soon as the thought is aroused, the wish well formed, the word spoken, and the deed done, before the recording angel has time to write it down, seek the grace of tears. Tears would not atone for the sin, but the atonement that can atone will never be applied to any man who has not tenderness of heart. And not only immediately after sin, but always after it. Some men make it an article of evangelical religion to forget their past sins. Ezekiel charged Israel with forgetting her sins, and thus opening the door to let them in again. When Satan sophisticates a man's soul to forget his sin he is plotting to make him sin again. The sin of fifty years ago is burning as much before God to-night as when it was first committed. Whatever easily self-justified sinners may say, there is no more evangelical sentiment in the Word of God than this: "My sin is ever before me." It has been truly said that no true penitent ever forgets or forgives himself. God pardons us on the condition that we never pardon ourselves.

We should take great care lest our tears do not become dry after a supposed act of penitence; we can tell their quality by the time they run. A true penitent weeps more for his pardon than for his guilt; and those are the tears God puts in his bottle, and which help to reward Christ for his sufferings on the cross. The real heartbreak comes after pardon—after the reception of those spiritual mercies that make men wonder. When George Fox came to a town or village, and after he had tested the people, he would go back to his inn, and write in his journal, "The people were untender," or else, "The people were tender." Although I don't care much for George Fox's journal, yet that word pulls me through it. It is the great outcome of life to have tears on the cheek and tenderness in the heart.

This tenderness is not the possession of the great sinner, but of the great saint. Tenderness is one of the graces that are grown far on in the Beulah-land near the kingdom. No man in Scotland has a more saintly memory than Robert Murray M'Cheyne, and yet he said, "No one but God knows the abyss of sin in my heart." To another saintly man of England someone said, when he was on his death-bed, "How happy you must be; the gates of heaven will be crowded with your converts waiting to greet you." But he replied, "Take the man away; if I can but crawl into heaven on my hands and knees before the gate shuts, I'll be the blessedest man in heaven." An aged father, when he was complimented on his work for Christ, said, "Call me not a saint, I am a devil." It is only after pardon, you see, that real tears and tenderness come.

There are special times of tenderness that come to the people of God. You have your marriage-days and other days that you celebrate, and God's people have anniversary days in their religious life. Strange days they are, set apart for weeping which is seen in heaven, if not upon the earth. Days which mark the anniversary of their first fall into sin, of their first learning some accursed sin that has blighted their life ever since. Such men go all through life planting associations and memorials that ever after give out fountains of tears. As the sinner looks back and remembers where he has been and what he has done, his head becomes waters and his eyes a fountain of tears.

And now here is a strange fact—it is among such men God comes for his best servants. Out of the twelve, that man was most useful to Christ whose head was waters and his eyes a fountain of tears. And among the Puritans none have rendered God so much service as this distressed, sorrowful John Bunyan. When a certain preacher was praised to Dr. Duncan he remarked, "Yes, but he is too unbroken for me." God has to come to broken men for his best servants, and He brings them in to administer his covenant mercies. The early Church had a story that if a cock crowed while Peter was preaching the sermon was cut short: he could go no further. The memory of that horrible night when he betrayed his Lord overcame him, but when he began again what an unction and tenderness must have rested upon his words!

When Christ was going up to Mount Calvary He saw a crowd of women weeping and bewailing Him, but He turned to them and said, "Weep not for Me, but weep for yourselves." I am not wrong in saying that as He looks down on this congregation He says, "Weep for yourselves." Yes, Lord, we will weep for ourselves, we must compassionate ourselves. When a man is stricken with consumption or cancer, how he compassionates himself! All the world changes to him—pleasures, politics, and ambitions, they all change. But no cancer-filled corpse ever pitied himself half so much as the man who knows the plague of his own heart, and there is no man so difficult to pacify and gladden as that man. John Owen has said that the human heart has chosen a great object for its enmity, and so have a believer's tears.

CHRISTIAN P.O. ASSOCIATION.

THIS Association, although only recently organised, has branches throughout England and Scotland, and it is hoped that a good footing will soon be gained in Ireland, America, and elsewhere. The welfare of the large army of post office employés was for many years made the subject of earnest prayer by a Christian lady who felt that this was a neglected field; in due course the way opened for the desired organisation, and earnest and efficient helpers soon came forward.

The Association has been formed on a strictly unsectarian basis, having for its objects the promotion of Christian fellowship and the spread of Divine truth and life in the post and telegraph offices. There are prayer unions for members who are trusting the Lord Jesus; members who desire Christian sympathy and help are classed as "associates." There are also branches for young women and telegraph messengers. Members subscribe 3d. per annum towards the expenses of the Association, and are entitled to receive The Quarterly Mail, which contains news of work in connection with all the branches.

On Tuesday evening last week, in Miss Macpherson's Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green-road, the inaugural meeting was held of a branch of the Association for the Eastern District of London. Invitations to tea were accepted by about seventy men; after tea about thirty more joined the company, and a happy evening was spent. Sir Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B., was expected to attend and preside, but he was absent through ill-health. Rev. Archibald G. Brown was an excellent chairman, and among those who delivered addresses were Mr. A. C. P. Coote, and Rev. T. Richardson.

LORD'S DAY OBSERVANCE.—It is proposed that 300,000 copies of a "Call to Prayer for the Sanctification of the Lord's Day" be circulated immediately in London and vicinity, through means of the churches and the Young Men's Christian Associations. They are to be sent out by the London section of the Sabbath Observance Prayer Union Society, which is composed of representatives from all parts of Christendom. To enable this distribution to be made, help is earnestly asked to be sent at once to Mr. Joseph W. Leng, 337, Strand, W.C.

Bishop Taylor's African Missions.

Bishop Taylor's self-supporting missions in Africa have, from their commencement, attracted considerable public attention. The first expedition was accompanied by prophecies of a terrible disaster, and, after its safe arrival in Loanda, the death of one of its members and the sickness of others gave rise to greatly exaggerated sinister reports. These were since emphatically contradicted from the field, and followed by more correct news of growing success. The following is an impartial view of the work done at the five stations of Angola during the last three years.

The space allowed does not admit a statement of Bishop Taylor's principles, but fairness requires the following quotation, to show his own plans and expectations: "Much time is needed to master languages and prepare the way, just as years are required to grow an apple-tree; but, instead of planting a tree, and spending a quarter of a century in developing it, we propose, on the self-supporting plan, rapidly to plant an orchard, continental it its dimensions." Bearing this numerical extension in mind, nobody can expect every station (or tree) to grow as if all means and attention had been concentrated upon it. Another point to be considered before a judgment can in justice be formed, concerning the growth of a tree, is the nature of the soil in which it is planted. It must be remembered that Angola is a Portuguese colony, where religious liberty exists only by toleration and not by law, where, consequently, much prudence is wise, where further, two languages, the Portuguese and the native Kimbundu, have to be learned before communication with the population is at all possible. And I can say, by experience, that it is no play to pick up a language in the study of which all the rules of your own grammar simply help to puzzle you; while no friendly manual assists you in bringing order into the apparent chaos of contradictions. Besides, the atmosphere and the sun of the topics soon teach everyone that chi va piano va sano (who goes softly, goes safely).

Passing now to the first station, Loanda; it is situated in a large city and seaport, capital of the province, and seat of the Bishopric of Angola and Congo; population about 10,000, 4000 of whom are European and mulattos, the rest blacks. Two young laymen were left in charge, with the commission to build up a self-supporting school. Although having to compete with a free high school, free normal schools, and half a dozen cheap private and boarding schools, the two workers were able to get along without assistance, and work up a school of eighteen paying boys. This school, however, would not have kept the teachers without the addition of income from giving private lessons in languages. The missionary feature of the work consisted in singing Gospel hymns, about fifty of which were taught to the boys; in the reading of the Bible by those who were able; and in the selling of Scriptures and tracts. The first depôt of these was opened at Loanda, and thence sub-depôts were successively established at all the other stations. Private daily conversation further exerted an influence. A Sunday-school for the few Kroo-boys of Loanda was started, but it gradually declined, and another free school for native baker-youths had the same fate. One of the chief drawbacks is the lack of a mission-house, which has made it necessary for the work to be shifted four times, each moving entailing loss of money, time, and pupils. Since this station has as fine and comfortable a house as can be desired, and two ladies to take charge of the girls' school, the work has made a new start, and when last seen there were three boarders, about a dozen day scholars, and the promise of several more. Sunday-school work and meetings are also on the programme. With a complete staff of workers, this station may yet see abundant fruit of its labours. Alarmed at the work already done, the Roman Catholic clergy have called in the Jesuits, who are showing opposition.

The second station was established at Dondo, the terminus of the Guanza River navigation, at the special request of the principal men. Dondo may be compared for heat and fever to Sierra Leone. Here the population of 5000 is nearly all native, and to a large extent fluctuating. Thousands of carriers belonging to eight or ten different tribes are constantly coming in with cargoes for shipping or trading, and going out with the goods exchanged for rubber, ivory, coffee, &c. At the outset a good house was purchased in the street traversed by the caravans, and manned with an ordained preacher, a lady doctor, and a young missionary apprentice. A farm was tried, but finally given up as not paying. The school made a grand start with about thirty adult night scholars, who came to learn English. Their numbers, however, gradually went down, and this department had to be abandoned; two reasons for this being the heat and the insufficient knowledge of Portuguese. The paying day-school has been doing well from the beginning, averaging four or five boarders, and a dozen day pupils. The free evening school and Sunday-school for young folks is, however, the most interesting and cheering part of the work. The attentive audience generally fills the place to overflowing, and heartily joins in the plantation songs and Gospel hymns. Step by step Portuguese is taking the place of English, and it is hoped that within a few years the native language will be the chief medium through which Divine truth will be set before the people. Not long ago the preacher in charge began to preach regular sermons in Portuguese, and his Bible-class of native lads makes encouraging progress. While the lady physician lived, and was allowed to practise, her assistance was highly appreciated. A well-manned and well-equipped mechanical department has for a long time done much toward the support of the place (which pays rent for an adjoining house), and, though at present unoccupied, is expected soon to be again in working order. This station has been visited with the death of two ladies, and tried by the departure of several members; nevertheless it marches steadily forward. New helpers are greatly needed just now.

Nhangue a Pepe, the third station, derives its name from a bird that always follows the cattle, and all its importance and value from the rich pastures extending far to the right and left of the trade-path to and from the interior. The native population, living under native chieftains, is rather scattered, and two neighbouring traders make up the white population. Little support is to be expected from them by schooling. In spite of appearances, the thing was tried, by requiring boys to work on the farm for their instruction, and so up to the present a farm-school has been maintained under many vicissitudes; but it may be expected to be transformed into a free school. A farm on a large scale has been tried, and heroically kept on with frequent modifications, but as yet, without satisfactory results. The cattle herd, on the contrary, is thriving. Two new houses have recently been built, one for the farm school, the other for a tannery and shop. The independent tribes on the opposite side of the river are in the habit of selling all their produce at incredibly cheap prices as they gather it in, and of buying it again for double the amount when the season of want comes. At their own suggestion, the Mission intends to open a little shop to trade with them, and to store their provisions, of course, not without profit. This may become a valuable help to support the missionaries, and to establish regular relations with those tribes. A Sunday-school has been started, but the attendance is not large. Medicine is regularly dispensed to the sick. At this altitude the climate is less weakening than at Loanda and Dondo, but by no means fever-free.

Dungo Andongo, the fourth station, also on the main trade-path, is hidden in a narrow alley, between immense towering pillars of conglomerate, the like of which I never saw, nor ever expect to see. Owing to the rapid daily changes from chilly morning mists to noon-day heat under a vertical sun pouring his fiery darts down the funnel of the dazzling rocks, and again to the cold winds blowing through their narrow channels at night, the place is only tolerable to persons of strong constitutions. The brave missionaries, who have held this fort so long have had very few weeks without attacks of biliousness or fever. Still they keep on. They are three, an ordained minister, his wife, who is a preacher as well as a teacher, and their daughter. Support was at first expected from a school as in Dondo and Loanda; for the civilised population seemed large enough; but that source of income proved insufficient, and so, little by little, a shop grew, with the help of friendly traders, to a nice little business, which not only keeps the family, but has enabled them to call for a helper who can devote his time to teaching, studying languages, and mission work as it develops. The paying school having ceased, a new free school has commenced with about ten scholars, and, after a time, it may be paying again. The Sunday-school at this place is one of the most cheering sights. The large schoolroom is regularly filled, and young folks stand beyond the street door. The children are full of life and fun; they sing the Gospel hymns, hear the Bible read in Portuguese and explained.

The fifth and last station, on the border of Portuguese domination is at Malanga, a village of about 1000 population, lying about 300 miles east of Loanda. It is a good country; for all its hollows contain springs, and the soil only demands an extra supply of water during the three or four dry months of the year, to produce abundantly all the year round. And the temperature is mild enough to allow a white man to work out-doors from morning till night. Only there is the large swamp at the foot of the village, and when, in the dry season, its borders are exposed to the sun, deadly miasmas arise, and numbers of the inhabitants are struck down by fevers. The people put in charge by Bishop Taylor in person are still standing firm at their post. As this is the best place for agriculture, much attention and much muscle was given to this department. A large tract of land was cleared, well laid out, ploughed, and planted, and houses built on it; but, as farming in a new country is rich in disappointments, it has not yet paid sufficiently to support the station. The mission-house, which was old and out of repairs, has been made comfortable, and a school and chapel-room added. For lack of white or half-caste children, the school never paid, and was abandoned with the departure of the teacher. The Sunday-school was kept up, but not, till recently, was it possible to obtain a regular attendance. The change was due to the arrival of a new teaching staff, and to the introduction of Portuguese and Kimbundu as channels for Gospel teaching and preaching and singing. Recently, too, the first regular native free school was opened here, English being never used except when taught to the boys, and Portuguese only for explanations. Paying day scholars and private lessons amply supported the teacher. Assistance has also come from the carpenters' shop, and from the practice of the medical missionary. A shop doing legitimate trade is probably in operation by this time, and helping to make the missionaries more comfortable, also to bring the natives within reach and under personal influence.

We cannot pass by in silence the gratifying success of Dr. Summers' work. His skill and devotion won him the hearts of the people, and through their generosity he was enabled to equip thirty-six carriers, and to start with them and a few petty native traders for the primary goal of the missionary expedition, the land of the Bashilangue. After a march of more than three months, having no company but that of his blacks, he reached Lubuku in safety, and was cordially welcomed by the great King Mukengue, Kalamba. When last heard of (letter dated Luluaburg, January 1, 1887), he was earning his support by collecting medicinal plants for the Congo State, treating the blacks in their infirmities, studying the language and preparing things for the missionaries expected to follow soon after him. Without inaccuracy this may be called the sixth station. H. CHATELAIN.

AMERICAN NOTES.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

EVANGELISTIC work has taken hold in a marked degree within a few years throughout our country. Only a few years ago Hammond, Earle, Moody, Needham, and Whittle were the men who pioneered and laboured all over the land. They are now reinforced by others who are evidently qualified for the work, and upon whose efforts the blessing of God has rested. There are at least fifty evangelists to-day, "men of might and men of war, fit for the battle," who are not only skilful to preach the glad tidings of salvation, but who also boldly contend for the faith once for all, delivered to the saints. While it is not noted as a year for great revivals, yet the reports from the evangelists this winter are full of good cheer. One cannot, however, fail to perceive also the growth of an apostasy which widens and deepens year by year.

* * * *

There have been some defections in ministerial ranks. Unitarianism, as a sect, is not increasing, but Unitarian tenets permeate this part of Christendom; thus it is that orthodox preachers have imbibed heterodox doctrines. For a time there was great outcry against evangelists, and some very bitter attacks have been made on them, as a class, by writers in certain religious journals. But the pendulum swings the other way, and pastors, who deplore the inertness of their churches and the spread of un-truths, are summoning evangelists to their assistance. Others, not able to secure such help, are bestirring themselves to greater activity in pastoral work. In some of the cities a system of visiting has been adopted, so that the homes around every church shall have, at least, one call from a church member, who gives an earnest invitation to the families to attend both the church and Sunday-school. The principal leaders in this movement inform me that, as yet, there has not been much practical result from this effort.

* * * *

The work is good, so far as it goes, but the Church services must be somewhat changed. A long heavy service of uninterpreted anthems and unmeaning jargon, called classic singing, finds no interest with the great public. An analytical study, or a cold piece of pagan philosophy, served up with a religious garnishing, does not go down happily with the hunger-bitten who cry for bread. Such preaching has failed. With the renewed activity in visiting, let there be more earnest, simple, and practical Bible preaching, in order to hold and save the people. This, we believe, is now the great desideratum.

* * * *

Is your correspondent in an unhappy mood? or is he looking at matters with "a jaundiced eye," for he has another complaint to make? Nor would he utter his secret fears were it not that THE CHRISTIAN reaches the Society he now lovingly criticises. Perhaps his words will thereby stir up the pure minds of dear brethren concerned, by way of remembrance. I refer to that historic Institution, the Y.M.C.A.

* * * *

This scribe has observed, with great sadness, the moral deterioration of the Y.M.C.A. in our cities and towns. We cannot forget its usefulness in the past; its faithfulness, its devotion to a high spiritual standard; its loyalty to doctrine, its quenchless ardour for souls, its burning zeal in every good form of evangelism. But how are the mighty fallen! How has the gold become dim! and the most fine gold changed! I assert, what is said to me, by leading pastors, by spiritually minded business men, by prominent evangelists, and by many Y.M.C.A. secretaries, that this noble agency, originally founded by a godly brother for high and holy purposes, has fallen to the plane of a decent school of physical culture. True, it is now stronger in membership, richer in wealth, more popular as a caterer to human nature—"rich and increased in goods, and having need of nothing, and knowing not that ——"

* * * *

Is it a growth and a gain if the humorous supersedes the holy; if physical culture crowds out spiritual conversion; if games of chance or skill absorb more time than Bible study? We have seen one Y.M.C.A. building where "Christian" has dropped out, and cut upon its forefront reads the title, "Young Men's Institute."

* * * *

I wish to end these Notes pleasantly. It has been my privilege to visit the "School for Christian Workers," at Springfield, Mass., where over fifty young men are in training for Y.M.C.A. secretaryships, Sunday-school superintendents, pastors' assistants, and, mayhap, evangelists. It is a noble college, and promises great things. I could perceive no material difference between the class of splendid fellows there and the theological students of other institutions. Among them I found Englishmen, Irishmen, and Canadians, as well as Americans. Their training is thorough; we shall hear good reports of their work in the future.

* * * *

Prof. F. L. Patton is elected President of Princeton College, in lieu of Dr. M'Cosh, whose resignation was so unwillingly accepted. Prof. Patton is a sound divine; he is well remembered as the man who drove Prof. Swing out of the Presbyterian Church for his disloyalty to the faith. Dr. Swing tried to convert his people to his Unitarian scepticism, but through the efforts of Dr. Patton the Presbytery deposed him from their ministry. Prof. Patton has filled a chair in Princeton for several years. Princeton must be evangelical: she can be nothing else. The influence of Dr. Hodge still lives.

THE COW-CROSS MISSION.

THIS MISSION is an undenominational agency. Beginning in the Cow-Cross district in 1865, it sought to carry the light of the Gospel into unoccupied fields, and it has ever since been doing a good and useful work in and about Clerkenwell.

In a "special notice," issued with the annual report, just published, Mr. Catlin says, "It is a question with us how we shall be able to continue till next autumn." The Home of Rest at Ventnor was a great blessing last year to a score of weary workers, but it will have to be given up this year unless the funds of the Mission increase. The report records with thankfulness that the converts remain steadfast, showing that the work is of God, and not of man. Mr. Catlin's address is 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, N.

A POPULAR MISSIONER.—During the many years that Mr. Aitken has been engaged in this work, he has, of course, conducted missions in numerous towns, particularly in the old parish churches of our country, and in the cathedrals also. He is, we believe, the only mission preacher who has conducted services in Canterbury Cathedral, in York Minster, and in the cathedrals of Manchester and Bristol. In the summer of 1886, he went on a long evangelistic tour in America. He also enjoys the distinction of being the only clergyman who has preached in the Guildhall of London. He did so on two occasions, on the 18th and 22nd of October, 1878. Mr. Aitken, in his note-book, penned the following entry:—"A very solemn feeling aroused, and a great impression seemed made; crowded with people, mostly men."—The Quiver, for March.

MR. SCROGGIE IN GLASGOW.

THE last fortnightly division of the comprehensive series of evangelistic services, conducted by Mr. J. M. Scroggie, in the Free Churches in the East-end of Glasgow, reached a prosperous conclusion on Friday, February 24. London-road Free Church was the scene. Much blessing has attended these labours of this servant of God, since their commencement in September last. The attendance during the fortnight has been larger than this church has known since 1882, when the same evangelist had the help of Mr. Sankey in the service of song.

The spiritual power of the services increased as the mission proceeded. In the course of the meetings more than 120 cases of special interest were dealt with by the workers in the after-meetings, with results more or less satisfactory. These persons have all been already visited in their own homes. The resultant blessing is found in more than one direction. Christians have been refreshed. Workers have been more closely drawn together, and have done much hard work with perfect harmony and cordiality. A fresh spirit of hopeful service and believing prayer has been evoked, and ordinary work has received an impulse, which it is hoped will continue many days.

Praise is offered to God alone for all this blessing. Under Him, the workers in Glasgow feel much gratitude to Mr. Scroggie, for the way in which, during all this lengthened campaign, he has thrown himself upon the gracious power of God, and the spiritual need of the multitudes. Our readers are earnestly requested to remember this evangelist in prayer, with respect to future labour in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and elsewhere.

ORPHANS AT KOLAR, INDIA.

A CORRESPONDENT who has recently visited Miss Anstey's Mission here sends some interesting details:—

I can only say, with an experienced Christian gentleman well known here that it is truly a noble work. I wish friends at home who have money for foreign work would oftener remember the famine Orphans at Kolar, as well as the evangelistic and medical work done there by four European ladies and their native helpers. I was delighted to pass from the infant school with its twenty little ones under five years to the classes from children of six up to youths and girls of seventeen—all learning from the Bible. Afterwards I saw the workshops; the lads were learning trades and the young women to keep house, preparing the food, &c., and all were so busy.

It did me good to see the young mothers take their baskets, and go to work earning what they need, so as to leave their husbands free to save all they can towards the purchase of the needed bullocks, &c., for a little farm. This is to be given to each couple as soon as they have money enough for these bullocks and tools, and to keep them till they can reap and sell their first crops. Some twenty couples hope to do this in eighteen or twenty months, when they will be settled, ten or twelve families in a group; a native Christian village in the midst of a heathen people. Each village has its little school-chapel, &c., and the farms are worked partly by the younger boys, for the Mission, till these young men claim them. I think I never saw so healthy a set of young people, nor so neat and pretty a lot of little ones: all clean and tidy, though it was soon after 8 p.m. when I saw them. Every one seems to have her or his work, and to know it, and, however hard it is, it is done cheerfully.

SOUTHAMPTON Y.W.C.A.—There are 81 members on the roll, 36 having joined during last year. The Travellers' Aid Society has proved of great service to young women arrived by boat or rail, and all the other agencies have been well worked.

MISSIONARY NOTES.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

OF a number of missionaries who have recently left for work abroad three ladies go at their own charges, and three at least (two ladies and one clergyman) owe their missionary impetus to the Keswick Convention.

COREA.

Mrs. Scranton, wife of Rev. W. B. Scranton, M.D., of the American Methodist Episcopal Mission, Seoul, Corea, writes:—"Rev. H. G. Appenzeller, of our Mission here, is soon to administer the ordinance of baptism, for the first in Corea, to a woman. That is, it is the first Protestant baptism. This woman is the wife of one of the colporteurs."

A CHRISTIAN COLLEGE FOR SIAM.

Rev. L. A. Eaton, of the American Baptist Mission, who has been in the United States for some months endeavouring to obtain funds for the erection of a Christian High School in Bangkok, has returned to his field of labour, having secured in America the sum of 15,000 dollars, to which the King of Siam will add 5000 dollars. The erection of the school will now be proceeded with.

IN MEMORY OF ADONIRAM JUDSON.

The one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Adoniram Judson, the famous pioneer missionary to the Burmese, will occur on August 9 this year. In commemoration of this event it has been decided to erect a Judson Memorial Church in Mandalay, the capital of Upper Burmah, within sight of the prison pens of Ava and Oung-pen-la. The building of the church will be commenced in July next, and the corner-stone will be laid on August 9.

JAPAN.

Rev. E. R. Fulkerson, who is at present engaged as tutor in the Tokio Anglo-Japanese College in Aoyama, reports that "all the students in the dormitories, with the exception of two or three, have been brought to Christ. They all seem to want to preach to others as soon as they are converted. Nor are their efforts in vain. They returned recently, and reported about two hundred hearers and twenty conversions during a single afternoon."

THE CONGO COUNTRY.

One of Bishop Taylor's missionaries writing from Kinchessa, Congo, recently, says:—"I have not seen anything like piety in Africa so far, among whites or natives, excepting among the missionaries. Licentiousness and drunkenness abound. The natives have learned the white man's sins; and so his Sabbaths, when he is not obliged to work, are spent in dancing, drinking, or worse. This I have seen again and again. Rid this land of the drink traffic, and then it may be possible to civilise and Christianise it."

A MEMORIAL HOSPITAL IN CHINA.

Dr. E. H. Edwards, of the China Inland Mission, in his annual report of the work at Tai-yuen-fu, Shansi (the scene of the labours of the late Dr. R. Harold A. Schofield) says:—"The friends of the late Dr. Schofield will be glad to know that a house has been bought in a most eligible position, which we hope will eventually be the memorial hospital. We have already obtained possession of the greater part of the premises, but before they can be occupied for medical work various alterations and additions will have to be made. For the present it is used as an opium refuge."

TRIAL AND PERSECUTION IN CHINA.

Miss F. M. Britton, of the China Inland Mission, writes from Wun-chau, Chehkiang Province, on Sept. 23:—"Cholera is raging now, and we are having a sad time. The people are dying in hundreds; the poor ones are just thrown into a hole and buried without a coffin. Several of our members have been taken home quite suddenly. The medicine we have given away in several cases appears to have saved life......Two men have just come here from an out-station, who have been dreadfully beaten, and can scarcely move. They are Christians. This is the second time they have been persecuted and turned out from home. Both are young men. Their backs are dreadfully swollen and cut with the beating they have had. Their persecutors are very desperate characters. Pray much that good may come from this great trial."

CHINA.

The province of Honan will, in a short time, receive a preacher of the Gospel from Canada. Rev. Jonathan Goforth and his wife have left Quebec to engage in Christian work in the province.

CENTRAL INDIA.

Dr. Elizabeth Beatty, a medical missionary of the Canadian Presbyterian Church at Indore, Central India, during last year treated over six thousand patients. Miss Beatty thinks that the institution of a hospital and training school for Hindoo women would open a wide door for the entrance of Christianity.

RIOTS IN CHINA.

The mail from China, which arrived in London on Saturday week, brings the news that anti-missionary riots are prevalent in Chi-nan-fu, one of the principal towns in Shantung, and great damage has been done by the mob to various Christian buildings. American, British, and French missionaries are the victims.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

The British and Foreign Bible Society has for the last two years supported a colporteur on the scene of the engineering operations being conducted by M. de Lesseps in the Panama Isthmus. During the first year he sold nearly £40 worth of Bibles, and last year his work was even more important, both Spaniards and Chinese being reached, besides the English-speaking population. There is a Sunday-school, and also a day-school at Panama.

A MISSION BOAT FOR LAGOS.

Rev. J. F. T. Halligey, of the Wesleyan Mission, Lagos, West Africa, has been provided, through the kindness of friends at York, with a beautiful little boat to help him in his work of visiting outstations, &c. The name of the boat is Alafia, a Yoruba word which means "Peace." The lagoons and rivers with which Lagos is connected make it possible for the boat to voyage hundreds of miles in smooth water. Already several trips have been made to villages accessible from the lagoons, enabling the missionary to proclaim the message of "peace" to many who would otherwise seldom, if ever, hear a Gospel truth.

MISSIONARIES IN TURKEY.

General Lew Wallace, formerly United States Minister to Turkey, in a recent speech, bore the following testimony to the American missionaries in Turkey:—"I have often been asked, What of the missionaries of the East? Are they true? and do they serve their Master? And I have always been a swift witness to say—and I say it now, solemnly and emphatically—that if anywhere on the face of the earth there exists a devout band of Christian men and women, it is these. Their work is of that kind which will in the future be productive of the greatest good. They live and die in the work. They are God's people, and they should be remembered and sustained by us."

SOUTH AMERICAN INDIANS.

Mrs. C. A. Huntley, of Demerara, in a recent letter gives an account of a visit paid to Indian settlements. She was enabled to take the Indians many temporal comforts, and, having attended some of them during sickness, she stirred them up to attend Gospel meetings. Mr. Henry Taylor, who was brought up among the Indians, has since left all and gone to make his abode in the midst of these poor people. This is matter for rejoicing to the Indians, but to Mr. Taylor, who has a wife and family, the decision was a loving response to the call of duty, made in faithful dependence upon God. Mrs. Huntley has been staying for some time at Port of Spain, Trinidad, in a weak state of health.

FRIENDS' MISSION, MADAGASCAR.

Besides a large amount of work in connection with schools, training of teachers, hospital, printing, &c., in the capital (Antananarivo) the district of Madagascar under the care of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association covers about 2000 square miles, and contains 133 congregations, with nearly as many schools. Mr. H. E. Clark writes that there is a pressing need that more workers should be sent out this summer. In Antananarivo there are only five Friends' missionaries (not including ladies), two of whom will shortly be leaving to take up work in the country districts of Arivonimamo and Mandridrano, whilst the health of one of the ladies is so shattered that she will be compelled to come hame on furlough at once.

PERSIA.

A French paper published at Teheran reports that Dr. Torrence, the medical missionary of the American Presbyterian Board, has received authority from the Shah to establish a hospital in that city, where persons without regard to religion or nationality may receive treatment. The services of Dr. Torrence have produced quite an impression on the officials of Persia, and he has been decorated as an officer of one of the distinguished orders.

OPIUM REFUGES IN CHINA.

In a recent letter, Mr. Stanley Smith writes:—"Tracts, opening new opium refuges, &c., form an inexhaustible receptacle. £30 would open a good opium refuge. Anyone with £30 to give can open a Hien city (capital of a country) to the Gospel, and that means that all the villages in connection with that country have a chance of being evangelised. We are looking for all the Hien cities south of Tai-yüen, in Shan-si—about sixty—to have opium refuges in each, and thus be opened to the Gospel." Dr. Stewart writes from Tai-yüen Fu on November 18:—"The refuge is as full as it can hold of people, and four of the patients this week say that they want to be baptised and enter the Church."

CHRISTIAN UNITY IN NORTH INDIA.

A mission hospital has been built lately in Ferozepore by Rev. F. Newton, of the American Presbyterian Mission. It was opened by the Bishop of Lahore (Dr. Valpy French). Such acts as this on the part of the Bishop go far to promote that "Unity of the Spirit" and to strengthen that "Bond of Peace" which all those who love the Lord long for. Had we more such kindly acts and intercourse in the Church at large, there would be less of strife and more of blessing. The hospital is doing a good work. Mr. Newton, the medical missionary in charge, is greatly cheered in his labours of love by a number of non-Christian native gentlemen, who have raised considerable sums collected amongst themselves for the furtherance of this work.—Punjaub Mission News.

BAPTISMS IN CHINA.

Miss M. Williams, of the China Inland Mission, writing from Ho-k'eo, reports the baptism, on the Kwang-sin River, province of Kiang-si, of forty-six Chinese converts. Says Mr. Hudson Taylor, in China's Millions:—"We believe that the seven baptized at Ho-k'eo are the firstfruits of that station. So are the four baptized at Gan-ren. At Kwei-k'i we witnessed the baptism of the first convert about the beginning of June, 1886; now six men and nine women are added to the church. The interest near I-yang, another out-station opened last year, is very cheering. It is worthy of note that the stations on this river have only been occupied by lady missionaries, co-operating with married native pastors and preachers. We have had no men to spare for the fifteen millions of Kiang-si!"

SCENES AT MILLWALL DOCKS.

THE numbers of unemployed men flocking to these Docks seem to grow larger and larger, and the fighting for the free dinner tickets, given away towards noon to those who have lingered about in the forlorn hope of a job, becomes fiercer each week. Yesterday so terrible was the struggle that one man was seriously injured, and the sight was heart-aching to witness. After filling our benches to the fullest extent, till our last basin was spent, a crowd of weary, hungry men were obliged to be sent empty away.

The poor men have found our address and come to our door, after the hall is closed, till close on midnight, for a free lodging order. We have found, however, a large number to have "homes," though in the last state of destitution, and invaded with sickness and death in some instances. We have been actively collecting their addresses this week, and visiting them, and shall be glad to minister to these lonely ones at "home," as our friends enable us. WILLIAM CHORLEY.

2, Marquess-grove, Canonbury, N.

BRIXTON Y.M.C.A.—Mr. George Williams presided over the sixth annual meeting of this branch a few days ago. The report showed that the Association had made considerable progress during the year, having secured the services of a general secretary who devotes his whole time to its interests. It was stated that the Association buildings are quite inadequate to the needs.

COLD AND HUNGER IN ST. GILES'.

TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

Dear Friends,

Kindly permit me to mention the needs-be for a little special help for the struggling Poor of St. Giles' during this exceptionally severe weather. The fag-end of the winter is invariably the most trying of all in a district like ours. The first two or three months the Poor manage to pull through by all sorts of shifts and contrivances, disposing of everything in their scantily-furnished rooms that can be turned into ready cash. Thus they secure food and manage to exist; but the last month or two of the cold weather invariably produces much suffering and want, as all their little means are then gone. Add to this the recent snowfalls and bitter winds, interfering as they do with the trade of all costermongers and street traders, and you have a fair idea of the necessity that exists for rendering a little timely assistance in the shape of coals and food until our poor folks can again get a fair chance of fighting want and hunger from their doors. Any moneys entrusted to us I think I can fairly promise shall be wisely distributed, and can be forwarded to our Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or to yours sincerely,

GEO. HATTON,

Superintendent, St. Giles' Christian Mission,

Feb. 28.

"Hitherto hath the Lord helped us."

FIFTY-THREE years have elapsed since the establishment of the SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST. It was formed for the purpose of giving instruction to women in the Zenanas of India, and in their own homes in China. Thus it is the oldest Zenana Society in existence. It was found impossible then to carry the object of the Society into effect, for the doors of those prison-homes were locked and double-barred. The Committee, therefore, while biding their time, turned to School-work, finding it more practicable to collect and to teach children, especially of the lower classes, than to reach those of more mature age and of higher social position. Beginning with Schools in India and China, the work of the Society was subsequently extended to other countries also, and now includes Japan, the Straits, Africa, the Levant, and Persia.

The object of the Society has been strictly evangelistic—that of carrying the Gospel to the homes of the East. To this end, education was felt to be of great importance, in order that those who should be reached by these missionaries might each be carefully instructed in the truths of the Christian religion, enabled to read the Word of God for herself in her own tongue, and qualified to impart her knowledge to others. Thus the object of the Committee included evangelisation, education, and training in teaching.

The work of the Society may be thus briefly summed up:—Zenana Missions; Medical Missions; Village Missions; work among the crowds assembling at native festivals; house and hut visiting; boarding, day, infant, and Sunday Schools; Bible and sewing classes; training native Zenana missionaries, district visitors, school-mistresses, and Bible-women; mothers' meetings; also branches of the Bible and Prayer Union, and of the Young Women's Christian Association.

The souls that have been given to the Society's missionaries for their hire, out of many nations and kindreds and people and tongues, are not to be counted by human arithmetic. There are thousands now gladdening the hearts of those who led them to the Saviour, adorning his doctrine, and working in His service.

"This is the Lord's doing, and it is wonderful in our eyes."

The Committee very earnestly appeal for funds to enable them to carry on, and to extend, their various operations.

Educational.

MORAVIAN EDUCATION.—Fairfield Boys' School, near Manchester. Established 1790.—For terms and all particulars apply to the Rev. W. J. BIRTILL.

THE PRINCIPAL OF HIGH-CLASS SCHOOL for Young Ladies, desirous of leaving home for the short vacation, offers one or two vacancies to pupils of good social position, at greatly reduced terms on early arrangement. Sound Christian training. Strictest investigation solicited. References to the Evangelical clergy, ministers, and parents who are anxious to recommend.—Miss D., care of Caretaker, 13, Rose-street, Newgate-street, E.C.

BELLE VUE, AMBLESIDE.—Good School for Girls. Principal, Mrs. FLEMING. Healthy and beautiful situation; large rooms, garden, tennis. Careful Christian training, and thorough teaching. Cambridge Examinations. Resident foreign and English governesses. Masters. 50 to 60 guineas. Reduced terms for children under 12.

NEED & REASONS FOR ASKING.

NEED.—A House with lower rooms large enough to hold meetings in—Gospel Meetings, Y.W.C.A., and Gospel Temperance Meetings, &c.; Class and Committee Rooms. Upstairs: Rooms for occasional Visitors, Tired Workers, &c.; and perhaps as a permanence for some whom the Lord has laid aside from active work.

REASONS FOR ASKING.—1st. Because the present Rooms to let in Bristol for these purposes are very expensive, and quite beyond most societies' funds; mostly too large or too small; very noisy, from being near to the trams. 2nd. Because two Houses are now being offered for Sale, in capital positions, with good rooms. 3rd. Because the words of the Lord Jesus to His disciples were, "Hitherto ye have asked nothing in My Name; ask, and ye shall receive" (John xvi. 24); and again, "WHATSOEVER ye shall ask the Father in My Name He will give it you" (John xvi. 23).

The Lord has indeed blessed the Work here, which makes the workers bold to claim His promise, and ask those of His servants who have been given abundance of this world's riches to help in the good work.

It is calculated the amount needed will be about £4,500; which will secure the House, with some Furniture, and enable the start to be made free of debt. Any Donations will be most gratefully received and acknowledged, as well as further particulars given, by MARGARET M. LURY, Bellevue, Upper Redland, Bristol; or may be sent to MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

EDUCATION.—High-class School for Young Ladies.—Principal, Mrs. HALE, A.C.P., 1, Carlton-mansions, Clapham-rise, London, S.W.—Visiting masters, certificated governesses, and careful personal supervision with home comforts. Pupils prepared for any examination. Instruction made pleasant, and no overworking countenanced. French, German, Latin, drawing, class-singing, and drilling are included in the school fees, which are moderate. Highly recommended by parents of pupils, and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon. Prospectus and testimonials on application to Principal.

"Balham, May 29, 1880.

"I am very reluctant to recommend schools, because I am not always able to judge of the interior arrangements; but in this case I have the utmost pleasure in standing as reference. I can highly commend Mrs. Hale, and have the greatest confidence in her capacity, management, and character, having known her for several years."

C. H. SPURGEON.

MOIRA HOUSE LADIES' SCHOOL,

Principals: Miss CONNAH, Mr. and Mrs. INGHAM, late of Moira College, Bournemouth. References to well-known gentlemen and to parents of pupils. Prospectuses on application.

FINISHING SCHOOL for Gentlemen's Daughters. Refined, Christian home-life. Careful moral training. High-class instruction. French and German habitually spoken.—Miss ESSER, Rockfield, Lansdowne-road, East Croydon, Surrey.

OCKBROOK MORAVIAN LADIES' SCHOOL, established eighty years. Pupils successfully prepared for the public examinations. Particularly healthy situation. First term commenced January 18.—Apply for particulars to Miss OSBORNE, Ockbrook, Derby.

EXETER.—Rougemont School, 5, Bradninch-place, Principal, Miss WREFORD.—Pupils prepared for Oxford, Cambridge, and Trinity College Examinations. Careful Christian training. Home comforts. Terms moderate.

HOME SCHOOL, Derbyshire.—A Lady of experience receives twelve pupils. Religious teaching the first object. Refined habits and careful training. Advanced music. Foreign governess. House healthful; surrounded by charming scenery. Reference kindly permitted to Rev. C. Guest, Burton-on-Trent, and others.

B.; The Ferns, Duffield, Derby.

A LADY (Widow of an Officer), highly recommends an excellent School for the Daughters of Gentlemen, where her two daughters are completing their education. She can speak confidently and gratefully of the benefits they have received in mental culture, physical health, and sound Christian training, and will be gratified to reply to any parents seeking such information.—Mrs. H. C. C., care of Housekeeper, 13, Rose-street, Newgate-street, E.C.

MALVERN, FONTHILL HIGH-CLASS SCHOOL FOR GIRLS. Careful training and home comforts. Resident English and foreign governesses. Visiting professors. Vacancy for a student on half terms.—Principals, the Misses GREATER.

HELP! for the CAUSE of TRUTH and LOYALTY in IRELAND.

THE ISLAND AND COAST SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Established in the Year 1833.

FOR THE EDUCATION OF CHILDREN, AND PROMOTION OF SCRIPTURAL TRUTH IN REMOTE PARTS OF THE COAST AND ADJACENT ISLANDS.

Secretary: Rev. C. W. FLEURY, M.A., 30, Lower Sackville Street, Dublin.
Hon. Secretary for England: Rev. D. HOLDEN, Mickleham, Dorking, Surrey.

THE Committee of the above Society earnestly call the attention of the Christian public to its claims. Never in its long history were more urgent appeals pressing upon them for help for Scriptural schools in the remote and thinly-populated coasts and islands of Ireland. Local aid is all but gone through failure of rents and the existing agitation. The clergy in these parts, perplexed as to how to maintain their little "Forts of Truth" where children of the loyal and patient Protestant poor are instructed in the way of Life, earnestly look to this Society; and its Committee with a similar anxiety look to those whom God has blessed with peaceful homes and means to aid them in their work.

The following valuable testimonies come from prelates in whose dioceses the Society's schools are chiefly located:—

The Lord Bishop of Derry and Raphoe writes November 17, 1887:—

"The Island and Coast Society for Ireland has rendered true and valuable aid to poor and remote parts of the diocese of Raphoe, for which we are very grateful."

The Lord Bishop of Cork, at the last Annual Meeting, says:—

"In his own diocese fifteen schools were supported by this Society, and he was there that day to express what he felt, that the work of this Society had been of very great benefit and advantage to those distant and remote parishes."

Contributions will be most thankfully received by the Secretary or Hon. Secretary at the above addresses, or may be lodged in the Provincial Bank of Ireland, Dublin.

FREE DINNERS to HUNGRY CHILDREN.

SOUP KITCHEN (provides a good meal to 2,000 Poor weekly), RELIEF FUND, EVENING SHELTERS for BOYS and GIRLS (crowded every night), INFANT DAY NURSERY, TEMPERANCE and GOSPEL MEETINGS, and other Agencies.

FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY 12,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity. Hundreds of poor men have been gathered in, and their need supplied, while scores have been turned away, for want of room, in the most destitute condition.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; or Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the EDITORS OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

WINTER STORMS AT SEA.

Thousands of Fishermen are engaged all the year round in providing OUR TABLES with fish. These men, who FOR US hazard their lives and toil through furious blasts and sleety storm, may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy. THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS, carrying to the Fishermen the message of Divine mercy and love, affording relief in sickness, and cheering dull lives by their presence.

SALVATION ARMY on the CONTINENT.

FROM the Exeter Hall point of view at any rate there seems little declension in the popularity of the Army. The great auditorium was packed from end to end on Tuesday evening last week for the seventh anniversary of the work in France and Switzerland. The absence of the General and Mrs. Booth, in consequence of the illness of the latter, was much regretted, and there were various references to it in the course of the evening. Barring this, everything went merry as a marriage bell. Colonel Booth-Clibborn virtually presided, though his fragile-looking wife, the Maréchale, sat in the seat of honour, with that faithful friend of the Army, Mr. T. A. Denny, by her side.

The song and prayer of the evening were of the usual intense, realistic, and unconventional character. In his petition Colonel Clibborn told the Lord that he was "tired of religion without results," and entreated that much fruit might be given to their labours for the salvation of the people. Before giving an account of the past year's work, Colonel Clibborn said he was more and more convinced that the Christian religion to be successful must walk on two feet—doctrine and testimony. The Church must overcome by the blood of the Lamb and by the power of her testimony. There have been many difficulties in France and Switzerland in the course of the year. But he could say that the pulse of the Army in those countries beats to-day with a strong and healthy life. He spoke of many officers up and down the lands receiving only the necessaries of life and no salary, who are yet rejoicing in continual triumph. The tremendous persecution in Neuchatel has not cowed the spirit of the people, and a site has been secured in the city on which a hall is now building, much to the consternation of the authorities. They have done their best to upset the purchase, but the place is "so gloriously tied up" that it cannot be disturbed; and now, in a town from which they had been expelled for so long, they have a little piece of land from which they can expel anyone who may oppose. One encouraging feature of the work is the increase in the number of native officers, so that France and Switzerland will soon be evangelised, so far as the Army is concerned, by the people themselves. A splendid beginning has also been made in German Switzerland.

The MARÉCHALE said that during the past nine months rapid progress had been made everywhere, not only in numbers, but in spiritual power. Forty-three new corps and outposts had been opened; 102 cadets had passed through the Training Homes, and of these 95 are now officers. Divisional officers have been appointed, the better to apportion the work. A token of the confidence that the Army is gaining is found in the publication of a tractate describing the work in glowing terms by the editor of a Paris literary paper, La Vie Moderne. The work has grown, too, in official recognition on the part of the authorities in different towns. In a degraded part of the wicked town of Lyons, a most blessed work has been accomplished; lost women, infidels, and socialists have been saved. More and more the Army is making its way among Roman Catholics, and some of the Catholic women have received a remarkable baptism of love and devotion. A man who was a priest for two years has found salvation. The work is very hard and slow in some of the garrison towns, where vice is deplorably prevalent, but an impression is being made. In Paris there has hitherto been only one hall, but that has been resorted to in a wonderful way, and has been the scene of salvation to many from among the poorest of the poor. On one Sunday upwards of fifty testimonies were given by converts; some striking instances of thoroughgoing conversion were related by the Maréchale. One was that of an infidel journalist who came to the meetings to study the Salvationists "medically" as he thought them a little bit "touched." By and by he confessed his own misery, and found peace at the penitent-form. He is now a doorkeeper at the hall, and desires as an Army officer to devote his life to the God whom he formerly denied. The prospects of the work, said the Maréchale in closing, are grander than ever, and she appealed for generous help.

After the collection Mr. T. A. DENNY made a homely and hearty little speech. We used to think, he said, that it was impossible to convert a Frenchman. Now, what do we see? Two hundred and thirty-five thoroughly saved and sanctified native officers at work in France and Switzerland. Compare that with the records of any of our societies, and we must come to a very favourable conclusion respecting the work. When we think of the exhibition of so-called Christianity to which the French people have been accustomed, we cannot wonder at their deep aversion to religion. But a change is coming over them, and it is our privilege to take shares in such a glorious concern as this Salvation Army work. He was accustomed to judge things by results, and therefore he felt bound to stand by it.

In another brief address, the Maréchale said she had been able in the past months to visit thirty-five towns, and it would take the whole night to tell them the signs and wonders she had seen with her own eyes. A new rescue-work is about to be opened in Nismes and one in Geneva, as there is a terribly urgent need of such work. Extension is also proposed in Paris. A splendid hall in the centre of the city has been secured for head-quarters. In all the cantons of France and German Switzerland advances are contemplated.

Mdlle. Roussel, of Geneva, in charming French-English, told something of the triumphs of the Gospel in that city. Though the meeting was more subdued in tone than Army meetings usually have been, it was none the less full of genuine interest, and, to our thinking, far more enjoyable. Colonel Clibborn said they wanted at least £600 for the necessities of the work in view of its extension. Towards this Mr. Denny gave £100, Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard £25, and many other donations, larger or smaller, were announced from the platform.

THE GOSPEL IN BRITTANY.

ALTHOUGH Pasteur Lecoat meets with much opposition, his work in Brittany is bearing good fruit. Each forward step is contested by the priests of the Church of Rome, but it rarely happens that M. Lecoat has to retreat before them.

At St. Carré, however, retreat has been inevitable. In the church of St. Carré is installed what is really a Romish idol, known as "Our Lady of Pity." It is had in great reverence, and at certain times in the year thousands of pilgrims pay their adoration, and offer their more substantial gifts at her shrine. In defence of this idol the people have been taught the art of boycotting, and the missionary has been refused any longer the use of the preaching room. This station was one of the most hopeful of the smaller sub-stations.

All the other stations are progressing well. A colporteur-evangelist has been placed at Brest, where there is pressing need for a large preaching place. The completed Breton Bible is anxiously looked for by the Christian community; and the Société Evangélique of Geneva has again generously borne the expense of the production of the "Breton Almanac," both of which works are the product of Mr. Lecoat's arduous toil. The Religious Tract Society, too, has charged itself with the printing of his translation of Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," and also a number of useful publications in the Breton language.

SEDGLEY TEMPERANCE HOME MISSION.—The twenty-eighth annual report shows that a good work is still being done at Sedgley by F. A. Homer, Esq., J.P., who has now secured the services of an assistant.

MISS LEIGH'S WORK IN PARIS.

BY the kind permission of the Earl and Countess of Meath, a drawing-room meeting was held last week at 83, Lancaster-gate, Paddington, W., in aid of Miss Ada M. Leigh's work in Paris. H.R.H. the Princess Mary Adelaide, Duchess of Teck, President of the London committee, was present. Rev. C. J. Ridgeway, vicar of Christ Church, Lancaster-gate, presided, and spoke of a very pleasant visit he had paid to Miss Leigh's work in Paris, which he strongly commended.

Miss Leigh briefly described the Y.W.C.A. and Home at 26, Faubourg St. Honoré, where there has been much blessing, and where Bible-readings, &c., are held on Sunday and during the week. The Governesses and Artists' Institute and Home, 8, Rue Bastiat, where one of the resident lady artists has obtained the first prize for composition in art, and another medical student, an important position in a hospital in India; also the Homes, 77, Avenue Wagram, where last year 372 young women were received, and of whom over 200 had obtained situations through the free registry. Every effort is made to prevent young women coming to Paris, and out of over 240 applications only 33 have come to the Homes direct from England, the rest having been dissuaded from venturing upon ground so precarious as to the prospect of any remunerative employment.

The Homes are now associated with over eighty Continental chaplains or consuls in Europe; this is found to be of the greatest value to young women leaving Paris for other parts of Europe. There are now Homes in several of these cities, and applications have been made to Miss Leigh, asking her to spare some of her workers to superintend them. She will gladly communicate with any lady who is willing to be trained for this purpose. Although the work in Paris reaches hundreds of young women, its great aim is to win each individual for Christ.

Mr. J. D. Allcroft and Rev. G. P. Merrick addressed the meeting. Mr. Merrick spoke from experience of Miss Leigh's work. The children at the orphanage, he said, are well instructed in Bible knowledge. They are bright, intelligent, and happy, governed by wisdom and ruled by love. He spoke also of the Mission work among the English poor in Paris, and of its efficient character and blessed results. He knew cases of governesses saved in very distressing circumstances. Rev. N. J. Devereux and Mr. C. A. Roberts bore testimony from personal knowledge of the work that it was one done to the glory of God.

Miss Leigh explained that besides the heavy daily expenditure of the Homes, they were now building a third wall upon their property, of considerable length, which had been made obligatory by the French Government. All the property of the Mission Homes in Paris is held in perpetuity by the Association for the purpose for which it has been acquired.

MRS. WM. M. ROBERTSON, Trout Lake P.O., Ontario, Canada, wishes to thank those of our readers who have sent books, papers, and tracts to her since the death of her husband. She distributes them, and they are most welcome to many who have little change of scene, and during winter have few opportunities of getting to church.

PECKHAM AND EAST DULWICH VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.—This Society has fully justified its existence. It was formed in 1886, and from the first report, just published, it is clear that substantial good has been accomplished. A temporary shelter has been opened, and several women have availed themselves of its accommodation. The Society is emphatically vigilant, its members patrol the streets at night, visit low music-halls and other places of resort, and bring legal pressure to bear on landlords of such house property as is found to be in the hands of traffickers in immorality.

For the Young.

A STORY OF TRUST.

ONE day, on entering the parlour, I found two guests there. The one, our minister's wife, looked very excited and ill at ease; the other put up a face as bright, peaceful, and happy as anything—a striking contrast to the severe words I overheard spoken to her.

"Well, I must say, you are very proud indeed, and no humble Christian; not bending to the opinions of a lady who has seen much more of the world than you, and who is, besides, the wife of your minister!" To this the girl cheerfully replied, "Oh no, Madam, I do not think I am very proud, only I think dancing a sin, and I could not dance; what help then to me, even if you tell me that Luther found nothing wrong in dancing? I am responsible to my own conscience all the same."

This was my first introduction to Ingeborg, and my thoughts about her were: Whatever this girl be like, she is no coward, telling our minister's wife so frankly what her opinions are, and raising her standard in the very front of an adversary; for to all these views of Christianity, I knew from experience, she was an adversary, and a very active one too.

Then another day we met again. I came walking along, and there, sitting in a cariole, I saw a very pale-looking girl, scantily dressed, but with a face beautifully sweet and calm. Where had I seen that calm expression before? Oh, now I know; it is my friend from the parlour, the one who had given our minister's wife such an inner shock that I had myself to see her safe home, after several fits of crying and fainting on account of having been opposed in a dispute—in a dispute with a poor, uneducated village girl!

"Well, Ingeborg dear, how are you?"

"Thank you, Miss, I'm always happy, only the consumption will have its own way, I fear."

I was about departing from my dear, dear valley up in the mountains; it was my last morning there, and I could not help walking for the last time to the grave of my dear sister and friend. Little did I think that my Heavenly Father Himself was guiding my footsteps, and that I was to go to the churchyard that morning on behalf of his own child—his dear disciple, Ingeborg Myhre.

I was sitting pondering upon all the different questions of life and death, time and eternity, when my attention was drawn to somebody out in the road, running along the churchyard. "Why, indeed, Ingeborg, you here at this early hour?" "Well, Miss, I am just out repeating the lesson to depend solely on God, and on no human assistance. Somebody had promised to take me in his carriage free from charge to-day, as I am on my return to Christian friends in the capital again; but now, you see, he has not kept his word. Only, God will surely keep his promises, and they are that He shall never leave me nor forsake me."

"Dear Ingeborg, I am sure you shall be helped, only I pity you being so poor that you have got no money for the journey yourself. I wish I were rich, only for the sake of helping you. But, as I have met you this morning, would you kindly give me your address in Christiania?" "Certainly, and if ever you should like to get some lines from Ingeborg, I may ask yours in exchange?" "Very well." This act completed, we parted.

A few weeks had elapsed, and one fine morning I found myself sitting in a cosy room at the house of my much-esteemed Scotch friend, Mr. G——, listening to the roar and thunder of the mighty Atlantic, as it came booming and thundering against the rocks. It gave the peaceful little Scotch village a piece of its mind, and made the very brick buildings round the crescent look serious; it shook them as if to ascertain whether they could hold their foundations.

Well, I was sitting writing, when my friend suddenly asks, "What are you busy writing there?" I said, "Just a letter for a friend;" and then I turned my chair, and told him about poor Ingeborg: how we had met, and what a deep impression she had made on my mind, so that now I could not help writing to her, just to ask how she was getting on, and, by kind words, try to cast a ray of sunshine on her thorny path in life.

That day my friend posted my letter, and great was my joy and surprise when he told me he had enclosed a bank draft for £3.

I shall not, however, tire the patience of my readers by giving all particulars concerning Ingeborg's fate, and all the strange ways in which God made it plain to me that, come what may, his own child, Ingeborg, was to be helped at any cost.

I cannot help telling though, how, in the beginning of winter, the cold Norwegian winter, she was sitting one night quite alone on a stair, not knowing where to stay or whither to direct her steps. Her money was spent; she had been obliged to leave her lodgings, not being able to pay for them; she had no food, was ill, scantily dressed, and felt so cold—oh, so bitterly cold! Her few friends were poor, and could not assist her, and she did not think it right to beg her food and clothes. Then, sitting there on the step, she joined her hands in fervent prayer, and thus she put the matter before God:—"O my God, Thou seest me sitting here alone and desolate, with no shelter and no refuge to go to. Thou knowest that I am thine own child, and Thou knowest that I am a human being, and that I must needs have all these things if Thou wantest me to live. Then, O God, I ask help, and assistance, and strength from Thee; but if not bodily help, then I ask a speedy death, and that Thou wouldst kindly take me as soon as possible."

I shall not try to picture out how that night was spent, but early the next morning, Ingeborg happening to look in at her former lodging, she found that a letter had arrived for her containing £5, God showing her thus that even before she asked Him He had given. I need hardly tell that this time, too, Mr. G—— was the instrument used in the hand of the Lord.

When Ingeborg got the letter she wept joyful tears of thankfulness, and she poured out her heart to God in thanks and praise; and then she wrote a letter telling the simple facts of how wonderfully she had been helped just at the time of utter distress, and how God had dealt with her like the tenderest father.

That winter Ingeborg got very ill, and was at the verge of eternity, but her letters were glowing with joy and praise in the midst of pains and trials. It was indeed strange to notice how God always cleared the way for her, and led her onward in the light of his own presence. Not one among a thousand of poor ones ever experienced such wonderful direct assistance from above; but I am sorry to add, not one among a thousand of them ever prayed to God and actually wrestled with Him like Ingeborg did, or else I venture to say they might have had the same chance of being helped. She was a true child of God, and her life illustrated her faith.

I remember she told me once how she had been tempted to listen to the splendid future views held before her by a worldly gentleman of wealth and possession, who wanted to marry her on account of her beauty. Yes, indeed, she might have been a lady of wealth and rank in life; but she knew too well that it would be at the cost of her peace of heart, and so she got strength from the Lord to refuse, and be content to be poor, lonely, and desolate, rather than entangling her own soul in unknown dangers of worldly temptations.

She went on her way in life quietly, and always happy in her low situation, as servant in a family whose income was very scanty, yea, so scanty that Ingeborg used to add from her own little purse what more there was needed when she was sent to market, and had not money enough from her mistress. Dear, kind Ingeborg! She never told what she had done, but God surely kept it in mind, and in due time she got her reward, even here on earth.

For more than two years Ingeborg was not able to do anything to support herself, the consumption having gradually taken away all her strength, and for the most part confined her to her bed. At first the thought of being cast thus directly on the mercies of other people brought her exceedingly low, and she wrestled with God that He should Himself undertake the task, and open a door to her, and—how can I tell how wonderfully it was opened, how safely and carefully she was guided on during those two long years of sufferings and trials?

The address given to me that morning showed itself to be the first step laid by God Himself in order to help Ingeborg out of all perplexities and cares which poverty always liberally offers its subjects, and under the weight of which even Christians sometimes are in danger of being crushed.

As I have told, Ingeborg was downhearted about her poor state of health and her entire want of means to support herself; but now, as before, she told all the heavy secrets of her heart to God, and the answer was not long in coming.

I got a letter from Mr. G—— in which he told me how Ingeborg's fate was weighing heavily on his heart, and that he felt it a message from God to him to assist her with all his power, and that he wished me to go and tell her that from this hour henceforward she should never be in want of house, nor food and clothes, nor medicine, for all that was needed he should supply; he should feel most happy in doing so, as he felt that she was a true child of God, and, looking upon her as a dear sister in Christ Jesus, he could not bear to think of her suffering any pains from want of the necessaries of life.

I need hardly tell that this letter brought tears of thankfulness and joy to my eyes, nor that Ingeborg was quite overcome with emotion when I translated the letter to her. Fancy a poor Norwegian girl among the crowds of poor ones in Christiania being picked out by a Scotch gentleman, helped on like a sister for years, and getting letters of help and comfort in a language she did not understand a syllable of, from a friend whose face she had never seen!

Ah! her lot was a happy one indeed—to see the Word of God so literally fulfilled in her own experience. May we all be able to discern his leading hand in whatever befalls us in life!

Dear Ingeborg has gone home now, and she left like a happy girl leaving school for the "jolly holidays." She trusted her Friend and Saviour to the last, and, dying, she pressed her hand against her heart, and said, "Oh what a happiness I feel here!"

It was on May 10, 1887, at half-past four in the morning, that the message came for her. How empty and bare her cozy room looked as I saw it for the last time! The clean, white curtains waving their last farewell through the open windows; the sweet flowers that had been such a source of joy to her bending their little heads with sadness from want of their usual supply of water; the books on the shelves dusty and neglected!.....

But what a sweet contrast up at the chapel, where the earthly remains had found a temporary and sanctified resting-place — within the boundaries of peace and stillness. No sound to be heard except the cheerful twitterings of the feathered inhabitants of the cemetery trees; no traces left of human strife and busy work. Ingeborg herself, with the wreath of myrtle in her jet black hair, resting peacefully among roses and hyacinths, the very image of peace eternal, illustrating in death as in life the precious promise: "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Children's Special Service Mission.

FOREIGN BRANCH.

Dear Sir,—Last April our Committee issued an appeal for £2000 to enable them to print three millions more of the illustrated children's tracts in fifty languages. Of this we have only received £1150, and it seems a sad pity that we should not complete this much-needed collection. In our own highly favoured land, the children are so bountifully supplied with excellent magazines, little books, and Gospel tracts; but all this is reversed as regards other countries, where by far the larger portion of children have never received a tract in their lives, and the others have only received perhaps one or two.

The deep need of these two hundred millions of children presses upon us as a heavy burden, and it is high time that the Church of Christ rolled away the reproach of their bitter though unconscious cry, "No man careth for my soul." The children are learning to read nearly all the world over, but the question is, What shall they read? What is provided for them to read? Shall infidels pour their pernicious literature into these lands? and will not Christians provide us with the means of scattering broadcast our beautiful picture leaflets, which tell so simply and plainly of the Saviour's love to the little ones?

These children's tracts are now actually printed in forty-three languages, and the translations are far advanced in several others, but to keep up the supply in so many languages and to print them in fresh ones, requires a much larger income than is at present entrusted to us. Our plan of distribution is very simple and inexpensive. We give the tracts quite free of charge to the missionaries of all the different societies, and by thus utilising existing agencies a great saving is effected. The Lord has greatly owned the circulation of these messengers of salvation, and the testimonies received from various parts of the world are most encouraging, but the cry is for a larger supply.

We have issued a series in Lettish, for the poor children in Livonia and Courland, North Russia; and the Russian will shortly be ready. The Tahitian are now being printed, and several translations are made into Samoan. The Roumanian and Ruthenian are also printed. Dr. Baedeker has asked us to issue them in Armenian, Tartar, and Turkish.

We have printed a new series in Arabic, and have sent 5000 of them to the Kabyle Mission, and 6000 to the American Mission to Egypt, and smaller numbers to other workers. We have fifty-six different tracts in German, but our stock is exceedingly low. Our tracts are issued in thirteen of the principal languages of India.

May the Lord incline the hearts of his people to take a deep and practical interest in this work.—Faithfully yours, Josiah Spiers.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, Walworth-road Baptist Schools, March 5—9, at 7; Watford, March 17; Liverpool, April 8—12. Mr. Josiah Spiers, Presbyterian Church, Haverstock-hill, March 4—16, at 7. Mr. Pericles Green, Abergavenny, March 13—16. Mr. Martin J. Hall, Harvey-street Mission Hall, Hoxton, March 4—11, at 7.45; Trinity Hall, Steward's-road, Battersea, March 12—16, at 6.30; Stockwell Orphanage, March 26—29. Mr. George Bannister, Anvil-street, Bristol, March 11—18. Rev. E. A. Stuart, M.A., President of Mission, Town Hall, Bromley, Kent, March 15, at 8.30.

FRENCH IN LONDON.

Mr. Weylland writes to us as follows, with respect to missions to French residents in London:—

To Christians who feel that in its spiritual sense there should be "one manner of law, as well for the stranger as for one of our own country" (Lev. xxiv. 22), it must be a satisfaction to know that to residents and visitors from France, our neighbour, "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus" is made known with its fulness of blessings. In Soho, where our Gallic friends most do congregate, the London City Mission has for many years past been actively at work. Their centre is the Maison des Etrangers, 6, Frith-street, around which is la petite France. The shops are called boutiques, a baker writes up his name as boulanger, and a shoemaker as bottier, while such papers as L'International are sold in the streets. Though a Communist colony, men and women of every social grade are there, from the reduced count to convicts from New Caledonia. There are also a number of well-to-do artisans, and many who are wretchedly poor.

Years of earnest plodding from house to house—a continuous expression of Christian regard has won the hearts of the people, and now their missionary is popular with them all. Utterly ignorant of the Bible, atheistic or superstitious, it was hard to make headway among them, but a certain success has been granted. At one time there was not a Bible in the whole colony, now there is scarcely a family without one. The meetings are usually crowded. These consist of Une Union Populaire on Sunday afternoons, and in the evening a Réunion des Chrétiens, at which converts study the Scriptures and unite in praise and prayer. On Mondays, at 2.30, a Réunion des Dames—a mothers' meeting—of forty members is conducted by two English ladies, and on Thursday evening Une Réunion Evangélique for Gospel addresses and singing of revival hymns. After each meeting library books are lent, a large number, chiefly of a religious character, being in demand. The result is the spiritual enlightment of this "France in London." The salvation of souls and the protection of our own people from the moral corruption of Paris and from atheism and "red" communist opinions.

In the far East spiritual care is exercised over a large number of French seamen and others. Many ships are visited, the Scriptures read with expositions, and Testaments given. Many are indifferent, infidel, or Roman Catholic, but the missionary, as a rule, is well received. One line entirely French, running to Marseilles, is visited every week. The crew of forty to forty-five men, with captains and officers, are each instructed in saving truth. Officers have taken the visitor down to the mess-room that he might hold a meeting among the crew. The cooks call their ships "sea-water hotels," and, as they can rarely go on shore, they are grateful for the visits and the Word. In the restaurants of Ratcliff-highway, at their lodgings, and at the Sailors' Rest, many other seamen are brought under teaching, while many Frenchmen of various trades, and others of bad character, are met with. For instance, several men were engaged for four months with a patent process for restoring stone upon the church of the clergyman who superintends the missionary. They were instructed in the truth that saves, and upon their return to Paris took Bibles for their families, and they now attend Mr. McAll's meetings.

Signs which follow the efforts of this Mission prove that the old religion established by our Lord and his Apostles is "the power of God" among the French. They rejoice in freedom from ceremonies and priestly claims, which they only know to hate. There are disappointments and failures, but also encouragements. One of our converts, a clever mechanic, intends to devote his life to Gospel service, and one, a matron, devotes much of her time in evangelising among her countrywomen who discredit our streets. We, therefore, ask the prayerful aid and support of fellow-Christians that this testimony of Jesus may be sustained and increased.

LETTERS FROM INDIA.

Rev. James Smith, Principal of the American Board's College at Ahmednagar, near Bombay, writes on February 9:—During the past month we have had cheering words from Rev. G. C. Grubb and Colonel Oldham. Twice a day for a week they held meetings for native Christians and heathen educated natives in the hall of our Institution here. Our Christian people were cheered and quickened to a more earnest and spiritual life, and many of the heathen were deeply impressed, though I have heard of no conversions among the latter. Last Sabbath again we had powerful addresses from two distinguished American pastors and authors who are on a tour visiting Christian missions.

While thus we are cheered by these strangers and stimulated to greater endeavours, we have to mourn the loss of the prince of missionaries, the saintly George Bowen, of Bombay. He was an apostolic man in every particular—an imitator of Paul in the letter and in the spirit. His humility and self-denial ever and always will be a rebuke to Christian and heathen. He went peacefully to his reward on Sunday morning, Feb. 5.

In a letter, dated Jan. 31, to the lady who forwards to him weekly a copy of The Christian, Rev. T. E. F. Morton, of the American Methodist Episcopal Mission, Mhow, Central India, says:—

In the month of March last we organised our Vernacular Mission. Our native city is visited several times during the week, when hundreds of Parsees, Mohammedans, and Hindus of all castes and sects hear the Gospel of Christ. A building for preaching, day and Sunday-school purposes in a most prominent part of the city, where great crowds could be reached, has been secured. Two vernacular day-schools and eight Sunday-schools have been organised in different parts of the cantonment, where there is an attendance of nearly three hundred children. On Sabbath days we have a most interesting service for beggars at 12 noon, at the close of which financial aid is given to the attendants.

We have on our staff of workers three native preachers and two Hindu schoolmasters, besides others. The work is opening up grandly. It is our desire to organise schools for native girls, and to have the zenanas visited, but at present funds will not permit. Our English work is conducted on the self-supporting principle, and our vernacular on that of the grant-in-aid. The work of our Lord Jesus Christ is truly going forward in this land. May the time soon come when India's millions shall "crown Him Lord of all."

MR. DENHAM SMITH.—We regret we are unable to report any improvement in Mr. Denham Smith's condition. The prostration that characterises his illness is this week more pronounced than for some time past.

SUNDAY OBSERVANCE IN EAST LONDON.—Up to March 2, 11,668 persons had joined the "People's League, to Oppose the Sunday Opening of the People's Palace." The great bulk of those joining give their trades, and in most cases their age. Out of 300 of the forms filled up, 148 different trades and occupations are mentioned. Nearly all of those signing the protest reside in the Tower Hamlets, and within a walk of the Palace. The trades include every class of workmen and working women.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. F. W. Macdonald, Handsworth College, Birmingham.

We ask the special attention of our London readers to the addresses to be given in different parts of the Metropolis, beginning at Exeter Hall next week, on the fundamental truths of the Christian faith. The programme will be found on a succeeding page.

The Echo has a pungent article on the working of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, showing the appalling crimes which are constantly taking place, and the unwillingness of some police magistrates to give effect to the Act. It says, "At least three are notoriously unwilling to act; hereafter we may have to mention their names."

It is surmised now that Mr. H. M. Stanley's mission was not simply to relieve Emin Pasha, but to co-operate with that European chief in following up and completing the work that lay so near the heart of the late General Gordon—the tapping, at its source, of the slave trade supply. If Mr. Stanley can succeed in healing this "open sore" of the African Continent, he will cover his name and memory with lasting honour.

The Contemporary Review has two articles of considerable interest relative to the United States. The first is "Europe versus the United States," by G. T. Bettany, who applies the Darwinian theory of "the survival of the fittest" to the balance of power, not now as between the European nations, as between Europe and America. His forecast is a far-reaching one, and anticipates the supremacy in the world of the American Union, unless counterbalanced by a confederation of Great Britain and her Colonies.

The other article is by George W. Cable, on "The Negro Question in the United States," and shows the injustice, the impolicy, and the danger of the present exclusive and oppressive attitude of the white population toward the freedmen. It is an able and exhaustive paper, and its recommendations morally, socially, and politically, are sound and wise; but the key of the situation lies, we believe, in the Christian Church. As long as ministers and churches treat Christ with contempt in the persons of their coloured brethren, it cannot be expected that others will treat them righteously. At all events the present attitude of Christians in the Southern States is inexcusable, and will bring a costly retribution on themselves and their country.

We have before us The Universe of March 3, containing a full report of Cardinal Manning's sermon on Sunday week, to which we referred in our last issue. This report is so different from the briefer account given in The Pall Mall Gazette, on which we commented, that we feel our evening contemporary has misled its readers in supplying such an incorrect version. Seeing that the sermon, as given in The Universe, blankly teaches baptismal regeneration, "the sacrament of penance," and priestly absolution, it passes our comprehension how The Pall Mall reporter could take upon himself to say that the Cardinal "abandoned the elaborate Catholic theology." We leave it to our contemporary to explain or defend this method of reporting as best it may.

In reply to the inquiries of various friends, we wish to say that Mr. Sankey left England in December last, with the intention of returning in the approaching summer to conduct meetings in this country. When any definite arrangements have been made we will inform our readers to that effect.

The High Church party protest against their movement being considered as a feeder of Rome. The Romanists themselves, however, think otherwise. Speaking recently at Preston, the R. C. Bishop of Salford, Dr. Vaughan, said:—

> The Protestant Church of England has lent herself unwittingly, but truly and efficiently, to the service of the Catholic Church. There has been going on a disintegration and separation of the good from the bad, of the true from the false, and the human from the Divine. This showed itself in a remarkable manner in the rise and development of what was called the Tractarian Movement, during which over one thousand most learned, most conscientious, and most self-denying ministers and other members of the Protestant Church, after availing themselves of the liberty of that heresy, which was part of their system to examine all things and test all things for themselves, joined the Catholic Church, satisfied that that Church must be Catholic as to time, doctrine, and place. Then there arose what was commonly called the Ritualistic Movement. A few years ago the Anglican Bishops, with one or two exceptions, were shocked by the departure of the Ritualists, and the Legislature was again and again invoked to put down the Romanising tendencies. Still the practices have gone on; churches in which Ritualism is adopted are arising all over the land, under the jurisdiction of Anglican bishops, until Catholics can scarcely distinguish between such places and the churches belonging to their own communion.

And in reference to the recent erection of the reredos in St. Paul's Cathedral, Dr. Vaughan said:—

> Even the great Cathedral of St. Paul in London is being turned to resemble more a Catholic church than anything else; a magnificent altar and reredos have been erected, which could not have been more effectively designed by an architect in Rome, so perfect are the outlines and decorations. It is now only necessary to provide the relics of the saints and secure the blessing of the Catholic Church in order to celebrate High Mass.

This is a pretty substantial straw to indicate the flow of the stream.

On the subject of popular entertainments and the attitude of Christians in regard to them, a correspondent writes from Scotland:—

> In our part of the country we have lately been hearing much of the "success" of what is called "Kinderspiel." But is it a success after all? Let Christian parents answer the question. Has the physical excitement no injurious effects upon the tender frame? Is the moral tone of the children's future life in no danger of being influenced? Supposing that a few years hence we find that some of these children have chosen the stage as their profession in life, shall we blame?—shall we even wonder? The dazzle of a brightly lighted hall, the pretty dress, the consciousness of being admired, the loud applause—have they nothing to captivate the young heart?

These questions should be considered by all thoughtful Christians, so that they may have not only rules for their own conduct, but counsel for those persons who do not see what may result from such training of the young. How "wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked" must that church be which falls back on juvenile theatrical performances for the support of its ministrations?

In the Lower House of the Convocation of Canterbury a debate took place last week, during which the urgent need of an increase of clergy was dwelt upon, while, on the other hand, there was lamentation as to the insufficient means to support them. It seems extraordinary that, in the presence of these two facts, a motion to set apart qualified laymen, who might be willing to aid the clergy as deacons, was rejected by a large majority. It is very difficult to reconcile this action with the teaching of the Acts of the Apostles. The destitution of parochial clergy will go on, and the fact will force itself on attention, that few things could better serve the age, or the Established Church, than the visits among the people of qualified lay workers. The age thinks less of officialism than do many members of Convocation.

The question of questions which is, in God's providence, coming to the front, and imperatively demanding attention, is that which relates to the condition of the people. Our so-called Christian society has allowed social temptations to appeal to the poor on all sides, and has so shamefully neglected the most obvious sanitary precautions in their case, as very much to have made them what they are. It is gratifying to observe that The Nineteenth Century for March has three articles on the subject; and it is equally so that the Government has agreed to appoint a Special Committee to deal with one branch of it. An accurate picture of the hours the people work in the tailoring trade, and the places in which they work, is needed. But this is needed also, that Christian professors should no longer, like the priest and Levite in the parable, pass by on the other side.

In the same review there is an article by Mr. Courtney, M.P., on "The Swarming of Men." He shows that, as by a natural law, there is everywhere a force at work which drives people for livelihood into towns or foreign countries. We cannot oppose this force. But Christians ought to have something to say in relation to guiding it. The whole matter of town immigration and invasion by foreigners is grave and full of difficulty. Others places feel it as well as London. Mr. Arnold White's paper, also in The Nineteenth Century, is a valuable contribution. Out of thought, discussion, and prayer, a solution may come

Whilst sympathising with the present widespread distress and welcoming all practical Christian efforts for its relief, it is well to bear in mind that much of it is preventable. The Archbishop of Canterbury did good service the other day by his condemnation of reckless early marriages. The common result of this thoughtless and improvident habit is that a numerous family grow up to be a prey upon public or private charity, or to drift into the criminal ranks. Moreover, it is from the offspring of such marriages that our lunatic asylums are largely recruited. Has not a mistaken silence on this subject unwittingly countenanced the evil which is deplored? In Switzerland no young peasant is allowed to marry without proof that he is able to maintain a wife. Such a proviso, however, is impossible in England: with us the remedy must be sought in the inculcation among the working-classes of habits of temperance, self-restraint, and prudence, and higher views of the sanctity of marriage.

A gentleman (who does not wish his name mentioned), after reading "Nor'ard of the Dogger," has paid £1000 to the credit of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen to pay off one of the existing mortgages, thus leaving a balance of £1000 only to be raised finally to expunge the item of "mortgages" from the M.D.S.F. accounts. Two years ago the debt was £10,000.

No stone is being left unturned to bring about, if possible, the restoration of Roman Catholic supremacy in this country. This is indicated by the appearance of the first volume of a work undertaken by command of the Pope, and entitled "Henry VIII. and the English Monasteries." Though historically interesting, it is really a very heavily marked brief for monastic institutions, in which the author blackens the character of those responsible for their suppression, and, by the substitution of the ideal for the real, casts a fictitious charm over one of the worst features of the Romish system. That there were monks and nuns who lived good lives is not denied; but these occasional gleams of light served only to intensify the surrounding darkness. The verdict of the contemporary records upon the monastic orders and houses has, we would fain hope, been too emphatically endorsed by centuries of national abhorrence of such institutions to be shaken by volumes of special pleading, such as that of "Father" Gasquet. Nevertheless, a word of warning as to the true import of this book cannot be out of place.

It is hoped that the mass of details which will doubtless be collected by the proposed Select Committee on the "sweating system" will not be left to accumulate cobwebs in official pigeon-holes, but will form the basis of an adequate measure of redress. The main facts (which, however, Dr. Herman Adler considers greatly exaggerated) have been made sufficiently familiar by the reports of Mr. Burnett and others, and by the revelations made from time to time in the Press: in the cramped and crowded "sweating dens" of East London, surrounded by filth and squalor, upwards of 20,000 people, of whom nineteen-twentieths are German and Russian Jews, are toiling from fourteen to eighteen hours a day for wages barely above starvation level. Is not this broad statement sufficient to indicate the main lines upon which any effective reform must run? viz., first, the Factory Acts should be extended, and the powers which they already confer should be more vigorously applied; secondly, some effectual check should be placed upon the wholesale immigration of foreign paupers, who flood the cheap labour market, burden the poor rates, and increase the distress of our own workers without bettering themselves.

In a recent lecture on "Life in Australia," Lord Brassey gave some encouraging particulars as to the rates of wages and openings for work in that colony. It appears that on the Western Australian railways all classes of workmen may earn ten shillings a day; in other branches of labour, from ten to twelve shillings per day of eight hours is the rate. An able seaman in the ports can earn six pounds a month, and the wages of domestic servants are far beyond those paid in Europe. Now that emigration is forcing itself to the front as a possible means of restoring the balance between population and employment, these figures are worth noting; but it cannot be too plainly pointed out that only real, honest, persevering work, and steadiness of character, will command these wages: the incompetent and the thriftless are not wanted in Australia, and will fare no better there than in England.

It is with great regret that we hear of the proposal on the part of the United Presbyterians to withdraw from mission work in Spain. Their work has been solid if slow. A Christian worker engaged in another mission in Madrid recently expressed to us a very strong desire that they should continue the good work there, leaving results with God. The impression which a recent visit to that city left upon our minds, of the Presbyterian mission there, was not that it was a failure by any means. We hope that the "lack of result" which is the reason given for withdrawal will call forth more active energy, and not cause withdrawal.

In the great meeting held recently to celebrate the release of Messrs. Graham and Burns, the chairman, Mr. Michael Davitt, enumerated several points on which he advised his audience to insist. Amongst others was "the administration of relief in a more Christian method." This is not the time or place to deal with the abuses or mistakes by which this demand was suggested. We simply note it, as an interesting indication of the respect with which the great mass of the working classes still regard genuine religion; and as a confession that the Christian Church alone possesses the power to deal with the mass of misery and need which mainly lies at the root of the discontent and socialism of the present day. The memory of the first age of Christian history, and of many a succeeding age, lingers in men's hearts as an inspiration; suggesting the only mode of cure for the evils of the state.

At the same time, it becomes us to bear in mind, that our primary object is not philanthropy. Certainly the care of man is one of the glorious results of the teaching of Jesus Christ, which has sown Christendom with hospitals and institutions for the relief of suffering. The sentiment which when first enunciated was received with rapturous applause, "I am a man, and nothing human is uninteresting to me," is now one of the common-places of our religion, made so by our Lord, "who went about doing good," leaving us an example that we should follow his steps. But we shall miss our mark, if we confine our attention to this necessary ministry, and rest satisfied with nought beyond. Our true province is not the body, but the spiritual nature of man. We must make all else subservient to the great inner revolution, which alone can really change him. If we fail here, much of our philanthropic work will be disappointing and abortive. If we succeed, we shall effect much in the lower sphere also, for godliness has an aspect and a promise for this life also; and the converted man soon begins to level-up in the social scale.

It is becoming a very serious question, as to whether it is not the duty of the Christian Church (i.e., of individual Christians) to strip off some of the superfluities which are now paralysing its movements, rendering it as unlike to the Master, and as like to the world, as possible. Christians cling to their money with the same tenacity, adorn their persons with the same ornaments, crowd their houses and tables with the same lavish expenditure, as men of the world. Their carriages are as well-appointed, and their style as extravagant, as those who may be excused for concentrating their whole attention upon the present life. We profess to be pilgrims, and yet we do not cultivate the tent-life as pilgrims should. It is certainly wrong. We have no right to spend so much on ourselves when our Master's affairs are languishing for money. We are not only hiding the talent, we are squandering it on ourselves; and it cannot fail to go hard with us some day. What right have we to spend on ourselves, that which was entrusted to us as a sacred deposit to be administered for Christ's sake?

One great need of the present day is systematic giving, arising out of the systematic devotion of a fixed proportion of every sovereign to the cause of God. The ideal way is to count all as God's, and to administer it for Him, reserving enough only to bring up children, and to occupy the position to which we have been called. But many professing to adopt this system give less than the old patriarchs, who, in the grey dawn of religious light, were satisfied with nothing less than a tenth. It is, therefore, necessary to educate people into the higher, by beginning with the lower, and insisting that all Christians should set apart a certain proportion of their income for the cause of God, just as they set apart a certain sum for living or house-rent. Then there would be no need for bazaars and entertainments, and the constant pressure of debt on so many of our noblest institutions.

It is not a moment too soon that a memorial has been presented to the Upper House of Convocation, calling attention to the great increase of Sunday desecration amongst "the upper classes." What right have they to disregard the sanctions of that day, demanding toil from those who must minister to their pleasures in some form or another, when they have the whole week in which to indulge their fancies? Even if they have thrown off the restraints of religion, the nation has a claim on its leading men, that they should maintain the rest of the English Sunday for the physical well-being of the people. We cannot work hard all the week at business, and on Sunday at pleasure. There must be a pause between the systole and the diastole of the national heart, else there will come sudden disaster upon our national vigour and health, together with the curse of Nature on those who break natural law; and what is Nature but God? The institution of one day's rest in seven is not only of spiritual but of physical necessity.

We are thankful that Convocation passed several resolutions bearing upon the disgraceful opium traffic with China, and also in regard to the introduction of Indian opium into the recently annexed district of Upper Burmah. We heartily join in the hope expressed by Archdeacon Norris, that the committee originally appointed to consider the opium question will "still be enabled to act as a sort of vigilance committee for watching the conduct of the Government in this matter."

We learn with very much sorrow, just as we are going to press, that our dear friend and brother, Mr. George Brealey, of Clayhidon, so well known in connection with the Blackdown Hills Mission, died of apoplexy on Tuesday at Weston-super-Mare. Particulars will be given next week.

PROTESTANT COMMEMORATIONS.

One of the doughtiest champions of the Reformed faith in London is Rev. Dr. Samuel Wainwright, whose phenomenal gifts of straight and satirical speech have found scope many a year on many a Protestant platform. His powerful advocacy has been secured by the Protestant Educational Institute for the delivery at Exeter Hall of four lectures in connection with the Bi- and Ter-centenary Commemorations of the present year. The first of these, on the Spanish Armada of 1588, was given last Monday evening before a large and enthusiastic company, presided over by Sir William Willis.

Dr. Wainwright began his oration by a reference to the death of "bloody Queen Mary," the fruits of whose reign were "the stake and the fire," according to Dickens's Child's History of England, which the lecturer took occasion to commend. The "long, horrible nightmare" of Mary's reign was described in a few ringing and brief sentences, and then the popular rejoicings at Queen Elizabeth's accession. Incidentally he said that every reign or Government in this country that has favoured Popery has been one marked by national disaster. The night of gloom instantly passed away when Elizabeth came to the throne—prisons opened, martyr fires extinguished, the yoke of Popish bigotry removed, and commercial prosperity restored. In speaking of the line of Popes in that day, Dr. Wainwright broadly hinted that the frequent changes in the occupancy of the Papal Chair was due to the action of the Jesuits, who had a way of getting rid of those who were not sufficiently subservient to them. Another "aside" that brought down the house was a reference to the "sinuous, subtle, secret, and stealthy ways of Convocation," which, said the Doctor, require to be carefully watched. The Jesuits, he described, as "the sappers and miners" who have gone so far in London that it is now with the greatest difficulty you can get a thoroughly Protestant book issued by any of the great publishers. One of the great religious publishing societies lately published a book, in which the idea of Jesuitical plots was laughed at, but the book, owing to remonstrances, had to be withdrawn from publication. The most dangerous thing about the Jesuits is that we know not what they are doing, or where they are doing it. Dr. Wainwright asserted that there is not a single leading secular London journal that is not, more or less, under papal influence, in dealing with questions of Protestant truth. It is with the utmost difficulty that a speech in Parliament, of a strongly Protestant kind, can be fairly and truthfully reported.

After tracing the course of events in the Parliament at that time, in opposing Popish intrigues, in view of the Massacre of Bartholomew, the assassination in Holland of "William the Silent," and conspiracies in this country, Dr. Wainwright passed on to the preparations made in Spain for the Armada, through which Philip II. hoped to extinguish Protestant heresy from the world. This king was gluttonous of power and of blood; the Armada even was a mere bagatelle to what he did in the Netherlands. The entire seaboard of Spain was turned into one scene of busy activity, in building and provisioning of the great fleet of 150 vessels, carrying 8000 sailors, 20,000 soldiers, besides volunteers, with many pieces of gunnery. The English navy proper of that day consisted of twenty-eight sail, whose total tonnage did not exceed that of one modern ocean-going steamer. The utmost secrecy was observed in these Spanish preparations, and every English suspicion was lulled. The Queen did not see fit to sanction adequate defensive measures. Another fleet was to come from Flanders, to co-operate with that sailing from the Tagus. This second Armada also carried large contingents of troops, and it was believed that England's last hour had come. Meantime the Pope had absolved all who might revolt against Queen Elizabeth, and had handed over the nation to King Philip. As to opposing forces, England was miserably poor by way of contrast with Spain, but the people were stout of heart, and the Queen, by her action, encouraged her troops. A disaster by shipwreck at Cape Finistere destroyed some of the ships and delayed the fleet for three weeks. The stirring lines of Macaulay's "fragment," in which he describes the preparations throughout England, were effectively given by the lecturer, amid the hush of the audience, which broke into rapturous plaudits as he concluded the thrilling recital.

The encounters between the opposing forces, the defeat, flight, and subsequent shipwreck of the Spanish fleet on the coasts of Norway, Scotland, and Ireland, were graphically described. In some closing words the results were told—as to Spain, confusion and disgrace; as to England, triumph and thanksgiving to God for so great a deliverance.

The lecture on Monday next is on "The Seven Bishops in the Tower," and it is anticipated that an adjournment to the large hall may be found necessary.

NOTES FROM THE NORTH.

U.P. MISSIONARY WORK.

On Wednesday evening, last week, a remarkable missionary meeting was held at Alloa to advocate the claims of the United Presbyterian missionary work. Rev. John Trail, for seventeen years a devoted labourer in Rajpootana, stated that the entire field of his district was taken up by the missionaries of the Church. They had ten mission stations, seventeen missionaries, ten Zenana ladies, nearly forty native assistants, 1000 members, and 5000 children in their Sunday-schools in that province. The membership had been trebled within the past twenty years. Rev. J. Buchanan, foreign mission secretary, said two of the missionaries now labouring in Spain had been priests. One of them was at one time a very distinguished preacher among the Jesuits, in fact the most popular pulpit orator of the order, but was now contentedly preaching to their little Christian congregation in Madrid. Mr. Buchanan also pointed out the promising nature of the Mission in Japan. As the total missionary statistics of the U.P. Church the following figures were quoted:—112 missionaries, between 400 and 500 native evangelists, 87 regularly formed congregations, 18,000 members in full communion, and nearly 12,000 children in the Sabbath schools.

Y.M.C. AND FELLOWSHIP ASSOCIATIONS.

In Scotland the Y.M.C.A. is cordially welcomed by the churches as an invaluable auxiliary in Christian work. The annual meeting of the Alloa Y.M.C.A. furnished an admirable illustration of this. Ministers of all the denominations took part, and many words of hearty approval were spoken. Mr. Henderson Smith, travelling secretary of the Scottish Y.M.C.A., urged all the members to do their part by bringing in young men, which would give them a zest for the work that nothing else could.

A VILLAGE WITHOUT A POLICEMAN.

For twenty years past the little Sutherlandshire village of Rogart has been without a policeman, and the normal condition of the district is one of almost absolute immunity from crime. When it is stated that Rogart has no public-house, the reason for this satisfactory condition will become apparent. Last week, however, for some unaccountable reason, a policeman was intruded upon the peaceful and sober villagers, who have justifiably resolved to petition the Secretary for Scotland to remove him again.

INVERNESS Y.W.C.A.—The members of the Y.W.C.A. held their annual meeting in the new hall in Bank-street, last week. The report drawn up by the secretary, Mrs. Black, showed that the membership and work of the Association are increasing. The Bible-class on Sabbath afternoon has an attendance of between ninety and a hundred; and the meetings held on other days have also increased in number. A branch of the Association is carried on in Davis-square, and another in the Merkinch; and the attendance at the classes at both places is very gratifying.

TRAVELLERS' AID.

Sir,—Seeing in your issue of Feb. 24, in "Notes and Comments," the paragraph respecting the dangers to which the inexperienced country girls are exposed who flock to our cities in search of employment, I am led to ask for space to bring before the notice of your numerous readers the "Travellers' Aid" Society, which has been quietly at work for over two years endeavouring to counteract the very evils you refer to. Indeed, the Refuge you mention at Bristol is, I believe, one of the many agencies affiliated with this Society. It is not advisable, for obvious reasons, to publish the modes by which the Society's agents frustrate the machinations of evil-designing people who lie in wait for these country girls; suffice it to say, that a careful watch is kept at the London and other stations; and that the most cordial assistance is rendered by the station authorities.

One case that came under the notice of the Society three days ago shows that there is need for all their vigilance. A little girl of fourteen, well dressed, and with tidy luggage, arrived at one of the London stations. She had not been long on the platform before a "lady," in a black silk dress, and with nothing in her appearance that would excite suspicion, spoke to her, and tried to persuade the girl that she knew all about her, and would take her to her friends. The woman did not succeed in taking the girl away, but she might have done so; and surely mothers ought not to leave their children waiting for hours at a station (as was the case here) before sending for them.

With regard to the girls who through some mishap are stranded at a "huge busy station," as mentioned in your paragraph, the Secretary of the Travellers' Aid tells me of a girl who came under their care yesterday afternoon. She was sent from a "Home" at Southampton to another Home in the suburbs of London, and was to have been met at the London station by a lady belonging to the Home to which she was going. No lady was, however, there to meet her as arranged, and the girl was utterly bewildered. It seems to us a culpable piece of neglect that the girl should not have had the address to which she was to go carefully written down, with full directions as to what she was to do in case the lady failed to meet her; but it is a fact that the girl did not even know what Home she was being sent to. The officials, as a matter of course, sent the girl to the Travellers' Aid office, where she was questioned by the Secretary, who found out which Home she was to go to, and had her taken to it the same evening.

The secretary of the Travellers' Aid, Miss M. E. Dimock, 16a, Old Cavendish-street, London, W., will arrange to meet any girl, either at the London stations or at nearly any of the large towns, if three days' notice is given her. The Travellers' Aid was originally started by the Y.W.C.A., but now includes also representatives from many other societies working for girls on its committee. It does not confine its work to England, but is rapidly spreading all over the world.—Yours truly, Kinnaird.

MISSION TO LEPERS IN INDIA.—The Archbishop of Dublin presided over the annual meeting, held in Dublin a few days ago, of the members and friends of this Missionary Society. A letter was read from Lady Dufferin, a patroness of the Mission, intimating that, with others, she was working for the Asylum for Lepers at Simla, and also for other similar institutions. The report stated that, according to some estimates, there are half a million lepers in India. The Mission utilises as much as possible existing agencies, and is carrying on work in many parts of the country. Addresses were delivered by several friends, who declared this to be the very flower of mission work. The Society has been in existence fourteen years, and has been instrumental in greatly relieving the sufferings and brightening the hopes of the poor outcast lepers.

THE OPIUM TRAFFIC.

On Wednesday evening last week a meeting in aid of the movement for the suppression of the opium trade in China, India, and Burmah was held in the Friends' Meeting House, St. Martin's-lane, W.C. Sir Joseph W. Pease, who occupied the chair, maintained that all the evil of the Chinese opium cultivation, now increasing, as well as the damage done by the traffic in India, lie at the door of England. He had himself presented to Parliament a petition, supported by representatives and members of all the religious bodies in the United Kingdom, yet the system which every religious denomination had declared immoral, continues to flourish. He believed the people of China would be quite ready to co-operate with us in putting down the trade entirely. As to the revenue derived in India from opium, it was generally grossly exaggerated by Indian statesmen, because they took the gross instead of the net proceeds. The revenue had been reduced to about £3,200,000—nearly half what it was in 1881. Thus the Government had done without half the revenue they formerly received, and if they had retained some duties which they had given up, they could have done without the remainder of the opium revenue.

Canon Wilberforce moved a resolution, recognising the evil, and urging that action should be concerted with a view to placing further restrictions on the importation of opium into India. He looked at the subject from the Christian standpoint, and held England had committed a great political sin against India. We had excited the appetite of the Chinese for the drug; they were now cultivating it for themselves, and our revenue was suffering on account of the appetite we had created. He asked whether anyone would tell him that England could not take upon herself the amount of the revenue from the accursed thing. He had no doubt she could, and that without any national grant, merely by voluntary effort. Other gentlemen spoke in condemnation of the traffic.

CANADA Y.M.C.A.—The annual meeting of the Y.M.C.A. Convention recently took place in Toronto. Mr. S. Caldecott, a well-known and active Christian, was elected to the presidency for the coming year. The reports of all the various branches of work were very satisfactory, and gave evidence of much good having been accomplished through the work of the several associations.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on special services at the Y.M.C.A., Sheffield.——For blessing on evangelistic meetings at The Green, Woodford, Essex, March 11 to 18, to be conducted by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes.——For blessing on a special mission in connection with the English Presbyterian Church, Denbigh, to be commenced on March 10.——For special blessing on the opening and following services in a new Gospel hall in Watlington.——For much blessing on a special mission at the Gospel Hall, Southgate-road, Wood-green, N., being conducted by Mr. James B. Wookey. Pray that many may have their eyes opened, and that they may be turned from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God.——For blessing on a prayer-meeting lately established in Galway.——For special services by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Oldway, Fownhope, Herefordshire, from March 10 to 14.——For blessing on a special mission at St. Saviour's Church, Everton, Liverpool, being conducted by Rev. T. J. Madden.——For blessing on a mission at Moresby, Whitehaven, by Rev. Dr. Morris, to March 25.——For blessing on a mission in the Albany Hall, Kingston-on-Thames, to March 15, being conducted by Mr. W. Spencer Walton.——For the outpouring of God's Spirit on Cambuslang, N.B., and that a week of special services there, beginning on March 11, may be greatly blessed.——For blessing on the work of the Hebron Mission, among the coloured people, Philadelphia, conducted by Miss Jennison and Miss Parrish.——Miss De Broen asks earnest prayer for great blessing on the Conference of Pastors and Christian Workers, to be held in the Iron Room, Belleville, on March 14.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

The monthly meeting of workers was held on Friday evening, Mr. Robert Paton presiding. Mr. J. T. Isaacs, the hon. secretary, said they had asked for more workers, and they had received a great increase of help in this direction. A large number of copies of the Scriptures had been circulated among the sailors of different nationalities; and many interesting cases of conversion had occurred through the work in the lodging-houses. Last week twenty Arabs had come into the Gospel meetings, and an interpreter is now working among them. The chairman read a letter received from Miss Reade, who is working among Mohammedans in India, in which she said that by means of a magic lantern she gathered a number of people together, and instructed them in the truths of the Gospel, the story of the Prodigal Son being especially effective.

Rev. John Wilkinson, of Mildmay, addressed the meeting on "Who is Jesus Christ?" Speaking of the doubts and erroneous teaching which so widely prevail at present, he brought forward Scripture proofs to show that there was one particular angel seen in all the Old Testament, and that was the Angel Jehovah, Jesus Christ, the Incarnate God. There is nothing in the realms of literature that can charm the soul like the Bible when read with prayer, humility, and intelligence. The question is: What is the personal relation existing between ourselves and Jesus Christ? We ought to absolutely surrender ourselves to Him.—Daily Chronicle.

Y.M.C.A., WEST BRANCH.

On Thursday evening last week, in the Burlington Hall, Savile-row, Regent-street, the annual meeting was held of the West London Branch of the Y.M.C.A. After a cheering report of the year's work had been submitted by Mr. Pearce, the esteemed secretary, Lord Kinnaird, who presided, spoke warmly of the large amount of good being accomplished by the Associations.

"City life" was then considered by three speakers from various points of view. Rev. W. Hay Chapman, referred to its sins, snares, and temptations. Having deplored the fact that God's standard of sin is largely rejected, and a low human standard set up, he spoke of intemperance and impurity, which almost stare people in the face wherever they go. Gambling, scandalous and idle talk, untruthfulness, and dishonesty, were then alluded to, special attention being directed to some of the most insidious forms that these sins assume. Among the snares indicated were bad company, fear of man, and costly dress. The temptations against which words of warning were spoken were—places of amusement, the low and light literature of the day, and doubtful conversation. "Keep thyself pure" was emphasised; young men were urged to give their hearts to God, hate sin, avoid temptation, and never put themselves in the way of being snared by the devil.

Rev. Joshua Harrison pointed out the importance of young men seeing that their recreations are healthful and conducive to nobility of life; he urged that the service of Christ should be decided upon as the great safeguard against all evils, and that the privileges of divine life and work should be eagerly embraced. The opportunities for mental culture and Christian service in London was the subject dealt with by Rev. G. P. Gould, in a pleasant and instructive manner. He spoke of the advantage of intercourse of man with man, and of the accessibility of books and advanced teaching in London. He advised young men to improve their opportunities.

THE LATE REV. GEORGE BOWEN.

Dear Sir,—A few weeks ago your paper contained a sketch of the career of a remarkable labourer and witness for the Lord in India, dear old George Bowen. Last week's mail has brought the news of his falling asleep, at his post, after three days' illness. I am sure that his testimony, so quiet and so consistent for so many years, must have told upon many, both Europeans and natives, in a way which, perhaps, will never be fully known till the day shall reveal it. To some of us his death is the severing of one more of those links which have connected us with a past, full of interest.

May the Lord stir up many to take a path of equal earnestness, transparent simplicity, and self-denial.

J. G. Halliday.

The Bombay Guardian of February 11 contains a detailed statement of facts connected with the death of its late editor, Mr. Bowen, and also a sketch of his remarkable life. Only three days before his death he had taken part in a farewell meeting on the Wednesday evening to Dr. Stone, and caught a severe chill. He passed several restless days, but there were no symptoms of the near approach of death. At six on Sunday morning the nurse carried him some refreshment, which he declined to take, and at seven he was found to be dead. "In the short interval, and most probably while lightly sleeping, the weary wheels of life stood still, and he was not, for God took him."

Several of our American contemporaries have long sketches of Mr. Bowen's life. In one of them Rev. Dr. Thorburn, of Calcutta, now in the United States, says:—

"Never was the sweet rest of heaven more faithfully earned, and after his long, patient waiting his rest must be sweet to him, doubly sweet. I never knew so patient a saint, one who so perfectly lived as his faith implied a saint should live. He renounced the world, and yet was no recluse. He was never sour, never sad, and never despondent. He believed all things, hoped all things, endured all things. He was patient beyond all men I have ever known. He was hopeful in the midst of discouragements, and humble in the midst of prosperity. His last letter to me was largely taken up with plans for the better prosecution of the work, and it breathed a spirit of confidence and hope."

PRINCESS BEATRICE has consented to open the bazaar to be held on March 13, in the Kensington Town Hall, in aid of the unendowed French Protestant charities in London, placed under the superintendence of Pasteur Du Pontet de la Harpe, D.D.

RAFFLING.—Rev. Arthur Hall, of Craven Chapel, Regent-street, W., recently wrote to the Home Secretary asking if raffling in connection with a church bazaar was illegal, and in reply was informed that "all lotteries are illegal." Mr. Hall says:—A raffle is a lottery, and the A B C of gambling. Is the Church of Christ to sanction what the law of England condemns as immoral and injurious to the commonwealth? Is it not time that in the endeavour to raise money for Christian purposes, Christians should abstain from the "appearance of evil," and "not do evil that good (money) may come"?

"THE DOWN-ER GRADE."—It has been reserved for Mr. Charrington to make by far the most serious assault that has ever been directed against organised churches. In The Christian it is stated, on Mr. Charrington's authority, that in nearly every street of the East-end the churches are aiders and abettors of vicious houses, either by the direct complicity of some of their members or by inexcusable ignorance and neglect. We cannot doubt that this complaint will form matter for searching investigation. It will be Mr. Charrington's duty to give the names of the delinquents to the ministers of the places of worship he refers to, and what their duty is, if the allegations are proved, it is needless for us to say.—British Weekly.

Letters to the Editor.

EMIGRATION OF WOMEN.

Dear Sir,—We are having the same plans this season for the protection of young women and girls wishing to go to Canada. Our matron will make five journeys; the first, all being well, on May 3, the second May 31. I shall gladly be of use to any who would like to correspond with me on the subject. There are excellent openings for young girls throughout the Dominion. Emigration to Queensland is still free.—Yours faithfully,

Adelaide Ross.

SEVENTH DAY ADVENTISTS.

Sir,—For some months a lady has been visiting my family for the purpose of instructing them on prophetic subjects. It turns out now that her avowed object is to impress upon them that the seventh day, and not the first day of the week, is binding on Christians, and the penalty is receiving the mark of the Beast of Revelation. The subject is not in the least unsettling to me, but I should be glad if you or your readers could inform me of any book which deals with the subject, as I understand this lady is most active in disseminating her principles in this neighbourhood.—Yours truly,

V. J. Auber.

MR. SPURGEON AND THE BAPTIST UNION.

Dear Sir,—As multitudes in all denominations are watching with great interest the unhappy conflict now waging between Mr. Spurgeon and many of his brethren, it is surely important that both sides of the question should be presented to the general Christian public. You have already published more than one statement of the case from Mr Spurgeon's side; will you kindly allow me to speak from the other point of view?

No one can judge righteous judgment in this matter who assumes that opposition to Mr. Spurgeon means opposition to evangelical truth. And yet this is being done continually. Mr. Spurgeon himself has written as though all those faithful to Gospel truth would side with him. I have now open before me the current number of a religious weekly which, alluding to the large number of Mr. Spurgeon's men who have stood by him, remarks:—"Faithful men are not wanting. All will rejoice to know that at least this number are prepared to maintain firmly Scriptural lines of teaching and preaching." The suggestion of these words, of course, is that the opposition are unfaithful, and are not "prepared to maintain firmly Scriptural lines of teaching and preaching." If the editor of this paper knew how many thoughtful, earnest, spiritual men, and men, too, who are exceedingly zealous for the old-fashioned Pauline theology of the cross, belong to that opposition, he would surely withdraw such a suggestion with shame, as a gross injustice. So long as such men as Alexander Maclaren, Jas. Culross, Chas. Williams, John Aldis, and thousands, many thousands more, who sympathise heart and soul with their theology, are opposed to Mr. Spurgeon, it comes very near to slander to identify the opposition with the unfaithful.

It is just as unfair and unchristian, too, to say that we are in opposition because we care more for our Union than for the truth of God.

As a matter of fact, many of us who are now so freely denounced as unfaithful have shown great concern for central truth. Rev. C. Williams tells us how he and others urged Mr. Spurgeon—in vain, apparently—to lift up his voice for Gospel truth within the Union. Not long since the secretary of our Union paid one of the heaviest penalties possible through his determined opposition to unsound teaching. The very paper alluded to above quotes with high approval a splendid protest against Christianity without the cross, by Dr. Maclaren—one of the unfaithful, forsooth. Dr. Underhill, who has taken a leading part in withstanding Mr. Spurgeon, stated at the last meeting of the Council of the Union that he hailed the earlier Down-Grade articles. He, along with multitudes of us, felt the need of such a protest.

Indeed, sir, the evidence is overwhelming that, while the opposition of necessity contains those among us who are more or less unsound in the faith, it is composed mainly of those who love and preach the old Gospel. Our opposition is not to Mr. Spurgeon's protest, but to the manner of it. From the protest itself (leaving a few rash and unjust statements out of account) we expect great good; but from the method adopted we look for much evil. Feeling keenly the essential injustice and unbrotherliness of Mr. Spurgeon's action, we dread the widespread revulsion from evangelical truth which has already been generated by his conduct. Indeed, it is in the interests of central truth, as well as of justice and freedom, that we are driven to oppose one so justly beloved. If it once gets abroad that men may do, in the name and interests of Christ's Gospel, what no one would permit in an ordinary secular society, evangelical religion will, indeed, be wounded in the house of her friends. It will then seem to myriads of our most hopeful and thoughtful young people to be a choice between fairness, consideration, and freedom on the one side, and orthodox truth on the other; and they will choose the former.

Our complaint against Mr. Spurgeon is twofold. He has wronged us (1) in what he did not do, and (2) in what he did.

First, in what he omitted to do. The purity of every Christian society can be preserved only by the vigilance of the individual members that compose it. When a member of the body sees gross evil, and does not take steps to correct it, he becomes blamable. Mr. Spurgeon tells us that for months, if not for years past, he has known of great evils existing among us. On one occasion he did formally protest against what grieved very many among us. Such explanations were then given that he professed to be at any rate fairly satisfied. But, apart from this incident, we cannot hear either that the false teachers have been appealed to privately according to Matt. xviii. 15—17, and Gal. vi. 1.; or that he has ever called together leading men and laid the case before them in private, as he might well have done; or that he has laid a careful formal statement of it before the Union Council; or even that he has ever gone to any of the meetings and made a general appeal to his brethren to arise and defend the truth. We know from Mr. Charles Williams that he was urged to do the latter, but he refrained. Beyond what I have just stated, and two or three informal talks with the secretary, when nothing was said that was even intended to be taken up officially, I can hear of absolutely nothing done by Mr. Spurgeon to correct matters within the Union. I, for one, cannot escape the conclusion that, if Mr. Spurgeon knew so much, he neglected his duty most seriously in not giving distinct and effective warning.

Then he offended in what he did. The Down-Grade articles were published. Of that we do not complain. In the main we sympathise very strongly with them. Mr. Spurgeon expected that they would be discussed at the autumn meetings, which took place soon after. But this could hardly be; for, besides that these articles were not specially addressed to us as a body, they contained exaggerated statements which did not apply to us, and yet statements which had excited much feeling. It was hardly for the Union to take up this general indictment, and so proclaim to all "that the cap fitted." Unfortunately, at the last meeting of the Union, one or two exceedingly ill-judged and wrongly conceived utterances were dropped by two speakers, which gave many who did not attend the meeting the idea that Mr. Spurgeon's solemn appeal had been met with frivolity and, perhaps, scorn.

He resigned, publishing to the world that his conscience would not allow him to remain "in an evil confederacy with those who make void the Gospel" (see note to sermon published about Dec. 8, 1887). Such action, by such a man, explained by such terrible words, led men to think that the worst charges in the Down-Grade articles applied to us generally, that men who deny our Lord's Divinity, scout the idea of future punishment, and treat the Bible as waste paper, were not only common among us, but that we were confederated to protect them.

We knew of no one among us answering to this description; so, refraining from hard words, we quietly asked for names and evidence. Our request—a simple necessity, surely, in the interests of justice—being refused, our Council simply resolved that "such charges should not have been made." This quiet, dignified reply to a terrible and unjust indictment, is now bitterly resented by Mr. Spurgeon and his friends. He says that we have "kicked" him, and his supporters are preparing to contend to the uttermost, at no one knows what expense of peace and Christian feeling, to get the so-called "censure" reversed. We are to be asked next April to vote (substantially) that the charges are true, i.e., that we are "an evil confederacy," &c. And this, too, without any formal evidence of our guilt being laid before us!

If my space allowed I would show that we are driven to dissent from Mr. Spurgeon in the interests of that freedom of thought, and that charity, which is essential to deep spiritual conviction. I am, dear Sir, yours truly,

Streatham, S.W. John Pearce Clark.

THE DOWN-ER GRADE.

Dear Sir,—Absence and pressure have caused that I only this day have read The Christian for February 24, and seen the article on "The Down-er Grade." It is so awful, that until I came to your name at the foot, I thought it simply incredible, and that the Editor had been imposed upon.

A dead profession, that cheats the self-deluded soul into a sleep of death until it finds itself in hell, is one of the main hindrances of the Holy Spirit's work in our Gospel-favoured land. But that the self-delusion could go so far as your bald facts prove, I had never dreamt.

I thank God that He has let you know these things, and given you the courage to publish them. It is the truest kindness to the professing Church to do so, that so she may examine herself, and prayer be made for her continually, that she may repent and be cleansed of her filthiness.

Your fearless action in publishing her shame will certainly lose you some offended subscribers; so I have planned to send you a few instead, as per list below; and enclose a cheque for £2 5s., for the rest of this year, commencing with February 24.

Again thanking you for this thrust of the surgeon's lancet of truth, I am, dear Sir, your friend and brother in Christ, W. M.

March 4.

EDINBURGH MEDICAL STUDENTS.

Dear Sir,—Your correspondent, "Mr. D'Hugo," is mistaken when he says the institution of Ward Services is a result of the Medical Students' Mission, for they were first instituted some ten or twelve years ago, as was pointed out by the former Ward Secretary in one of the annual reports. This branch of work has, however, certainly been greatly extended during the last year or two; and those of us who have been privileged to engage in it, know what a delightful way it is of beginning the Sunday; what opportunities it gives of speaking a word in season to those whom accident or disease has perhaps made willing to receive it, and what reflex benefit to one's own spiritual life results from it.

The conversational meetings, as they are called, in connection with the Foreign Missionary Association, to which your correspondent refers, are in no way connected with Prof. Drummond's meetings. They were started but a few months ago, at the suggestion of a few men who thought this the best way of getting information about the foreign field, which might both guide those who think of giving themselves to this work, and perhaps encourage others to do the same. The meetings have already proved very helpful.

Permit me to say that the subject of my letter in your issue of Jan. 6, to which your correspondent refers, was not Professor Drummond's work, but his teaching. This, the minority I spoke of, believe to be not only defective, but contrary in many ways to the express teaching of God's Word.—Yours sincerely, B. Lewis Paton.

OBITUARY.

REV. J. G. SMALL.

Rev. James G. Small, B.A., for many years minister of the Free Church at Bervie, N.B., has recently died at the age of seventy-one. He was a faithful and diligent pastor, and took advantage of every means, such as the distribution of tracts, and the religious training of the young, to advance Christian teaching, and to promote the good of the people. Mr. Small was the author of a number of hymns, for many of which he provided special tunes.

THE DOWN-GRADE CONTROVERSY AND THE CREED OF EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

FROM the prominence which is now being given to definitions of doctrine, the need is evident for a careful re-examination of the foundations of the Christian Faith, especially respecting—(1) The Divine inspiration of the Scriptures from their inner spiritual meaning; (2) The Unity of the Godhead in the Person of the Lord Jesus Christ; (3) The Atonement—that is, "God in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself;" (4) A saving faith shown in the life according to the Lord's Commandments; (5) The true nature of Heaven and Hell, and man's character freely formed as determining his final state; (6) The spiritual meaning and perpetual obligation of the Sacraments of Baptism and the Holy Supper. Pamphlets on all or any of the above subjects, treated on a Scriptural basis, will be sent gratis and post free to any address on application to JAMES SPEIRS, 36, Bloomsbury street, London, W.C.

DISEASED RIGHT LUNG.—CASE OF A LITTLE BOY AT STOURBRIDGE.

In the spring of the year before last, I received a letter from MR. DAVID GUEST, of BELBROUGHTON, near STOURBRIDGE, with statement of his son's case, recommended by an uncle who had benefited under my treatment. The medical report was that the right lung was diseased.

The lad was nine years of age. His mother had died of Phthisis. Appetite had failed; general loss of flesh; pains in the shoulders, chest, and side, increased on breathing (which was hurried and oppressed). Flushes of the face. Secretions all faulty. Cough; but not severe.

The first sign of amendment was, "the appetite improved." In two months he was reported, "stronger and better generally, and less pain." (The father then took the medicine also, having a severe attack of bronchitis.)

In November of the same year, Mrs. Guest writes me: "Our little boy keeps pretty well. Many thanks for your kind advice; for he was sinking fast. The change was wonderful."

In a letter, dated Dec. 26, 1887, Mr. Guest, writing me on another case, says:—"You made a wonderful cure of my son, Charles. It was nothing but your medicine, by the blessing of God. If you like to publish it for the good of others, please do so.—Yours gratefully, DAVID GUEST."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

These evangelists, after closing a very successful mission at Louisville, Kentucky, proceeded to Burlington, Iowa, where Major Whittle had been evangelising for a week, and where a three days' Convention was held. Among the addresses at Burlington was one by Mr. Sankey, on the attendance of children on church services. A correspondent of The New York Observer, writing of the Louisville meetings, says:—

"Thus have closed the extraordinary revival services of Mr. D. L. Moody, with an exhibition of immediate fruits and unparalleled practical results. Men received payments of accounts which had been blotted out in bankruptcy fifteen years ago, as the result of his sermon on 'Restitution.' Old grudges and feuds have been wiped out, and hundreds of homes made happy by the spirit of forgiveness. Every church and every charity in the city have received a new and mighty impulse. The accessions to the churches will be very large. A spirit of serious consideration of the claims of eternity versus time, seems to prevail and impress all classes of society."

REV. F. H. WHITE ON BUNYAN.

Rev. Frank H. White delivered his very able lecture on "John Bunyan and His Book," at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Tuesday last week, illustrated by dissolving views. Mr. Spurgeon presided, and, in spite of the bitterness of the weather, the floor and lower gallery were well filled. In opening, the Chairman said that next to the Bible the Pilgrim's Progress was the man of his right hand. There was great stillness and attention all through, and one man, who had been weeping, was heard to say as he went out, "I have been converted over again to-night."

The illustrations are both costly and beautiful, painted specially, by an old Polytechnic artist. The proceeds of this lecture, which Mr. White is open to deliver by arrangement, go towards completing the sum of £1000 required to open free of debt the new Tabernacle at Bayswater, of which Mr. White is the pastor. Friends who arrange for the delivery of such lectures, and those who hear them, will derive exceeding benefit thamselves, as well as aid a true and worthy cause.

MRS. ORMISTON CHANT leaves England on March 13, to attend the International Convention to be held at Washington, commencing on March 31. The Convention will deal with Women's Suffrage, Temperance, Purity, Vigilance Work, and kindred subjects, affecting the social, moral, and religious welfare of women. All friends wishing to communicate with Mrs. Chant while in America should address their letters, care of Mrs. Cady-Stanton, International Convention, Washington, U.S.A.

BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.—Miss Emmeline Hollyer writes from a tent in the Bengal jungle :—My connection with this mission has ceased since Feb. 1, but I am still working for the Lord in this country, and desire the prayers of Christians on our labours. At present Miss Adam and myself are working together in the Santhal villages. For the last three months we have been out in a tent sowing the seed with much encouragement, as many have listened with earnest attention.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.—The Ladies' Auxiliary of this admirable Society, in one of the occasional papers recently issued, pleads for renewed support. The paper says:—'At no period, perhaps, of Ireland's history has there been so great an opening for disseminating the Scriptures, and notwithstanding the sad state of the country during the past few years, the Scripture readers have been very favourably received. The income of the Society is quite inadequate, however, to send forth messengers into every part of the land. The itinerant missionaries are sent out to districts in Ireland where the localisation of permanent Scripture readers is, for many reasons, impossible. This branch of the work has been greatly valued and blessed. Some ladies have undertaken each to obtain the amount of one Scripture reader's salary.

The Book World.

MAGAZINES FOR MARCH.

In The Church Monthly (8, New Bridge-street) there is an account of Elstow Church.

Young England (Sunday School Union) is a really excellent publication for boys and girls.

The Hospital is having a remarkably successful career. It is eminently readable and very useful.

Woman's Work in the Great Harvest-field (S. W. Partridge & Co.) is a very helpful visitor to ladies engaged in Christian work.

Our Darlings (J. F. Shaw & Co.) will afford much pleasure to those for whom it is intended.—The Children's Illustrated Magazine (Seeley & Co.) and The Child's Own Magazine (Sunday School Union) are also capital serials for the young.

"The Silver Wedding Number" of The Illustrated London News (1s.) contains a very interesting sketch of the married life of the Prince and Princess of Wales. Illustrations abound; this will form a fitting sequel to the mementos of the Jubilee.

The Herald of Peace reprints a comprehensive memorial to the United States Congress in favour of arbitration for the settlement of international disputes. The memorial contains a list of no fewer than fifty-eight arbitrations in settlement of international controversies.

There is much that is useful in The Young Men's Christian Magazine (Elliot Stock) the organ of the Young Men's Christian Association and Fellowship Unions of Scotland. In The Young Man (S. W. Partridge & Co.), Mr. J. Herbert Tritton, president of the London Chamber of Commerce, has a short paper entitled "Success: what it is, and how to achieve it."

In Rest and Reaping (Morgan & Scott) Rev. Dr. J. Elder Cumming writes helpfully on "The Death of Self."—The Reaper (Houlston & Sons) contains a plain paper by Rev. John Smith, of Edinburgh, on "The Nature and Effects of Sin."—The organ of the Evangelical Alliance, Evangelical Christendom, is replete with intelligence from all parts. The Christian Worker, and Cry of the Children (S. W. Partridge & Co.) serves many useful purposes.

The Home Friend (S. W. Partridge & Co.) performs a useful function as a Young Women's Christian Association organ. In a "Peep" at the Bodleian Library, by Minora Rivers, there is an account of the New Testament used by Queen Elizabeth when a captive princess at Woodstock; on a fly-leaf of the book is some of the princess's hand-writing, which is reproduced in fac-simile.—The Y.W.C.A. Monthly Journal, for secretaries and workers, issued from the head office, 316, Regent-street, W., is a first-class helper in good work.

In The Expositor Professor Bruce commences an exposition of the Epistle to the Hebrews: the introductory article is an augury of an important and useful contribution being made to the study of a great subject. Professor A. B. Davidson writes suggestively on the interpretation of the Book of the Prophet Joel; and Mr. A. Taylor Innes contributes an interesting analysis of a part of the "Apocalyptic" division of what is generally known as the Fourth Book of Esdras. Dr. C. H. H. Wright begins a valuable series of critical papers on Biblical commentaries.

There is a large amount of intelligence in The Friend of Missions (S. W. Partridge & Co.). In The Church Missionary Intelligencer and The Church Missionary Gleaner there is a very full record of work.—Regions Beyond contains a very interesting account of the great Balolo nation and Central Africa.—All the World tells of the work of the Salvation Army in all lands.—Among other missionary monthlies are Medical Missions (T. Ogilvie Smith) and The Church Missionary Juvenile Instructor.

The Gospel Magazine (W. H. & L. Collingridge). Rev. Dr. Doudney has edited this excellent magazine for forty-eight years. In the introductory article this month he says that he is seventy-seven years of age, but he still wields a vigorous pen.—In The Sword and Trowel (Passmore & Alabaster), the writer of the first "Down-Grade" paper has a contribution entitled, "Separation not Schism; Or, the Old and New Connexions of General Baptists."—Footsteps of Truth (J. F. Shaw & Co.). The contents are varied, and include much that is instructive and comforting in the Christian life.

In Scribner's Magazine Robert Louis Stevenson continues his series of essays by some recollections of "Beggars," whom he has known. These recollections lead him to some pertinent and general reflections in regard to charity and gratitude (as they are popularly interpreted), which are in his best vein of delicate humour and satire. Mr. Franklin Leonard Pope, one of the leading ing authorities on the practical applications of electricity, contributes to the magazine a clear account of the origin, development, and present state of perfection of the electric motor, with its applications to various industries.

Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness have just completed a new work on "The Divine Programme of the World's History," which is now passing through the press, and will be published shortly by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton.

"LENT."—A correspondent writes :—With reference to the observance of fasting during "Lent," may I inquire where is there any authority enjoining it from Scripture?

MISSION HALL, CHISWICK.—The district in which our mission work is carried on is a very poor one. Every morning of the week we give a breakfast to 50 poor children. We have usually about 170 juvenile guests at the penny dinners provided on Thursdays, and our soup kitchen is open every Wednesday and Friday. The services are well attended both morning and evening on Sunday, and there are 700 children under instruction in the afternoon of the Lord's Day. Nearly 100 mothers meet on Monday afternoon. Robt. T. Smith.

HOME FOR TIRED WORKERS.—A House of Rest, thoroughly unsectarian in principle, and intended for men and women who are labourers for God in definite mission work, has been taken at Eskbank, where six can be accommodated at one time. It is within half-an-hour's distance by train from Edinburgh. The attention of clergymen is specially invited, so that they may make the existence of the House of Rest known to all workers who might like to take advantage of it. All applications for admission to be addressed to the lady superintendent, Fairhaven-villa, Eskbank, Midlothian, N.B.

CHURCH OF SCOTLAND MISSIONS.—On Sunday evening last week, a largely attended meeting was held in Greenock to hear addresses from representatives of the various mission schemes of the Church of Scotland. Mr. James Reid emphasised the need of the Jewish mission. Rev. J. M'Murtrie, in speaking of the foreign mission, said it was a mistake to suppose that the slave trade in Africa was decreasing. It was never so bad as at the present time. The Arabs knew that if the missionaries succeeded in bringing the people of Africa to Christ, their trade was gone, and so they were constantly attacking them.

MISS HAVERGAL'S CONSECRATION HYMN.—Mrs. Crane, sister of Miss Frances R. Havergal, writes to correct part of the statement lately made in The Christian by Rev. E. F. Baldwin. She says:—"The gentleman of whom he states that 'he had for years avoided all services,' cannot be the head of the house in which the Consecration Hymn was written, as his habit was exactly the reverse; and as many are aware of his name, I cannot allow the imputation to pass. Two histories are probably mixed up in Mr. Baldwin's mind. He also implies that all the persons in the house were, previous to her visit, unconverted, which was not the case. It was from my own home that my sister proceeded for the visit in question, and the true account of it is to be found in her 'Memorials,' pages 132 and 133."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Messrs. Leonard Weaver and William Grove have been holding evangelistic services at Hereford, where the Lord has given them souls for their hire.

Mr. Robertson, of Carrubber's Close Mission, Edinburgh, began a mission last week in Trinity Free Church, Glasgow. Of the many inquirers dealt with nearly half were young people.

Under the auspices of the Pastors' Union of the city of Sacramento, California, Rev. E. Payson Hammond has been conducting a series of revival services. The inquiry meetings have been seasons of much blessing, many conversions having taken place.

Mr. William Nobbs has during the past few months been labouring, with tokens of attending blessing at Bristol and Weston-super-Mare. He greatly missed the sympathy and presence of the late beloved Earl Cavan, which had always been a feature of his previous visits to Weston.

Inverkeithing, N.B. — Mr. Steedman, of Edinburgh, has been here for two weeks, during which he addressed twenty meetings. The interest and numbers increased nightly. There have been several professed conversions, and the Christians have been revived. It is intended to continue the meetings.

Pastor B. Dinnick has concluded a week's mission at the Slade Hall, Plumstead. The workers have been stirred up to greater zeal for the Master. Though the addresses were chiefly to Christians, many surrendered to Christ for salvation. At Bolton-on-Dearne, Mr. Wm. Aspland, of Newark, has also been greatly blessed.

Mr. H. Hilton, of the Evangelisation Society, London, assisted by Mrs. Hilton, has concluded a three weeks' mission at Worthing, in connection with St. George's parish (Rev. S. L. Dixon, vicar). Although the weather was unfavourable, the attendances increased to the end of the mission. Much blessing has resulted, and many have cause to be thankful for Mr. and Mrs. Hilton's visit.

Hassock, Sussex.—Rev. J. B. Bain concluded a most successful eight days' mission here on Sunday week. There have been times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. It was grand on Sunday night to see one after another trusting the Saviour, and more men than women. Truly it was God who was thus working. Mr. Bain begins work on Sunday, the 11th, at Burgess Hill, and asks prayer that there may be much blessing.

Latymer-road Mission.— Special services were held here from Feb. 19 to 26. Simple and stirring Gospel addresses were given by Messrs. Mitchell and Taylor, of the Evangelisation Society, Mr. John Short and Mr. H. W. Scriven. Notwithstanding the severity of the weather the meetings were well attended, the audiences being entirely composed of working people. A praise and testimony meeting was held at the end of the week, and many testified to having received great blessing through the services.

Southsea Mission.—Having completed a five months' tour in Cornwall with our No. 2 Bible-carriage, we ask prayer for a blessing on the Gospel meetings held. Hundreds of Gospel books have been sold, some to send to relations, saved and unsaved, all over the world. The large texts on the carriage were a great attraction, thus bringing Scripture truths before the people. In the cathedral town much interest was shown, a large crowd listening each night with marked attention to the tidings of salvation. Summercourt fair was visited, and hundreds of Testaments, &c., sold; while numbers listened to the word of life. We hope to work the south coast of England during the summer.

J. E. Burt.
F. Charlton.

Mr. Henry Lakin.—During the three weeks ending Feb. 27, Mr. Henry Lakin, of Manchester, conducted nightly meetings in connection with the Carrubber's Close Mission, Edinburgh. The attendance and interest increased as the meetings were continued. There were many interesting cases of inquiry and conversion, including some who had been slaves to strong drink, and were attracted to hear an evangelist who had formerly been a publican. At Mr. Lakin's closing meeting some interesting testimonies were given. Mr. Lakin's visit has also been largely blessed to the stirring-up and strengthening of Christian workers. After a brief period of rest, he is to return to conduct a mission in Leith.

C. N. B. M.

A three weeks' mission has been held in Croft and Huncote, Leicester, by Mr. G. Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society. The congregations were good, and the results encouraging. Much fruit was also seen of former missions held here.

Mr. H. Eliot Walton has recently held services at Eastbourne in connection with the Railway Mission, which have been attended with much blessing. He has given several Gospel addresses to the boys in one of the boarding schools. These have been the means of a great awakening among the pupils.

Tewkesbury.—Rev. J. Fleming Shearer, of Middlesborough, has conducted a week's mission in connection with the Y.M.C.A. at Tewkesbury. One of the features of the mission was the participation in the services by clergymen of the Established Church, and a general sinking of the denominational element.

Lee and Lewisham Y.W.C.A.—We have reason to thank God for the rich blessings given during our mission at Cairns House, Brandram-road, Lee. Miss Hull spoke with much spiritual power, and we are all greatly refreshed and looking trustfully forward to a continuous revival in our branch. We have now been in our little Institute three years, and thankfully remember the way God has led us in every department of our work.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following missions have been arranged in connection with this society for the month of March. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer by our readers:—

Revs. W. Hay Aitken and James Stephens, March 11—24, St. Nicholas', Whitehaven; March 25—April 1, Holy Trinity, Whitehaven.

Rev. C. I. Atherton, March 11, Exeter Cathedral; 12—16, Staverton, Totnes; 18, Bristol Cathedral; 20, Lympstone; 23, Chudleigh; 25—31, Stoodleigh.

Rev. R. Catterall, to March 13, Rochdale Parish Church; 17—26, Christ Church, Accrington.

Rev. W. E. Cleworth, to March 16, Bampton; 17—26, Colyton; 27—29, St. Mary Major, Exeter.

Rev. J. Cullin, March 10—20, or longer, Littlebourne, near Canterbury; 26—27, St. Gregory the Great, Canterbury; 28—29, St. Matthias', Stoke Newington, N.

Rev. A. R. D'Arcy, to March 12, Loddon, Norfolk; 17—27, Woodford Wells, Essex.

Revs. H. Falloon and C. E. Meeres, March 11—22, St. Thomas', Launceston.

Rev. H. Armstrong Hall, March 22, 23, St. Mary's Kilburn.

Rev. William Haslam, to March 14, St. Anne's Lancaster; 18—28, St. Mark's, Preston; March 28—April 9, Christ Church, Great Broughton, Carlisle.

Rev. J. H. Haslam, March 10—16, St. Augustine's Bermondsey; 17—22, Christ Church, Surbiton; 24—31, St. Paul's, Norwood.

Rev. R. D. Monro, to March 14, Emmanuel Church, Weston-super-Mare; March 24—April 3, Long Ashton, Bristol.

Rev. Dr. Morris, March 11—23, Moresby, Whitehaven; March 29—April 2, Ullenhall, Henley-in-Arden.

Rev. J. Simpson, March 11—25, Holy Trinity, Whitehaven.

Rev. F. S. Webster, to March 13, Kenilworth; March 17—April 1, St. Mark's, Cheetham Hill, Manchester.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The chief constable of Edinburgh reports a continued decrease of shebeening.

A new temperance hall, which has cost £3150, has been opened at Northampton.

It is proposed to raise £1,000,000 as a "National Guarantee" Fund in defence of the liquor trade.

Mr. W. S. Caine's notice of motion in the House of Commons on the liquor traffic in India is put down for March 13.

Glasgow Free Church Presbyterial Temperance Meeting has now 136 branches, an increase of 54 in three years.

The Saturday Review demands "some effectual check on the sale of drugs which, whether they be called beer, wine, or spirit, are in fact poisons."

In The Nineteenth Century Mr. G. S. Layard speaks of the appalling amount that a regular expenditure on cigars will reach at the end of the year.

Mr. Walker, contractor for the Manchester Ship Canal, has arranged with the Liverpool British Workman Public-house Company to supply refreshments to the men on the entire route.

The Union of Temperance Societies in Banffshire recently made arrangements for taking a plebiscite in the county on the subject of early closing of public-houses. The result in every place was overwhelmingly in favour of later opening as well as earlier closing.

Our readers will regret to learn that Mr. Edward T. Smith has been compelled to cancel all engagements in the north from the middle of March to the end of April, as he is advised by his medical man to remain in the warmer climate of the South Coast, Devon and Cornwall.

Rev. Edward Parry, of Newtown, Mon., speaking recently in Manchester, said that in Newtown there was only one man who kept a public-house, and he was a total abstainer. The rest of the public-houses there were kept by widows whose husbands had been prematurely destroyed by drink.

A Gospel temperance mission has been held in Portman Rooms (late Madame Tussaud's), Baker-street, W. Mr. William Noble, of Hoxton Hall, in the course of a telling address, said that there has been a great change for the better among the working classes, but the middle classes are still great victims to the drinking habit.

FOREIGN.

The next International Temperance Convention will be held during the summer in Norway.

New Alabama with 30,000 inhabitants has not one public drink-shop. Money formerly spent on liquor now pays for food, clothing, or land.

Colonel Coope writes that the whole country lying between Delagoa Bay, the Lebombos, and the Mapoota River is debauched by the liquor traffic.

Mr. Caine, M.P., states that in Ceylon the natives would welcome the prohibition of the distillation of arrack, the native spirit, and also of the retail sale of imported spirits.

Mrs. Salter, the Mayor of Argonia, Kansas, the first woman in the world who has filled such a post, has shut up all the drinking saloons in the place, and has made matters extremely uncomfortable for gamblers and sharpers of all sorts.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.—Miss Petrie, B.A., in her third lecture at Steinway Hall, delivered February 26, dealt with Romish missions to the heathen. They were started to prove the missionary character of that Church, and to redress its losses on the Continent of Europe. They were supported by the secular power of Spain, Portugal, and France successively; and they were content with mere external conformity, and did not insist on a change of heart. Results, considering these and other advantages, and the long continuance of their working, contrasted very unfavourably with those of Protestant missions even on their own statistics, misleading as these latter were. One striking fact was that Rome had created not one independent native church in all the three hundred years of its working; while already several flourishing Protestant native churches were in existence.

IRISH PROTESTANTISM (some may blame us for saying it, but that does not make it the less true) is too supercilious, unsympathising, and self-complacent, to possess the influence that should belong to it as a missionary force in Ireland. This is not as it should be, after centuries of splendid opportunity: and most glad should we be could it be shown that we are wrong. This view, however, has been forced upon us by prolonged and sorrowful experience. Someone has said that the greatest hindrance to Protestantism in Ireland is Irish Protestantism. This is an extreme statement; but he is a poor observer of the religious currents that surround us in this country who does not know that it is at least partially true. Indeed, we believe it to be largely true; and in saying this, we have no political question whatever in our view. As a rule, we Irish Protestants do not understand Roman Catholicism as a religion.—The Christian Irishman.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, MARCH 11.—JOEL II.

Under the figure of the invasion of the land by a plague of locusts is set forth the approaching invasion of the Gentile powers that are successively to devastate Israel (27) until the judgment culminates in the coming of "the great and terrible day of the Lord" (31). Some commentators question whether the invasion of locusts is to be understood literally or allegorically. Dr. Pusey well points to the words of ver. 17 as explaining the allegory "that the heathen should rule over them." Also to ver. 20, where "the northern" would point to the usual inroad of invading nations, but would not suit literal locusts, which "almost always by a sort of law of their being make their inroads from their birth-place in the south."

14.—Even a meat offering and a drink offering unto the Lord your God.—The cutting off of these "from the house of the Lord" had been threatened as an approaching judgment (i. 9, 13). Repentance, however, would avert this judgment, and leave behind this "blessing."

23.—The former rain moderately.—Marg., "a teacher of righteousness," or, strictly to follow the Hebrew, "the teacher for righteousness." Pusey, Hengstenberg, and others maintain this rendering; so do the most eminent Jewish writers, one of whom, Abarbanel, adds: "He is the King Messiah." In these words, "He hath given you the Teacher for righteousness," are contained the whole Gospel.

28.—Afterward I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh.—From this verse to the end of the chapter was the text of Peter's great sermon on the day of Pentecost (Acts ii. 17—21).

32.—The remnant whom the Lord shall call.—"This is the first appearance of the doctrine of 'the remnant' in Scripture. It is the Old Testament form of the doctrine of the election of grace (Rom. ix. 27, xi. 5)."—S.C.

MONDAY, MARCH 12.—JOEL III.

From the earlier Messianic days of the gift of "the Teacher for righteousness," and the outpouring of the Spirit, Joel goes on to the closing days of the dispensation, ending with the judgment of the Gentiles, and the salvation of Israel.

3.—They have cast lots for my people.—"During the Jewish war Titus took 97,000 prisoners, of whom he publicly sold all that were under seventeen years of age. After Hadrian's Jewish war four Jews were sold for a measure of barley at Hebron."—S.C.

10.—Beat your ploughshares into swords, &c.—"Joel's cry is addressed to the heathen before the judgment of Jehovah upon them. Isa. ii. 4, and Micah iv. 3, reverse the words when describing the state of the world after the judgment has been passed, and the Lord has assumed his kingdom in Zion."—S.C.

11.—Thither cause thy mighty ones to come down, O Lord.—"This seems to point to 'the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints'" (1 Thess. iii. 13).

12.—Let the heathen be wakened.—The word "heathen" is the same as Gentiles or nations. The Greek for "all the heathen" (LXX.) is what our Lord uses (Matt. xxv. 32). The aim of the present dispensation is to "disciple all the nations" (Matt. xxviii. 19). Hence the judgment of the nations so discipled at the Lord's Second Coming (Matt. xxv. 31—46), where both sheep and goats are his flock.

13.—Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe.—The harvest and the vintage are figures, respectively, of the ingathering of the saints, and the judgment of the professing Church left behind. (See Mark iv. 29, and Rev. xiv. 14—20.) The words, "Come, get you down," between these two, strikingly confirm the teaching of 1 Thess. iv. 17, where the saints are "caught up to meet the Lord in the air," and then apparently return with Him to judge the world.

19.—Egypt shall be a desolation, and Edom shall be a desolate wilderness.—Egypt typifies the world outside the Church, and Edom the professing in contrast to the true Church.

TUESDAY, MARCH 13.—AMOS I.

Amos prophesied during the reigns of Uzziah (Judah) and Jeroboam II. (Israel): they were cotemporary from B.C. 809—784. He seems to have followed Joel.

2.—The Lord will roar from Zion.—"Amos here repeats the words of Joel (iii. 16), and thus links his own prophecy with his."—S.C.

3.—For three transgressions of Damascus, and for four, I will not turn away.—Eight times is this formula repeated, expressive of coming judgment upon Damascus (Syria), Gaza (the Philistines), Tyre, Edom, Ammon, Moab, Judah, and Israel: the point of "Judah and Israel" occupying the seventh and eighth places being a severe rebuke for their apostasy. Whereas Israel should have been God's witness to the nations around, their unfaithfulness to Him had brought them down to the level of these nations, with whom they are here associated in judgment.

11.—Because he did pursue his brother with the sword.—"Israel had been taught from the first to regard Edom as a brother. Moses thus addressed them, 'Thus saith Israel thy brother' (Num. xx. 14), but Edom refused to let Israel pass through his land. From the days of Saul the Edomites were ever ready to attack Israel. We have numerous instances of their aggressive warfare recorded in the historical books."—S.C.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 14.—AMOS II.

1.—He burned the bones of the king of Edom into lime.—"Something very like this is recorded in an obscure passage (2 Kings iii. 26), if by the words, "took his eldest son," &c., be understood the son of the king of Edom. Several Jewish and some Christian commentators so understand it."—S.C.

4.—Because they have despised the law of the Lord.—Judah's chief privilege was that "unto them were committed the oracles of God" (Rom. iii. 2). To despise this privilege is here counted their chief sin. "Their lies" means idols, images of false gods.

6.—Because they sold the righteous for silver, &c.—"Four kinds of crimes are condemned in Israel: (1) Unjust treatment or condemnation of the innocent through bribery in the administration of justice. (2) Their thirst for the oppression of the quiet (the meek and lowly) in the land. (3) Their profanation of the name of God by shameless immorality. (4) Desecration of the sanctuary by drinking carousals."—Keil.

12.—Ye gave the Nazarites wine to drink.—"The abstemiousness and ascetic life of the Nazarites were a standing rebuke to the sensual and luxurious. Amos speaks of the drinking of wine as a habit marked by excess in his day (ii. 8, iv. 1, vi. 6)."—S.C.

THURSDAY, MARCH 15.—AMOS III.

1.—The whole family which I brought up from the land of Egypt.—Both Judah and Israel are included in this expression.

2.—Therefore I will punish you.—The thought is the same as Heb. xii. 6—8.

3.—Can two walk together?—"Before making any further announcement of the judgment of God, Amos propounds in enigmatical language his right and duty to prophesy. The illustrations are evidently selected with the view of showing that the utterances of the Prophet originate with God. This is obvious in ver. 7 and 8."—Keil. "The key to these short parables that follow is in ver. 7 and 8."—S.C. The words "unless they be agreed," as any Hebrew concordance will show, refer to meeting together at an appointed place; and as the word is used in Exod. xxv. 22, xxix. 42, in reference to the "mercy seat" and "altar," the appointed meeting-places of God and his people, it suggests that here the first qualification of a prophet is that he should have met with God, i.e., have been reconciled to God. The New Testament parallel is John x. 9, spoken of under shepherds, He who is Chief Shepherd being also the door into the fold. To "go in and out and find pasture" is the shepherd's work. See Num. xxvii. 17. "The two who walk together are Jehovah and the Prophet."—Keil.

6.—Shall there be evil in a city?—In the sense of calamity, not moral evil.

8.—The lion hath roared.—The lion is Jehovah (see i. 2). Let Israel fear and repent, or he will find himself as a prey to be seized, as a bird to be snared.

12.—As the shepherd taketh out of the mouth of the lion two legs, or a piece of an ear.—"The most worthless parts. Only a remnant impoverished and despised should be rescued."—S.C.

FRIDAY, MARCH 16.—AMOS IV.

1.—Hear this word, ye kine of Bashan.—"In figurative language princes and the mighty are spoken of as fatlings of Bashan (Ez. xxxix., applying here as well to the dissolute nobles of Samaria as to their wives."—S.C.

4.—Come to Bethel, and transgress.—Spoken in irony. Bethel and Gilgal were places both consecrated by early associations (Gen. xxviii. 19, Josh. v. 2—9) and soon desecrated by idolatrous worship. So has it been with the so-called holy places at Jerusalem. Bring your sacrifices every morning.—"There was no want of diligence in their 'will worship.' Every morning the accustomed sacrifice was offered as at Jerusalem."—S.C. So is it now in Christendom.

5.—Offer (by burning, marg.) a sacrifice of thanksgiving with leaven.—"This was expressly forbidden (Lev. ii. 11). In two cases only, in which the offering was not to be burned, was leaven allowed" (Lev. xxiii. 17, and vii. 13, 14). Self-will was their only rule." Proclaim and publish the free offerings.—"The whole is said in irony. For some there are who appreciate magnificently the gifts and services which they offer to God."—Pusey.

12.—Because I will do this unto thee, prepare to meet thy God, O Israel.—He does not say what He is about to do, but interrupts the record of the threat by a last appeal to Israel to repent. See a parallel in Ps. ii. 12, and for a New Testament parallel Luke xii. 58, 59.

13.—The Lord, The God of hosts, is his name.—"The God of hosts" implies one to be met who has heavenly hosts at his command. Luke xiv. 31, 32, teaches us how alone this can be done. The folly of those who refuse to sue for peace is described Job xv. 25, 26. God's "conditions of peace" are given in 2 Cor. v. 20, 21. He sends the "embessage" to us.

SATURDAY, MARCH 17.—AMOS V.

4.—Seek ye Me, and ye shall live.—See this thought expanded in Isa. lv. 3, where "mercy" and "abundant pardon" are promised.

5.—But seek not Bethel, &c.—Those who are truly seeking the Lord must cease from seeking Him in idolatrous connections. "They sought Bethel and Gilgal as if God had chosen to put his name there. But there He was not to be found."—S.C. "Beersheba" was another of the holy places "where God had revealed Himself to the patriarchs, and where their descendants had set up idolatrous worship."—S.C.

8.—Seek Him that maketh the seven stars and Orion.—R.V. better, "The Pleiades and Orion." These two striking constellations, upon which Amos, when he watched his herds by night, must often have gazed, attest God's glory and his handiwork (Ps. xix. 1). In Job ix. 9, the Lord is spoken of as the Maker of "Orion and Pleiades."

25.—Have ye offered unto Me sacrifices and offerings in the wilderness?—These words and those which follow are quoted by Stephen (Acts vii. 42) to prove the idolatry into which Israel fell from the time of Sinai onwards, which he regards as a "judicial delivering up" (Alford) on account of the worship of the golden calf. "Gave them up to worship the host of heaven." See as a parallel instance of "gave them up" in the case of the heathen, Rom. i. 24. "Have ye offered, &c.," is equivalent to a denial. During the forty years even the circumcision of the children was suspended (Josh. v. 5—7) and the sacrificial worship fell more and more into disuse."—Keil. In the meantime the seeds of idolatry grew and brought forth abundantly in Canaan (Judges ii. 12).

OUTLINES PREPARED BY HENRY THORNE.

Sunday Afternoon, March 18.

THE PALSIED MAN.—MARK ii. 1—12.

THE miracles of Christ were not merely credentials of his Messiahship and revelations of his power, but one of the most important of the methods He employed for the purpose of imparting lessons of life and godliness. In the graphic story now before us, note :—

(1) THE STIRRING NEWS (ver. 1).—"Noised" (Gr. akouō, to bear). They were bearers of good tidings who told of the presence of Jesus (Is. lii. 7). His presence secured a good congregation (ver. 2). There is no greater attraction for the human heart than the manifest presence of Christ (John xii. 32). Comp. the small house with the large heart of Jesus—"Yet there is room" (Luke xiv. 22). Room enough there for all who come (John vi. 37).

(2) THE SPOKEN WORD.—"He preached the Word." Note here (a) The Preacher.—Jesus was anointed that He might preach (Isa. lxi. 1), and therefore He spoke with authority (Matt. vii. 29). (b) The Method.—He preached (Gr. laleō, to talk). It was quiet conversational discourse, rather than the cry of the herald. The method was wisely adapted to the place. (c) The Theme.—"The Word." When Jesus quoted Scripture, He called the quotation "the Word of God" (Mark vii. 13). We see here the unity of Scripture. Christ speaks not of words, but "the Word." The Scriptures were written in different languages, in different ages, in different forms, and by a great variety of men, but one idea pervades the whole. The house has many stones in it, but it is one house (John x. 35). The Scriptures may fitly be called "the Word of God," because they express the mind of God. The words of all preachers should harmonise with this Word. Comp. Acts xvi. 32; Rom. vi. 17, and xvi. 17.

(3) THE SICK MAN (ver. 3).—Sir Risdon Bennett tells us that Luke uses the technical Greek word for pronounced paralysis (see Luke v.). The sick man represents fallen humanity. His weakness, doubtless, originated in his sinfulness (see ver. 5, comp. 1 Cor. xi. 30); his case was humanly speaking hopeless (comp. Eph. ii. 12); his sickness made him conscious of his need of the Great Physician (comp. ver. 17).

(4) THE SYMPATHETIC HELPERS (vv. 3, 4).—Note: (a) Their Number ("four").—Four to carry one. United effort is often needed in Christian service (comp. "striving together," Phil. i. 27). (b) Their Difficulty.—The crowd. Good works are often impeded by serious obstacles ("Satan," 1 Thess. ii. 18; "The wind" Mark vi. 48). (c) Their Perseverance.—"Uncovered the roof." "Difficulties are things to be overcome." (d) Their Inspiration.—See this in "their faith." Comp. Heb. xi. 32—34.

(5) THE SAVING POWER (ver. 5).—Note: (a) The Pardon of Sin.—Sin forgiven first (comp. Ps. ciii. 3); fully ("thy sins"); at once ("are forgiven") assuredly. The man was told he was forgiven (Eph. i. 7; Acts xiii. 38). (b) The Healing of the Body.—This was immediate ("straightway") and complete ("took up the bed," ver. 12). (c) The Manifestation of Power.—The healed man a living witness. He took up his bed. Let us take up the cross—the cause of Jesus, and of humanity, and thus show the reality of his salvation (1 Pet. ii. 12).

(6) THE SMOTHERED SNEER (vv. 6—8).—Cold rationalism sits by to criticise the beneficence of Christ. Reason is degraded when it reflects upon the Saviour. A higher standard of reason found expression in the "Why?" of Christ. For the answer, see Rom. viii. 7.

(7) THE SATISFACTORY SEQUEL.—God was glorified (ver. 12). The men honoured Jesus. Jesus put honour upon the faith of the men (ver. 5), and the people glorified God. We see here God glorified by the work of Jesus (comp. Luke ii. 14), and in the restored man (1 Cor. vi. 20; 1 Pet. ii. 9).

International S. S. Lesson.

Sunday Afternoon, March 18.

THE SON REJECTED.

MATT. xxi. 33—46. Golden Text: John i. 2.

Ver. 33.—Husbandmen.—The recognised leaders and teachers of God's people, the people themselves being represented by the vineyard. Went into a far country.—So God seems to men to be absent. He thus leaves us free to obey or disobey. Could we see God our faithfulness would not be tested. Let us not think that because we do not see Him, He does not see, and does not care.

Ver. 34.—His servants (i.e., prophets).—Extraordinary messengers specially sent by God to call his people to repentance and obedience. See in the householder's long waiting, and in the sending forth of these messengers, one after another, his marvellous patience and forbearance (Rom. ii. 4, 5). That they might receive the fruits of it.—I.e., "the householder's share, as his stipulated rent for the use of the vineyard. It is the system known in India at this day as ryot rent; the cultivator undertakes to give the owner a certain fixed quantity yearly from the produce of the farm, and all that is over belongs to himself."—Arnot.

Ver. 35.—Beat one (Jer. xxxvii. 15, xxxviii. 6). Killed another (Jer. xxvi. 20—23). And stoned another (2 Chron. xxiv. 21. See also Luke xxiii. 37).

Ver. 36.—Other servants more than the first, &c.—(2 Kings xvii. 13, 14; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 15, 16; Neh. ix. 26. Also Acts vii. 52; Heb. xi. 36, 37).

Ver. 37.—But last of all he sent unto them his son, saying, They will reverence my son.—It is of greatest importance to observe how sublimely Jesus speaks of Himself as the Son, as one altogether distinct in position, relationship, and nature from Elijah, Isaiah, Moses, or any of the Prophets. They were but servants, human messengers: He the only and beloved Son (see Mark xii. 6; Luke xx. 13; Heb. i. 1—3, iii. 5, 6). They will reverence my son.—To do this they must know him as the son. From this, then, it is plain that the Jewish leaders did to some extent know who Jesus was. This knowledge was not clear and full, as we know from 1 Cor ii. 8. In their inmost hearts, almost unconsciously, they felt his truth, goodness, and authority, though the stubborn self-will refused to acknowledge Him. Teachers may make effective use of this. Apply it to those who know in their hearts that Jesus deserves their best, their all, but who will scarcely admit his claims, even to themselves, simply because they do not wish to yield to Him.

Ver. 38.—Come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance.—What absolute madness, for, of course, the owner will avenge his son's murder. Show that this in no way exaggerates the folly of wilful sin. "To crucify Christ by the hands of the Romans, or to crucify Him afresh through unbelief, was, and is, a short-sighted policy."—Arnot.

Ver. 39.—Cast Him out of the vineyard.—So Jesus three days after was "cast out," "delivered to the Gentiles" (Heb. xiii. 11—13).

Ver. 43.—The kingdom of God.—God's visible kingdom or Church on earth. Had the Jewish nation received Christ, they would have been the centre of that kingdom; but, rejecting Him, both their city and their Temple were destroyed, and their position of privilege was given to the Gentiles (Rom. xi. 25, 26).

Ver. 44.—Whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken.—The truth taught is that opposing Christ and his truth (or rejecting Him, which is only another form of opposition), is like stumbling over a great stone. It remains immovable, but we are wounded. Further, the injury will be in proportion to the weight and impetus of the man moving against it. Sinning against great light is like rushing against a rock with terrible force. Self-injury is the necessary result of opposing Christ. But on whomsoever it shall fall it will grind him to powder.—This refers to the awful overwhelming of Christ's enemies by his own power put forth in the day of judgment. The stumbling upon the stone is the rejection of Christ by unbelievers: the falling of the stone is the rejection and condemnation of unbelievers by Christ in the day of account.

This parable is an awful warning against

WILFUL SELFISHNESS.

Let us seize on his inheritance is the keynote. Here is the root of all evil: the desire to have our way, and so to refuse obedience to Jesus. These Jewish teachers, the husbandmen, were in charge of God's people, to rule, and teach, and train them for God. But they only thought of themselves, their ease, power, honour. They despised the people, and they feared not God. "They loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." Now Jesus came condemning their selfishness, claiming what was due to the people of God on the one hand, and to Him, as the Son of God, on the other. They must either acknowledge Him, confessing their sin, or reject and oppose Him. Too proud and selfish to submit, they grow more and more wilful, more and more wicked. The more clearly He speaks, the harder they become, till, in simple desperation, they plot his death. "It was only wilfulness, in its ripe form, that nailed Christ on the cross."—Glover.

Teachers will do well to press home this lesson against wilfulness—this proud "I shall," no matter who suffers, what consequences follow, or what laws are broken. Show that the husbandmen began by simply overlooking their responsibility to the householder. They never thought of violence, much less murder; least of all, murder of his only son. They only wanted to enjoy what was not theirs, privileges without the duties that go with them. Respect for law, a deep sense of the force of the words, "I ought" or "I ought not," lies at the very foundation of a good life. "How then can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?"

Children even are greatly tempted to grasp privilege and overlook responsibility. They like to receive the love and care of parents and others, and of God, but forget what is due to those parents and to God. They like to hear of Jesus as the Friend of children and of sinners: do they also think of what is due to him as Lord and Saviour?

ILLUSTRATION.

The rejector rejected.—A prisoner lay in his prison cell awaiting trial. He was hopeless and yet careless: no friend had he to plead his case. Presently the door opens, and a stranger, humbly dressed, but kind and gentle in appearance enters, and pleads to be allowed his confidence. A surly refusal is the only answer given. This entreaty is repeated day by day with no better result. At last the time of trial arrives. The prisoner walks towards the court with despair in his heart. He enters, glances up to the judgment seat, and lo! there upon it is seated the very man who had so often entreated him to trust him with his case! To-day, Christ Jesus asks our trust and love: to-morrow we must, if we reject Him, meet Him as the stern and awful Judge.

Mission Appeals.

PASTOR O. TIDMAN, Park-street, Blaenavon, near Pontypool, Mon., urgently appeals for garments of every description for distressed families. The very severe weather, he says, has made sad disclosures, which compel him to do all that is possible to alleviate some of the suffering both among the destitute and the sick.

THE Y.W.C.A. AT BRISTOL are making an endeavour to secure two houses which are for sale, to hold meetings in connection with the various branches of the work and to provide accommodation for classes and committees, and for tired workers. £4500 are needed to secure, furnish, and open free of debt. Particulars from Miss LURY, Bellevue, Upper Redland, Bristol.

A CLERGYMAN'S WIFE appeals for help to enable her to clear off a debt of £150 upon a village church, where the population are chiefly agriculturists, and not able to help. She has worked very hard for upwards of five years to raise the money for building a small schoolroom and church, the accomplishment of which gives great satisfaction, but the debt is a great burden. Contributions thankfully acknowledged by Mrs. LISTER, Thornthwaite Vicarage, Ripley, Yorks.

HEIDELBERG.—In Feb. last eleven children fourteen years old, who had received the usual religious instruction in the Old Catholic Church, together with fourteen men and several women, also of the O. C. religion, were received into the Protestant Church. Several persons also took a similar step at an earlier date.—Evan. Kirch Anzeiger.

NEW VERSION OF THE SCRIPTURES FOR WESTERN AFRICA.—Mr. Héli Chatelain, till recently a member of Bishop Taylor's American Episcopal Methodist Mission on the West Coast of Africa, has laboured at Malange, inland from Loanda, among people of the same race as those described by Livingstone, and he is visiting England and America to obtain the means for providing the Scriptures for "those studious, industrious and progressive natives." He reports that in Angola there are plenty of native scholars able and willing to be of use to the man who sets to work translating the Scriptures into the principal dialects, only they cannot afford to give their services without payment. The Committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society have expressed to Mr. Chatelain their readiness to undertake the work he desires, as soon as they have sufficient preliminary evidence that the translations will be correct and satisfactory.—Bible Society Reporter. [See Mr Chatelain's article on Bishop Taylor's African Missions, p. 6 of this number.]

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Church Missionary Intelligencer for March contains a number of letters describing the progress and bearing testimony to the value of the Special Mission to India.

On Friday last Rev. Bartholomew Edwards, rector of Ashill, Watton, Norfolk, who is the oldest clergyman in England, attained his hundredth year. Mr. Edwards is in good health, and is constantly present at meetings in his parish.

Rev. James Henry, who has for the past six years been Clerical Secretary of the London Association in aid of the Moravian Missions, has been appointed Association Secretary for the West Midland District of the Church Pastoral Aid Society.

Mrs. Isaac Scott, of Brow Top, Workington, who died a few days ago, has bequeathed to the rector and churchwardens of St. Michael's parish, Workington, the sum of £1000, the income of which has to be given annually to the deserving poor of the parish.

The Church Missionary Intelligencer for March contains an interesting sketch of the late Sir Robert Montgomery, by General Maclagan. It is much feared that there will be a deficiency of £10,000 or £12,000 in the Society's income this year, unless special donations are forthcoming before March 31.

According to a telegram received from East Africa, Rev. E. C. Gordon was safe in Uganda on Nov. 17 last, and King Mwanga was friendly. The mail received on Feb. 13 brought the news that difficulties had arisen at Mpwapwa between the German settlers and the Wa-Gogo, and bloodshed was only averted by the intervention of the C.M.S. missionaries.

Rev. Canon F. R. Wynne is preaching a course of sermons in St. Matthias' Church, Dublin, on Sunday evenings in Lent, on "Obstacles to Christian Earnestness." On Sunday week the subject was "Frivolity," and the preacher spoke in simple, yet searching language about the many lives wasted in frivolity, which, he said, arose often from want of reverence, want of conscience, and want of heart.

An impressive manifestation of Christian Unity, says a correspondent of The Rock, has occurred at Dunmow, Essex. The venerable and revered vicar of the parish, Rev. W. L. Scott, was called to his rest and reward on Feb. 22. The rev. gentleman was deservedly respected by all classes and creeds of his parishioners, his catholicity of spirit securing for him the goodwill of Churchmen and Nonconformists alike. During the short illness which preceded his death, frequent inquiries were made at the vicarage by Rev. J. B. Dadd, the Congregational minister, and prayer was regularly offered at the chapel for the vicar's recovery. At the interment the church was crowded by members of all denominations. The local papers contain a touching tribute to the Christian character of the late vicar from the pen of the Congregational minister.

METHODIST.

During the last eighteen months Rev. Peter Mackenzie has lectured no less than seven hundred times.

Rev. T. Waugh has held a special mission at Leeds. Scores of men and women came out boldly and decided for Christ.

The labours of the Wesleyan chaplain at Malta have been much blessed of late, and there have been many conversions in connection with special services held at the Soldiers' Rest.

A blessed work of grace has been going on at Willington, Bishop Auckland. As the result of special evangelistic services, about two hundred persons have professed conversion.

The threat of the squire to evict any of his tenants who gave shelter to the Methodist preacher at Abberley, near Stourport, has been revoked, owing to the publicity given to the persecution by Rev. J. E. Clapham.

The March number of Gleanings in Harvest Fields contains a portrait of the native pastor, Rev. Sun Tzu Ch'un, who has been a useful agent of the Chinese missions of the Methodist New Connexion for sixteen years.

In connection with the Benevolent Society at Clapton-park Tabernacle, during the past fortnight Rev. T. Jackson has distributed, through the kindness of a West-end gentleman, ten tons of coal among the destitute.

The meetings in connection with the Wesleyan Mission at Wardour Hall continue to be well attended, and the hall is usually crowded in every part. Services are held daily, and there are constantly interesting cases of conversion.

The members of Mr. C. R. Parsons' well-known men's Bible-class, at Old Market-street, Bristol, now number seven hundred. Mr. Parsons is anxious to have the number increased to one thousand. He has started a Bible-class for lads on Sunday mornings which has a membership of ninety-six.

Mr. Josiah Nix, of the Wesleyan West-end Mission, Wardour Hall, Little Chapel-street, Wardour-street, W., asks all tradesmen and others who want labourers, porters, painters, carpenters, tailors, tailoresses, &c., to please let him know, and he can supply them at once, as he has a large number of applications for employment.

In the course of an address at a Wesleyan District Convention at Portsmouth, last week, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes urged that a Rescue Home should at once be established in that town. He hoped those who had resources, and were the stewards of God's bounty, would provide the necessary means to establish a Home, as there are godly women who have enough moral courage and devotion to Christ to do the work.

The Methodist New Connexion have recently appointed Dr. W. W. Shrubshall as medical missionary to China: he will sail about the middle of this month.

Rev. J. E. Clapham announces that in addition to the large mission centres established in London, Manchester, Birmingham, and Hull, a centre is to be created at Bristol; Wesley Chapel, Leeds, is to be turned into a mission hall; and Sans-street Chapel, Sunderland, has been purchased by some energetic laymen, that it may be made the scene of aggressive evangelism in that town. It is also proposed to convert the chapel at Oxford-place, Leeds, into a mission centre.

BAPTIST.

Mr. Spurgeon says that until recently he knew by name and by face all the five thousand members of his church.

The Baptist Magazine for March contains an excellent portrait, with biographical sketch, of Rev. James R. Wood, of Upper Holloway.

Rev. T. R. Stevenson, pastor of St. Mary's-gate Chapel, Derby, has announced that as soon as he can make arrangements he will resign his pastorate.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon presided last week at a meeting for the formation of a church at Beulah Baptist Chapel, Thornton Heath, under the pastorate of Rev. J. W. Harrald. Seventy-nine persons have already joined.

At the annual congregational meeting of the Church at King's-road, Reading, held last week, Rev. C. A. Davis stated that 80 members were added to the church during the past year, and that a village chapel had been erected at West Ilsley at a cost of £400.

On Monday next a special farewell meeting will be held at Regent's-park Chapel (near Portland-road Station), W., to take leave of Rev. J. H. and Mrs. Weeks and Mr. Arthur D. Slade, proceeding to the Congo on the 19th inst. Rev. F. B. Meyer will preside, and deliver a special address.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. William Ross, of Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, received into his church thirty new members at the last communion.

It is expected that steps will shortly be taken towards forming a congregation at Tulse-hill, S.W., where a site for a church was purchased a few years ago.

Partick Established Church, Glasgow, has over 700 names on its communion roll, of whom 403 have joined the church during the past eighteen months.

The number of students attending New College, Edinburgh, this session is 174, which is believed to be the largest in any Theological College out of Germany.

Rev. Dr. Aird, of Creich, yielding to the pressure put upon him to reconsider his decision as to the moderatorship of the Free Church, writes, stating that he places himself in the hands of the Church.

Mr. William R. W. Gardner and Mr. Matthew Lockhead have been accepted for service by the Foreign Mission Committee of the Free Church of Scotland, and appointed to the Keith-Falconer Mission in South Arabia.

During the past year Dr. Donald Fraser's congregation at Marylebone have raised the sum of £3447, of which £1425 was for missionary and benevolent purposes. The number of names on the communion roll of the church is nine hundred.

Rev. Dr. Peddie celebrated the sixtieth year of his ministry in connection with Bristo U.P. Church, Edinburgh, last Thursday. Addresses were presented from the Edinburgh Presbytery, and the session, trustees, and managers of the congregation, besides a cheque for 200 guineas.

The Jewish Mission Committee, of the Church of Scotland, are anxious to obtain the services of a missionary to be the head of their station at Smyrna. To a man whose sympathies are with Jewish Missions it presents a field of the utmost usefulness. Communications should be addressed to Rev. John Alison, D.D., 1, South Lauder-road, Edinburgh.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Mr. Alfred Thompson was, on Monday evening, at Camden-road Chapel, ordained as a missionary to Nagercoil, Travancore, South India, in connection with the London Missionary Society.

The American Board appeal for six new men for their mission in Madura, South India. This mission field embraces about ten thousand square miles and has a population of a little over two millions of souls.

At the annual meeting of Marlborough Chapel, Old Kent-road, London, the pastor (Rev. H. E. Arkell) reported that there are now 500 members on the church roll, nearly 1600 schools in the four Sunday-schools.

Rev. James Sleigh, of the London Missionary Society, has arrived in London after labouring for upwards of thirty years as a missionary at Lifu, Loyalty Islands, South Pacific. Rev. G. H. Lea, from Central Africa, has also arrived in England.

On Sunday morning the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, with several members of the Corporation, attended Divine service at Finsbury Chapel, Moorfields, where a sermon was preached by Rev. T. Kench, on behalf of the London Philanthropic Society, whose object is to relieve the poor in all parts of the Metropolis, by means of gifts of bread and coal during the winter months.

At the annual meeting of Christ Church, Westminster-road (Rev. Newman Hall), it was stated that the number of church members is 940. There are 13 schools, 5000 scholars, and 450 teachers. In connection with the Southwark and Lambeth Mission to the working classes, 3000 visits were made, and 5000 visits by the City missionary. 500 temperance pledges were taken during the year. The sum total of contributions for the year was £4503.

At the annual meeting of the Camberwell-green church held on Thursday week, Dr. Clement Clemance, (pastor), presiding, it was reported that the membership of the church is 500, there having been an increase of 100 during the past four years. In addition to pew rents, over £1300 has been raised during the year for various purposes.

SALVATION ARMY.

Several officers sail for Australia shortly.

A new barracks has been opened at Hull, where the word has been much blessed of late.

Commissioner Smith has returned from a tour through Holland, Sweden, and Denmark, and reports most hopefully of the work in those countries.

Staff-Captain Fry reports encouragingly of the work at St. Neots, Hunts; during a recent visit upwards of fifty converts were "sworn in" as soldiers.

The Jamaica War Cry now has a circulation of 5000 weekly. None of the other secular or religious papers in the island have yet reached this number.

A work of revival is going on at Findochty, N.B. Captain Gilroy says, "Souls are being saved every night. Right through the village there are singing and prayer."

An illustrated Parisian journal, Vie Moderne, gives a detailed account of the rise and working of the Salvation Army. Statements of fact are made in an impartial manner.

A public reception was accorded to four Salvationists who returned to Torquay after undergoing seven days' imprisonment for taking part in a procession accompanied by music on a Sunday.

Commissioner Railton is paying a visit to Germany for the purpose of seeing if some better understanding with the authorities cannot be obtained. He is also visiting the Continent generally, looking out for buildings.

Four missionaries in Algeria have written to General Booth, asking him to send officers to commence work there. An English gentleman, travelling in Japan, is anxious that the Salvation Army should begin operations in the Land of the Rising Sun.

Mr. Colman, of the well-known firm of mustard manufacturers, has been inspecting Salvation Army work in Ceylon. He was much pleased with what he saw of the work in Kandy, and reports himself delighted with what he hears of it all over the island.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Successful Gospel services have been held in Claggan Presbyterian Church, by Mr. Jas. Thompson, of the Irish Evangelisation Society.

A midnight mission has been restarted in Cork. Some years ago a very blessed rescue work was accomplished by the members of this Society.

Another pleasing instance of Christian unity has taken place in Dublin. Rev. A. Rentoul, Presbyterian minister, and his elders, assisted at Gospel services in the Sandymount Methodist Church, last week, while Rev. Wm. Harpur, Methodist minister, and his leaders, are assisting at similar services in the Presbyterian Church, this week.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Mr. Thomas R. S. F. Whitty, missionary of the Universities Mission at Mkunazini, Central Africa.—Mr. W. L. Elliston, for ten years missionary in China, in connection with the China Inland Mission.—Rev. Wm. E. Houldey, rector of Etherley, near Bishop Auckland.—Admiral Sir Cooper Key.—Mr. James Jameson, of Dublin, an attached member of the Methodist Church, and a man of primitive zeal and simplicity, at an advanced age.—Rev. Archibald M'Tavish, who has been conducting the services at the Free Church at Kilmallie, Fort William, for three months.

BERLIN CITY MISSION.—Herr Stöcker one of the Berlin Court preachers is resigning the direction of this mission.

BURMAH.—Rev. G. Holbeck writes from Burmah that there is a great movement Christianwards in Mandalay and district; many persons have been baptized. He concludes his letter, which is quoted at length in The Guardian, by a statement that the people are ripe for religious teaching, and an appeal for help.

ST. ETIENNE.—Dr. Hastings-Burroughs states that the Night Refuge at St. Etienne continues to render good service in this inclement weather. In 1887 more than 4500 tramps were housed for the night, and 30,000 bowls of soup distributed. The 30 beds are always occupied and every evening from 10 to 20 destitute people are turned away for want of room. The doctor has it on his heart to do something for discharged prisoners.—Le Journal Religieux.

TONGA.—A telegram from Sydney says that Rev. J. E. Moulton, the Tonga Wesleyan missionary, whose resistance to the action of Mr. Shirley Baker, in influencing King George in his persecution of the native Wesleyans some time ago caused such a stir, is in Sydney. He has come to report to the Wesleyan Conference the results of his missionary work on the island. He states that things are gradually quietening, but that there is still a good deal of underhand prosecution, and many Christians who were deported are still afraid to return home, while many others are equally afraid to show their former allegiance to the old Methodist faith. On the whole, however, a brighter time is dawning for the Wesleyans than they have had for years.

REGULATED VICE IN INDIA.—Questions on the subject of the appalling revelations made by Mr. A. S. Dyer with regard to India, were asked in the House of Commons by Mr. Williamson and Professor Stuart. Sir J. Gorst, the Under Secretary of State for India, said that a copy of the publication should be sent to the Government of India, and that a detailed report on the various allegations would be called for. "If anything like the practices alleged by Mr. Dyer prevails in India, measures will be taken to secure that any such practices shall be stopped forthwith."

NORTH KENSINGTON, W.—We have recently opened a young Men's Christian Institute in the parish of St. Andrew's North Kensington, which is situate in a poor district of Kensal Town. In connection with the Institute, we have a spacious reading-room for the use of our members, and we have commenced some evening classes on Bible study. We are hoping to do a good work amongst the young men of the district. We have incurred some small liabilities by furnishing, &c., and are anxious to clear these off as speedily as possible.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

SPANISH & PORTUGUESE CHURCH AID SOCIETY.

THE MOST REV. LORD PLUNKET,

ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN

(Chairman of the Executive Committee),

SAYS:—

"HAVING TWICE VISITED SPAIN AND PORTUGAL FOR THE PURPOSE OF TESTING THE REALITY OF THE WORK, I KNOW IT TO BE A GENUINE ONE."

FUNDS ARE MOST URGENTLY NEEDED FOR THE WORK OF SPREADING THE GOSPEL IN SPAIN AND PORTUGAL.

Contributions will be gratefully received by the ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN, The Palace, St. Stephen's-green, Dublin; or by the Rev. L. S. TUGWELL, 8, Adam-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS

TO THE

ROMAN CATHOLICS.

THE COMMITTEE

MOST URGENTLY APPEAL

For increased CONTRIBUTIONS to the FUNDS of this Society.

Owing to many causes, but partly, it is believed, to Jubilee Collections, the income for 1887 was £2,175 less than that for 1886.

Consequently interesting and successful Mission Work must be abandoned unless contributions amounting to be given within the next three months.

HORACE W. TOWNSEND,
Clerical Secretary and Supt. of Missions.

This Appeal is cordially supported by—
The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of EXETER.
The Rev. Canon HOARE.
The Rev. Canon McCORMICK.
Lord KINNAIRD.
Sir ARTHUR BLACKWOOD, K.C.B.
Lieut.-General Sir ROBERT PHAYRE, K.C.B.

An old friend of the Society offers to contribute £10 before the end of March provided nine or more friends will send similar amounts previous to that date.

Communications should be addressed to the Secretaries, Irish Church Missions, 11, Buckingham-street, London, W.C.

Remittances should be made payable to WILLIAM PASLEY, Lay Secretary. Cheques crossed "Ransom and Co.," and Post Office Orders on Charing-cross.

Homes of Hope,

4, 5, & 6, REGENT SQUARE, GRAY'S-INN ROAD,
LONDON, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted from their previous good character and position to mix with others.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions:—

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case where it is possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent, that every shilling has been spent.

THE FUNDAMENTAL TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.

At the earnest request of a large number of Christian Ministers and Laymen of various Evangelical Churches throughout the country, the Council of the Evangelical Alliance, in July last, agreed to arrange for a series of Meetings at several centres in London, when united Testimony to the Cardinal Truths of the Gospel should be given. The programme of arrangements is given below. While the Meetings are convened by the Evangelical Alliance, the selection of speakers has not been limited to members of the Alliance.

Exeter Hall, Strand, London, Feb. 2, 1888.

Dear Sir,—I desire to bear my testimony to the value of "Allcock's Porous Plasters." I have used them for pains in the side and back, arising from Rheumatic and other causes, never without deriving benefit from their application. They are easily applied, and very comforting. Those engaged, as I am, in public work, which involves exposure to sudden changes of temperature, will do well to keep a supply of "Allcock's Porous Plasters" in their portmanteaux.

ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS act safely, promptly, and effectually; do not burn or blister, but soothe and relieve while curing.

They are the standard remedy for Weak Back, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Colds, Coughs, Sore Throat, Pulmonary and Kidney Difficulties, Malaria, Dyspepsia, Heart, Spleen, Liver, and Stomach Affections, Strains, and all Local Pains.

REV. F. W. MACDONALD,

Handsworth College, Birmingham.

(From a Photograph by Messrs. Wyles & Co., Southport.)

WELL known and much beloved in his own Church (the Wesleyan), his recent Life of Dr. Punshon will introduce Mr. Macdonald to a wider circle, and thereby increase his already great influence and usefulness. Not that this is his first literary effort. For, a few years ago, he wrote an admirable little monograph on "Fletcher of Madeley," for the series of "Men Worth Remembering," published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton. Also, a wise and masterly vindication of "The Dogmatic Principle in Christian Belief," which he delivered as the Fernley Lecture for 1881, was subsequently issued by the Wesleyan Book Room. But his biography of Punshon is both on a larger canvass and deals with a more popular subject. To the preparation of that volume he gave much time and pains, and he now has his reward in the emphatic approval with which it has been received on every side. Its reviewers have not withheld their due praise of the ability and candour with which, while claiming for Dr. Punshon a supreme and even unique position as the impassioned orator, he shows at the same time why he cannot be matched as a lyrist with Keble of the "Christian Year," or, as a preacher, with many examples of deeper thoughtfulness or of simpler pathos.

Frederic W. Macdonald was born at Leeds in 1842. His father, Rev. George B. Macdonald, was an eloquent and powerful preacher of the same Church. His grandfather, likewise a Wesleyan minister, called into the work by Wesley himself, also made his mark in the Connexion, as the editor for some time of its serials, and as the author of an excellent memoir of the great preacher and commentator, Rev. Joseph Benson. Mr. Macdonald received his education first at St. Peter's School, London, then at Mr. Patrick Neill's, Jersey, and finally at Owen's College, Manchester, where he took first prizes in classics, in the Greek Testament, and in English literature. Seriously disposed from childhood, in spite of high spirits and a keen sense of humour, he joined the Methodist Society when but fourteen years of age. His early studies and hopes were directed to the law but the conviction of his call to the ministry gradually assumed strength and clearness, and at length, partly through the influence of Mr. Punshon, he offered himself for acceptance to the Wesleyan Conference. The rule that every candidate for the ministerial office should pass through a course of training in the Theological Institution was not then in force; and so, his powers as a speaker having been tested and proved by much preaching and lecturing, he was at once appointed to the Burslem Circuit. There he spent his full term of three years, achieving an instant and conspicuous popularity; and there also (by the way) he won the heart of the most sweet woman who for the past twenty-one years has been "the angel in his house." The rest of his circuit life was passed in Liverpool, Manchester, Waterloo, Southport, London, and Bristol, with ever-growing favour and usefulness. Then at the Conference of 1881 he was elected as the first occupant of the Theological Chair in the newly-erected college at Handsworth, Birmingham.

As a public speaker Mr. Macdonald possesses—to some extent, no doubt, by inheritance — great natural advantages. He has a fine intellectual aspect, an exquisite elocution, a never-failing fluency of speech, and a voice which, if not decidedly powerful, is yet most mellifluous and winning. To some men of course such gifts would be fatal; but Mr. Macdonald, regarding all these things as of little value by themselves, has maintained an unflagging self-culture by the approved methods, has kept himself well abreast of the highest thought of the times, and is always in touch with the "live" questions of our current life and society.

As a Preacher, perhaps Mr. Macdonald does not dominate the multitude equally with his very popular father; but, if not, this is compensated, dynamically, by the impact of a higher intellectuality upon a more influential, if less numerous, class of hearers.

In his Chair he exerts an influence over the students of a highly stimulating and quickening kind. And while true to the teaching of evangelical Arminianism, as in duty bound, he guides them also over the entire ground of historical and comparative theology. Here, however, as in all other practical spheres, "the tree is known by its fruits," and it is yet too early to apply this test.

We might have referred to other sides of the rich personality before us; such as Mr. Macdonald's quick sympathy with everything that is truly human; or the readiness, only too prompt for his not-robust physique, with which he complies with the incessant requests for his services, not on Sundays only, but often on the evenings of days that have been severely taxed in the lecture-room; or his passionate love of books and the luxury he finds in them—a luxury not selfish however, for he makes many others sharers of his joy by delightful lectures on "A Kempis and Bunyan," "England a Hundred Years Ago," "An Hour in My Library," &c., &c.

But no notice of Mr. Macdonald ought to omit his great social charm. The writer of a notice of Dr. Punshon's life in The Scotsman complains of the too sombre tone of the book, and ventures the guess that "the biographer is a cheerless man who never smiles." Never was a worse shot. Those who know Mr. Macdonald intimately are well aware of fountains of wit and humour in him only too full and swift.

PILGRIMAGE.

Ezra viii. 21—30. Matt. xxv. 14—30.

By the river of Ahava
We had knelt to ask our God
That his hand would be upon us,
Leading safely by the road,
Till our feet should once more stand
Where our hearts desired to be,
Even in our fatherland,
O Jerusalem, in thee.

By the river of Ahava,
Speaks our leader to us then:
Lo, the sacred vessels counted,
Keep them safely, watch like men,
Till your burdens shall be laid
Where our hearts desire to be,
Till our feet at length be stayed,
O Jerusalem, in thee.

By the river of Ahava,
Took we up our burdens rare;
Toilsome days and nights went o'er,
But within the city fair,
When we laid our treasure down,
Gladder hearts there might not be
Than were ours. And this the crown
Of our gladness was to see
All the silver and the gold
We had guarded with our lives,
In the weary days of old,
Shine with lustre new and rare
In the Temple service fair.

. . . .

By the river of your days
Ye have knelt, to ask your God
For his blessing on your life,
For his guidance on the road;
Gifts of mercy manifold,
Costly treasures lie around,
Gifts outweighing all the gold
That in Persian land was found.
Speaks your Leader to you now:
"Take those treasures, use them well,
Till before my Throne you bow."
O the gladness, who can tell,
When you hear the "Well done" spoken,
Enter on the rest unbroken? A. J. G.

BETHEL MISSION.—The Battersea branch of this Mission recently held a public meeting to inaugurate the opening of the Liberty Hall, Henley-street, Battersea Park-road. Mr. Richards read a gratifying statement of work hitherto done at Chelsea and Westminster. Various friends gave addresses, cheering on the workers in their endeavours to evangelise the people. Mr. J. ABRAHAM: GOD'S FRIEND.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

II.—The Divine Summons.

Genesis xii. 1.

Whilst Abraham was living quietly in Ur, protesting against the idolatry of his times, with all its attendant evils, and suffering bitter persecution for conscience sake, "The God of glory appeared unto him, and said, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and come into the land which I shall show thee" (Acts vii. 2, 3).

In what form the glorious God appeared, we cannot tell, but in all probability it was as the Angel of the Covenant. For it was in this way that He appeared in after days to Abraham on the plains of Mamre, and to Joshua by the walls of Jericho, and to many others. How and when it came we do not know; it may have been in the still and solemn night, or in the evening hour of meditation, or amid the duties of his position; but suddenly there shone from heaven a great light round about him, and a visible form appeared in the heart of the glory, and a voice spoke the message of heaven in his ear. Not thus does God now appear to us, and yet it is certain that He still speaks in the silence of the waiting spirit, impressing his will, and saying, "Get thee out."

This same voice has often spoken since. It called Elijah from Thisbe, and Amos from Tekoa; Peter from his fishing nets, and Matthew from his toll-booth; Cromwell from his farm in Huntingdon, and Luther from his cloister at Erfurt. It ever sounds the perpetual summons of God, "Come out from her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues"; "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing." Has it not come to you? Strange, if it has not. Yet, if it has, let nothing hinder your obedience; strike your tents, and follow where the God of glory beckons; and in that word come, understand that He is moving on in front, and that if you would have Him, you must follow.

(1) This Call involved Hardship.—He was a childless man. He had sufficient for the supply of his needs. He was deeply attached to those who were united to him by the close ties of a common nature. It was no small matter for him to break up his camp, to tear himself from his nearest and dearest, and to start for a land which, as yet, he did not know.

And so must it be always. The summons of God will ever involve a wrench from much that nature holds dear. We must be prepared to take up our cross daily if we would follow where He points the way. Each step of real advance in the Divine life will involve an altar on which some dear fragment of the self-life has been offered; or a cairn beneath which some cherished idol has been buried.

It is true that the blessedness which awaits us will more than compensate us for the sacrifices which we may have to make. And the prospect of the future may well allure us forward; but still, when it comes to the point, there is certain anguish as the last link is broken, the last farewell said, and the last look taken of the receding home of past happy years. And this is God's winnowing-fan which clearly separates chaff and wheat. Many cannot endure the test so severe and searching in its demands. Like Pliable, they get out of the slough by the side nearest to their home. Like the young man, they go away sorrowful from the one to whom they had come with haste. Shall this be the case with you? Shall you hear the call of God, and shrink back from its cost? Count the cost clearly indeed; but, having done so, go forward in his name and by his strength in whom all things are possible and easy and safe. And in doing so, you will approve yourself worthy to stand with Christ in the regeneration.

(2) But this Call was eminently Wise.—It was wise for Abraham himself. Nothing strengthens us so much as isolation and transplantation. Let a young man emigrate, or be put into a responsible position; let him be thrown on his own resources; and he will develop powers of which there would have been no trace, if he had ever lived at home, dependent on others, and surrounded by luxury. His soul will put forth all her native vigour.

But what is true of the natural qualities of the soul is pre-eminently true of faith. So long as we are quietly at rest amid favourable and undisturbed surroundings, faith sleeps as an undeveloped sinew within us; a thread, a germ, an idea. But when we are pushed out of all these, with nothing but God to look to, then faith grows suddenly into a cable, a monarch oak, a master-principle of the life.

As long as the bird lingers by the nest, it will not know the luxury of flight. As long as the trembling boy holds to the bank, or toes the bottom, he will not learn the ecstasy of battling with the ocean wave. As long as men cling to the material, they cannot appreciate the reality of the promises of God. Abram could never have become Abraham, the father of the faithful, the mighty exemplar of faith, if he had always lived in Ur. No; he must quit his happy home, and fare forth into the untried and unknown, that faith may rise up to all its glorious proportions in his soul.

It may not be necessary for us to withdraw from home and friends; but we shall have to withdraw our heart's deepest dependence from all earthly props and ministers, if ever we are to learn what it is to trust simply and absolutely on the eternal God. It may be that He is breaking away the shores just now, that the ship may glide down upon the ocean wave.

It was wise for the world's sake. On this one man rested the hope for the future of the world. Had he remained in Ur, it is impossible to say whether he would have continued true, or whether he might not have been seriously infected by the idolatry around. Or, even if he had been enabled to resist the adverse influences, his family, and, above all, his children, might have failed beneath the terrible ordeal. Was it not, therefore, wise for the world's sake, for the sake of the Divine purposes, that he should be taken right away from his home and early associations, to find a fresh starting-point for the race, on new soil, and under new conditions.

Was it not thus that, in days of abounding vice and superstition, God led the Pilgrim Fathers to cross the seas, and found a new world, on the inhospitable shores of New England? And has it not been the plan of the Divine government in all ages? It is impossible to move our times, so long as we live beneath their spell; but when once we have risen up, and gone, at the call of God, outside their pale, we are able to react on them with an irresistible power. Archimedes vaunted that he could lift the world, if only he could obtain, outside of it, a pivot on which to rest his lever. Do not be surprised then, if God calls you out to be a people to Himself, that by you He may react with blessed power on the great world of men.

Sometimes, indeed, He bids us stay where we are, to glorify Him there. But oftenest He bids us leave unhallowed companionships, irreligious associations, evil fellowships and partnerships, and at great cost to get ourselves away into the isolation of a land which He promises to reveal.

(3) THIS CALL WAS ACCOMPANIED BY PROMISE.—God's commands are not always accompanied by reasons, but always by promises, expressed or understood. To give reasons would excite discussion, but to give a promise shows that the reason, though hidden, is all sufficient.

We can understand the promise, where the reason might baffle and confuse us. The reason is intellectual, metaphysical, spiritual, but a promise is practical, positive, literal. As a shell encloses a kernel, so do the Divine commands hide promises in their heart.

If this is the command: Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ; this is the promise: And thou shalt be saved. If this is the command: Sell that thou hast and give to the poor; this is the promise: Thou shalt have treasure in heaven. If this is the command: Leave father and mother, houses and lands; this is the promise: Thou shalt have a hundredfold here and everlasting life beyond. If this is the command: Be ye separate; this is the promise: I will receive you and be a Father unto you. So in this case: Though thou art childless, I will make of thee a great nation; though thou art the youngest son, I will bless thee, and make thy name great; though thou art to be torn from thine own family, in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed. And each of those promises has been literally fulfilled.

It may seem that the hardship involved in the summons to exile is too hard to be borne; yet study well the promise which is attached. And as the city which hath foundations looms on the view, it will dwarf the proportions of the Ur in which you have been content to spend your days; and you will rise to be gone. Sometimes, therefore, it seems easier not to dwell on the sacrifice involved, but on the contents of the Divine and gracious promise. Bid people take, and they will give up of themselves. Let men find in Jesus the living water, and, like the woman of Samaria, they will leave their water-pots. Fire the hearts of the young with all the beauty and blessedness of the service of Jesus, and they will not find it so hard to leave nets, and fishing-boats, and friends, to forsake all and follow Him. "When it pleased God to reveal his Son in me . . . . immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood."

(4) THIS CALL TEACHES US THE MEANING OF ELECTION.—Everywhere we find beings and things superiorly endowed over others of the same kind. This is markedly evident in the religious sphere. And there is at first a jarring wonder at the apparent inequality of the Divine arrangements; until we understand that the superior endowment of the few is intended to enable them the better to help and bless the rest. "I will bless thee, and thou shalt be a blessing."

A great thinker feels that his end is approaching; he has made great discoveries, but as yet he has not given them to the world. He selects one of his most promising pupils, and carefully indoctrinates him with his system; very severe on any inaccuracies and mistakes; very careful to give line on line. Why is all this care taken? For the sake of the young man? No; but that he may be able to give to the world those thoughts which his dying master has confided to his care. The young disciple is blessed that he may pass the blessings on to others.

Is not this a glimpse into the mind of God, when He selected Abraham, and in him the whole family of Israel? It was not so much with a view to their personal salvation, though that was included; but that they might pass on the holy teachings and oracles with which they were entrusted. It would have been worse than useless to have given such jewels directly to mankind. As well put a banquet of food before a hungry babe. To say the least, there was no language ready in which to enshrine the sacred thoughts of God. The genius of truth required that the minds of men should be prepared to apprehend its sacred lessons. It was needful that definitions and methods of expression should be well learnt by the people, who, when they had learnt them, might become the teachers of mankind.

The deep question is, whether election has not much more to do with our ministry than with our personal salvation. It brings less of rest, and peace, and joy, than it does of anguish, bitterness, and sorrow of heart. There is no need to envy God's elect ones. They are the exiles, the cross-bearers, the martyrs amongst men; but, careless of themselves, they are all the while learning God's deepest lessons, away from the ordinary haunts of men; and they return to them presently with discoveries that pass all human thought, and are invaluable for human life.

(5) THIS CALL GIVES THE KEY TO ABRAHAM'S LIFE.—It rang a clarion note in the very outset, which continued to vibrate through all his after history. The key to Abraham's life is the word "Separation." He was from first to last the separated man. Separated from his fatherland and kinsfolk; separated from Lot; separated, as a pilgrim and stranger, from the people of the land; separated from his own methods of securing a fulfilment of the promises of God; separated from the rest of mankind by special sorrows, which brought him into closer fellowship with God than has ever been reached by man; separated to high and lofty fellowship in thoughts and plans, which God could not hide from him.

But it was the separation of Faith. There is a form of separation known amongst men, in which the lonely soul goes apart, to secure uninterrupted leisure for devotion; spending the slow-passing hours in vigil, fasting, and prayer; hoping to win salvation as the guerdon of its austerities.

This is not the separation to which God called Abraham, or to which we are summoned, and which is rather the separation, not of those who wish to be saved, but of those who are saved. Not towards the Cross, but from it. Not to merit anything, but, because the heart has seen the Vision of God, and cannot now content itself with the things that once fascinated and entranced it; so that leaving them behind, it reaches out its hands in eager longing for eternal realities, and thus is led gradually and insensibly out and away from the seen to the unseen, and from the temporal to the eternal.

May such separation be ours! May we catch the Divine Call, irradiated by the Divine Promise! And as we hear of that fair land, of that glorious city, of those Divine delights which await us, may we leave and relinquish those lesser and injurious things which have held us too long, spoiling our peace, and sapping our power; and, striking our tents, obey our God's behest, though it may lead us whither we know not.

ANCIENT RELIGIONS.*

IN this new work a great task is undertaken, which Dr. De Pressensé has executed with much ability. Insight, sound and logical thinking, discriminating judgment, and complete mastery of all the topics under discussion, are marks by which the author's mind is impressed upon every page.

A wide, critical survey is taken of ancient religions, in their root-ideas, their source, development and distinctive aspects, as they appear in life, history, creeds, philosophy, or science. He undertakes this as a necessary mental preparation for the study of Christianity, and in order to show that Christianity is not merely the sum and fruitage of religious culture, the synthesis of pre-existing elements under a new name, but a new principle of life introduced by the direct operation of God, a new revelation from heaven, the last and the highest.

The work is divided into five sections. The first deals with religious evolution from its starting-point in prehistoric times, and in the religions of Assyria, Egypt, and Phœnicia. The second and third deal with the Oriental Aryans and the great religions of India. The fourth with Hellenic Paganism and Greek Philosophy. The last treats upon Græco-Roman Paganism and its decline, in which a vivid picture is drawn of the hopeless condition of the pagan world at the coming of Christ. The author, in conclusion, does not relegate the origin of things into the limbo of the unknowable; neither does he countenance the so-called science which imagines that the evolutions of matter explain not only all natural but all spiritual phenomena. He declares conscience to be the organ of knowledge in the moral world, whose voice through all the religions of antiquity was ever uplifted in support of the law of right, even when it was gravely obscured. We thankfully welcome the book, as the result of a study in comparative religion which utters the conviction that the Cross of Christ divides the history of the world; that it interprets the past, that it embraces the future, that it still is, and shall be through the ages, the symbol of victory. Such a work on the development of religious history supplies a distinct want, and will materially help to dispel much of the nebulous philosophy that goes by the name of the science of religion.

* THE ANCIENT WORLD AND CHRISTIANITY. By E. D Pressensé, D.D. 9s. Hodder & Stoughton.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH.

In a letter to a friend, from Cape Palmas, Liberia, dated January 4, acknowledging receipt of remittances and of a box, Mrs. Smith writes:—

"I was very weak, and was waiting to go to Monrovia in November, but on the 6th thirteen of Bishop Taylor's missionaries landed here, and the Bishop had left me, in connection with his agent, Mr. Pratt, to see them settled in their new stations. I was so weak I could do but little, yet I felt I could not leave; so I cried to the Lord for help and strength, and He has wonderfully sustained me. The house in which I am now residing was given me about ten days before the missionaries came. Mr. James Thompson, the President of the Republic, sent me word I could have it; that he would charge me no rent, and I could keep it as long as I liked. It was so providential for me just now, for I was able to take in six of the dear missionaries, and care for them for eight weeks. They were hindered from going to their stations on the river by one of the tribes who have revolted against the Government. A small faction have a town not far from the mouth of the Cavaly river, and they refused to let the missionaries pass. They have been trying to fight for two years, but the Liberians are slow to begin, so these fellows thought if they stopped the missionaries from passing it would hasten on the fight; I think that was their only object.

"After being detained at that town, men, women, and children, for a day and a night, they had to come back to Cape Palmas. Several of them were taken down with fever, and were very sick. Besides attending on the sick in the house I had those outside to look after, making soups and arrowroot, and doing all I could to help them. The kind friends at Old Calabar had given me a good supply of these things, so that I was able to do what no one else here could in supplying their needs. I was so glad to be able to do a little; and just as I had got nearly to the end of my store, the box came, and the flour and oatmeal. What a blessing they were! all the missionaries like them so much."

More than a year before, Mrs. Smith had established a school at a place called Plukie, some distance from Cape Palmas, where there was a great opening for missionary work; when obliged to leave on account of her health she placed it in charge of a Christian woman. Respecting this work she writes: "Among this party the Lord has sent a trained teacher for Plukie, an earnest, devoted Christian, joyfully consecrated to God and to his work in Africa. I am expecting Bishop Taylor will put a house at Plukie this year; if our teacher could stay there she could have eight or ten boys under training, and it would soon be a self-supporting mission. She has given up a good salary at home, and come here to teach for nothing. She has been solicited to commence a school for girls, and, if she is able, will begin in a week's time, having a sewing school that will be such a help to the girls here.

"This house is beautifully situated in the front and main street of the town, where you can look off into the beautiful sea, and have a lovely breeze all the time; so that I named it The Bishop Taylor Mission House, just what is needed here now for the dear missionaries in his work. Surely—

> God moves in a mysterious way,
> His wonders to perform.

The missionaries have nearly all reached their stations now, and all who were ill have got better, except one family. God bless all the people who so nobly helped you to help me, and to help so much in Africa. You do not know all you have done through your faithfulness to me since I have been in Africa."

Remittances and goods for another box will be thankfully received by Mrs. Thomas Davis, Foxrock, co. Dublin.

FACTS FOR FEMALE TRAVELLERS.

Some time ago a gentleman connected with the Vigilance Association, who was seeing a young girl off by train from the North to the West of England, observed on the platform of a certain station a suspicious-looking man, who watched the movements of this girl, and then got into the carriage where she was placed. The gentleman went to the guard and asked him to keep his eye upon the girl; he promised to do so. The first thing he did was to move the girl from that carriage to the one next his own van. At every station he saw that this girl was all right, and spoke a kindly word to her. On arriving at Birmingham he handed her over to a mate who took charge of his train. Thus the girl was shielded by the kindness of railway guards, both of whom are Christians and members of the Railway Mission.

A recent mission was held in a seaport town by one of our evangelists. The company's servants belonging to the boats were invited to attend, and some of them did. Two stewards were converted, and were at once urged to use their position not only for the preaching of the Gospel, but for the protection of young women and ladies who frequently cross by their boats. They gladly accepted printed information on vigilance effort, and are daily to be found watching with care the safety of females who are upon their boats. In this way they do good service.

A few weeks ago a young girl got into the wrong train on her way home from a place of service. She unfortunately got out at a station many miles from her home, at a place where she knew no one and with very little money in her pocket. A Christian porter converted at one of our Bible-classes took her over to the waiting-room, where a meeting was at that very moment being carried on. He handed her over to the lady conducting the class, who most kindly took her to a comfortable home for the night, sent a message to her friends, and saw her safely off the next day. These are ways in which our Christian railway-men can, and do, serve the Lord and their fellow creatures. Readers of these lines need not hesitate at any time, and in any place, to speak to guards or porters when they are sending their young people hither and thither, who require some protection. We have known many instances of railway-men who have gone out of their way and spent money and time for the sake of sheltering women and girls from the machinations of evil men. The more we can extend our efforts among our railway friends, the safer will it be for those who travel.

MANCHESTER FEMALE STRANGERS' LODGING-HOUSE.—This Institution was found specially useful during the exhibition season last year. The report, just issued, shows that 3405 beds were occupied during the year, and that by vigilance, and a due enforcement of the rules, the respectability of the house is well maintained. The scheme is unpretending, but worthy of more general adoption; and it is greatly in its favour that it provides many opportunities for deeds of kindness to the weak and helpless. The hon. superintendent is Miss Wright, 9, Addison-terrace, Victoria-park, Manchester.

CRYSTAL PALACE BIBLE STAND.—The subscriptions and donations received last year reached an amount in excess of that of 1886; the distribution of the Scriptures during the twelve months was widespread, and not without promise of good results. Year by year valued supporters are lost by friends of the Stand being called to rest, but it is gratifying to know that new sympathisers are constantly coming forward. Last year's circulation, by gifts and sales, at home and abroad, of Bibles, Testaments, portions, text-books, cards, and leaflets, amounted to 434,596, making a total circulation since the Stand was inaugurated in 1862 of considerably over twenty million publications.

A PECULIAR Y.M.C.A.

At least we hope it is a peculiar one. It is the Association in the city of Bombay to which we refer; and our reason for so designating it is found in the following paragraph from a letter by Mrs. Leavitt, the "round-the-world-missionary" of the American W.C.T.U., which appears in The Union Signal. Writing of Bombay, she says:—"A rather unusual experience awaited me here, in that the president of the Y.M.C.A., Mr. Conder, refused to have me speak in their rooms, either upon temperance or purity. Mr. Dyer, of England, so well known in the Purity Reform, also was refused the hall recently. But amusements resembling the theatre, and those of the 'darkey-minstrel' sort, have been allowed. Before I came away I heard that the better part of the young men, largely owing to recent missions, are indignant at this state of affairs, and will choose another president at the New Year."

THE MILLIONS OF INDIA.

How are they to be reached? The masses of heathen which crowd the streets of the large Indian cities. Ignorant, blinded by superstition, and full of prejudice, how shall we win them to the Christian faith? Let me draw attention to what was seen by a traveller passing through one of the large cities of the Punjaub. Precious souls are being brought out of darkness into the marvellous light of the Gospel. Let us see how it is accomplished.

In one of the native streets of the city is a room used as a mission hall. Its low thatched roof and mud walls would not suggest the character of the place. The room is entirely destitute of furniture, and the preachers as well as the congregation sit on the floor. Here day by day a few earnest Christian ladies proclaim the good tidings of the grace of God. The room is quickly filled, crowded even to the doors, chiefly with men, many of whom are standing, all listening intently, with their earnest dark eyes fixed on the speaker.

Why do they come and crowd that little room, where all is so plain and seemingly unattractive? There is no music, no display, nothing to draw them but the simple Gospel story told out from earnest loving hearts. They are hungering for the bread of life and so they come and listen, drinking in the good news, and, in spite of the fierce persecution which they well know will follow, some of them yield themselves to the Lord.

Instinctively our thoughts go back to the time when our Lord, whom we wish to follow in all things, lived here on earth; when the people pressed upon Him to hear the Word of God; when the common people heard his words with gladness, and wondered at the gracious sayings that proceeded out of his mouth.

In the olden time it was the wondrous story of the love of God, told and lived by Jesus Christ, that attracted the multitudes. So in these latter days it is still the story of the Saviour's love, told by those who have left all to follow after Him, and shown in their consecrated lives, that will win the heathen masses for Christ.

MISSIONARY ARROWROOT.—During the year ending December last, the native Christians on the island of Aneityum, one of the New Hebrides group, prepared and sent home, through the Free Church missionary, Rev. James H. Lawrie, 3650 lbs. of arrowroot, as their contribution to the foreign mission work of the Free Church of Scotland. Referring to this, The Free Church Monthly says:—"The finest arrowroot from Aneityum is for sale at 1s. 6d. per lb., in packets of not less than 2¾ lbs., free by parcel post, 4s. 6d. Any quantity above 3 lbs. will be supplied, with the late Mrs. Inglis's directions for use, up to a cask of 185 or 200 lbs. Apply to 21, Napier-road, Edinburgh.

CHRISTIAN EXCAVATORS' UNION.

SIR,—It may interest your readers to hear a little of the work of this Union during the past eight months. God is blessing us still. We have members now at thirty-nine places which have been visited by the district secretaries. At most of these weekly prayer-meetings are held; at some of them these gatherings are impossible, on account of the long distances the members live from each other. To hear the men pray at these C.E.U. meetings is very touching. The total number of members is 379; of these sixty are scattered, or wandering in search of work; three are in Africa, one in New Zealand, three in America, sixteen in Australia, and one in Buenos Ayres.

It is singular how many of our C.E.U.'s die suddenly—crowned on the battle-field. Two quiet, holy men, one in London and one in Yorkshire, have gone home during the past month without any warning. Just now some of our members are in deep poverty on account of the hard winter which in some places has only allowed the work to go on for three days a week. Now this terrible storm is lasting so long they have had none at all for three weeks. The suffering has been bitter, and yet at one of the worst places, out of their own poverty, they have, with quiet self-denial, ministered to the temporal as well as the spiritual needs of a dying mate, now with Christ.

At a place on the moors above Darlington, where a reservoir is making for Stockton and Middlesbro', the contractor, a liberal and kind-hearted gentleman, has commissioned our missionary to provide soup and bread. He wrote to me on March 3: "The distress is fearful; whole families have nothing, and I do not think a needless ticket has been given. We are having services every night this week. Over seventy men, not counting women and children, came to the service on Sunday night, and we had sixty-five men, ten women, and some children last night. We had a good prayer-meeting, and the C.E.U.'s are working splendidly."

Whitsuntide will soon be here, and then at London, Cardiff, and Leeds, our three head centres, we shall meet for the happiest day in the year—that of our annual meeting. Those only will stay away who cannot possibly afford the long railway fare; they make great struggles to come.—Faithfully yours,

Ripon. ELIZ. GARNETT.

JEWS IN PARIS.—Since the opening of our new hall at 6, Rue Malder, our meetings have been well kept up, notwithstanding a good deal of opposition. Numbers of Jews who formerly opposed now attend the meetings regularly, and frequently tell me that they prefer them to the cold, indifferent services and ceremonies of the synagogue. We have added to our work a free dispensary, which is very much needed here; it is open twice a week. In one month one thousand one hundred and thirty Jews and Jewesses had the Gospel preached to them in connection with this branch. L. C. MAMLOCK, Missionary of the London Jews' Society.

WIDOWS' FRIEND SOCIETY.—We have often drawn attention to the hardships that result from the sweating system, and we are reminded by a report of the Widows' Friend Society, just to hand, how severely this competition is felt by widows left with little children. If the work be needlework, it is almost impossible to earn enough to exist on, without a sewing-machine. To widows striving to earn their living in this and numerous other ways the Widows' Friend Society renders valuable aid. They do it in a practical and sympathetic manner, after visitation by Christian members of committee, who are often able also to give timely spiritual counsel and consolation. Of 146 cases thus visited during the year, 20 were assisted to sewing-machines, 15 to mangles, 16 to wringers, ironing-stoves, &c., 9 to stock for shops. In fact all the assistance given has been of a permanent character. The income last year was £293, but this is not sufficient to meet the increasing demands and keep up the 12 pensions of £5 to aged Christian widows. The secretary is Mr. M. Kenchington, 27, King-street, Cheapside.

ADULT SUNDAY-SCHOOLS for LONDON

ADULT Sunday-schools have done, and are doing, work of a unique character in the Midlands, and there is no reason why that work should not be carried on with a like success in London. The largest school in London is carried on by the Society of Friends in Roscoe-street, Bunhill-fields. The February average attendance (including a women's division) is 295. It is sometimes said that the London working man is more difficult to reach than his brethren in the other great towns, but this is disproved by the success of a school which was opened at the Assembly-rooms, Putney, in Dec., 1886, and of which it is my privilege to be the superintendent. We began with eight members, and have now 139 names on the books, our average attendance for Feb. being 96. Treat men as men, in the country or in London, and they will respond readily enough.

At the lowest computation there are 500,000 working men in this Metropolis, and, at the present time, there are only eleven of these schools established here, with a total attendance of about 600. Such facts speak for themselves, and surely prove that there is a great field of Christian labour open to any man or church having faith, pluck, and energy, sufficient to enter upon it. The one qualification for the work, is, in Alderman White's words, "sanctified common sense." As the schools reach men who are never influenced by other Christian institutions, it is important that the religion of the workers in them should be shown rather by their lives than by their tongues. I may add that schools unconnected with any particular church or chapel are more likely to succeed than those started upon a sectarian basis.

Should any of your readers desire further particulars of this most interesting work, I shall be happy to reply to any questions they may address to me, and the Putney School will help in any manner possible in the extension of the work in London—which extension we are most anxious to see.

NORTH QUEENSLAND.—Since I last wrote to you, from the Johnstone River, I have moved a hundred miles farther north. Where I find Infidelity and Romanism greatly prevalent. A new line is being made, and I intend staying for a time, after which I purpose visiting Cooktown. I earnestly thank all the friends who sent me books and tracts. Letters and papers may be forwarded to the Cooktown Post-Office, North Queensland.

TRAMPS AT FOLKESTONE.—Gipsy G. William Smith, late of Poplar, has commenced a work among the tramps at Folkestone. He says: "I have at last got a place where they can meet once a week. There is a blessed work going on amongst them. God is saving them, and they are coming out from the lodging-houses. These lodging-houses are drinking houses, and when these poor fellows sign the pledge, and give their hearts to God, they shudder to go back again. They sit at night around my house afraid to go back." Mr. Smith wants help for these poor fellows, which may be sent to him at 1, Victoria-terrace, Folley-road, Folkestone; or to Mr. Gawin Kirkham, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

THE DEACONESSES' INSTITUTION AND HOSPITAL, TOTTENHAM.—The extensive building operations commenced three years ago are now completed. In addition to a large increase in the accommodation for poor non-paying patients, there is also a wing of the building specially set apart for private patients, where ladies and gentlemen requiring medical and surgical treatment can find excellent provision for their comfort. The hospital, which is furnished with every modern convenience, is situated in a lovely garden, and extensive grounds, and affords all the advantages of good nursing, fresh country air, and Christian surroundings, under excellent medical supervision. Visitors are invited to inspect the premises. Written applications to be made to the director, Dr. Laseron, or to the Lady Superintendent, Christian Dundas.

THE OLD PATHS.

"KEEP to the Old Paths" is the title of a little book on Bible teaching as to sound and unsound doctrine, with an introduction by Mr. J. Denham Smith.

The introduction was written at the early stage of Mr. Denham Smith's illness. It is as follows:—

> Much has been said of late concerning those who are teachers of unsound doctrine, but seldom is a word given to those who hear. Numbers who know what false doctrines are, compromise the truths which they do believe by listening to errors which they do not believe.
> None need ask what they are—a huge system of denial of Divine truth is working all around us. The Scriptures themselves are being denied. This touches our only sure foundation. The doctrine of sin; also atonement for sin by the death of Christ; the Godhead of Christ; the judgment and even existence of the finally impenitent; and other doctrines more and more multiplying in the present day are denied. It is remarkable that all the men of so-called advanced religious thought hold more or less of these errors.
> The first to deny punishment for sin was our great adversary (his personality and even existence too are denied), who said the woman, "Ye shall not surely die." How could God say it—a Being who is Love? The tempter well knew better, but "he abode not in the truth."
> God's word is very clear, leaving all hearers as well as teachers without excuse. It is its own witness against the errors we have named. Can anything be plainer? "He that hath the Son hath life," i.e., hath it now; and "he that believeth not the Son shall not see life" (viz., that life to be had in Christ, having no more opportunity of salvation, and no hope of restoration after this time-state), "but the wrath of God abideth on him." To say wrath would abide on one who is annihilated or non-existent would show a blindness to the very meaning of words.
> Is it uncharitable? Is it not rather true charity, according to the Word, when I affirm that I cannot understand how any person that denies the Godhead of Christ, or Atonement by the death of Christ, can be a Christian; for what do such believe? They believe in a man, and their religion is a bloodless one, and yet "without shedding of blood there is no remission."
> The Apostle's words (Jude 22, 23) are of value here, as showing how those who have fallen should be dealt with. With many who have the Lord's anointing on them—both teachers and taught—faithful words of warning should be uttered in the spirit of Samuel, who, when told of Saul's rejection (1 Sam. xv. 11), "cried unto the Lord all night."
> "I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves [not professed unbelievers] shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them" (Acts xx. 29, 30).
> The following passages, carefully collated, and which have led to these remarks of mine, have just come to hand; and as they are the pure Word of God, I would confidently commend them as guides to others.

The teaching is exhibited under the following heads:—Doctrine to be tested; unsound doctrine to be avoided; false doctrine hated by the Lord, and judged in the Church; sound doctrine to be held fast; the preaching of sound doctrine; and the only true safeguard.

Mr. J. E. Hawkins, 17, Paternoster-row, is the publisher of the tract, which is likely to have a very large circulation: twelve copies cost sixpence.

THE LEPER HOME AT JERUSALEM.—The sixteenth annual report gives a deeply interesting account of the occupation of the new asylum in the Valley of Rephaim. At the close of the year the inmates were over twenty in number, Mr. and Mrs. Fritz Müller being as assiduous as ever in their ministry of mercy. The treasurer is Dr. W. V. Drury, Lingmoor, Dean-park, Bournemouth.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS.—Miss Petrie's last lecture at Steinway Hall, on Tuesday, last week, contained a rapid sketch of Protestant missions. After mentioning the work of Moravians and others upon the Continent of Europe, she turned to the efforts of English-speaking races. In spite of the existence of the S.P.G. and S.P.C.K., so late as 1792 there was no Englishman engaged in preaching to the heathen. The first step was in 1786, when Wm. Carey brought before the discussion class, to which he belonged, the since famous problem, "Whether the command of God to preach the Gospel to all nations is binding upon Christians to all time, seeing the promise is so applied." The lecturer concluded with a survey of and answer to the usual objections to missions. There was a large and appreciative audience, including several clergymen. As the whole expense of hiring the hall is borne by Miss Griffith, all the proceeds will go to the C.M.S.

MISSIONARY MESSAGES.

An Appeal from Korea.

In The Missionary Review of the World for March there is a strong plea for the evangelisation of Korea. We reproduce some portions of it, in the hope that it may find a ready response in the hearts and consecrated lives of many:—

Seoul, Korea, Nov. 27.—I have been very much surprised in reading the home papers, secular as well as religious, to see the paucity of news concerning this land and the work that has been done here, and the falsity of the little "news" that has reached these papers. I feel that this lack of knowledge is injuring the cause and retarding the work that could and ought to be going on at this time. Misapprehensions exist at home, and these misapprehensions may be classed under three heads:—

First, as to the attitude of the Government and the stability of the present dynasty. It is supposed that the present Government is opposed to Christian work, and that therefore the sending of more men is useless. It is also supposed that Korea is always in a perfect turmoil; that at any moment the present Government may be upset; that therefore life and property are not safe, and that on this account we had better go slowly until the Government either changes or becomes more stable. On both these points the prevailing opinion at home is contrary to the real facts of the case. The Government is not opposed actively to Christianity, but is simply passive on the matter. Protestantism is preferred to Romanism. The king himself, we have every reason to believe, favours us and our work, and I do not think that he is alone in this.

About the stability of the Korean Government, as to whether it will be absorbed by China or Russia, we on the field have little fear. It does not appear to us at all probable; but is the Church of God, from fear of a possible future calamity, to hold back from work that she ought to be doing now? The Korean Government is more stable and steady to-day than it has been for years.

The second misapprehension is as to the work that has been done in the Presbyterian mission here. It is known that there is an orphanage and a hospital, and there it is supposed that the work ends. Under the care of the Presbyterian Mission there are the Government hospital, Government medical school and orphanage; now there is need for a new school that shall be the beginning of a Christian college. But this is mere educational work, and it is supposed that here the work of the missionary in this land has stopped. But this is not the case. For nearly two years we have had a constant and steadily increasing number of inquirers after truth. We have done our best to teach them, and to-day we have a regularly organised Presbyterian church with a native membership of over a score. Bibles, Gospels, and tracts have been distributed around Seoul and in parts of the country. To-day on all sides we are receiving word about men desirous of baptism.

A third and great misapprehension is as to what can be done in Korea to-day. In Seoul alone there is educational work now in the hands of the Mission that can only be carried on by at least four men, and there is only one here to do it. The way is also open for direct Christian work in personal work with individuals, the superintending of the work of evangelists and colporteurs, the examining of candidates for baptism. Were there here to-day eight men with a thorough knowledge of Korea, every one of them could find more direct Christian work before him than he could do. According to the French treaty we have now the right, under passport, to buy property and live anywhere in Korea. We are not limited to the open ports. Schools and dispensaries can be established in the capitals of each province, and were this done now they would meet with Government encouragement and aid. From these centres, too, the whole of each province could be reached for real Christian work.

In the light of this wide open door, what has the Presbyterian Church [in America] done? She has sent two doctors, whose hands have been full of medical work, and whose work has opened up for us many doors of usefulness; one lady physician, who attends the Queen and the female department of the hospital, and one minister. We need at this moment four more men for the educational work, and as I can now use the language, I ought to be free to do direct Christian work. Then there ought to be seven more physicians, one for each of the other seven provinces, and seven more teachers. Now is the time to work here. If we do not work the Romanists will soon have this country in their hands, and we will have Romanists to convert instead of heathen.

Horace G Underwood.

Back to Kaffirland.

We are thankful to tell of the goodness of God in giving us a favourable voyage, and in permitting us to resume our work amongst the Kaffir people after our year of absence in England. It was touching to see the pleasure with which those among whom we had laboured welcomed us back, both Christians and heathen coming from the sub-stations to Rock Fountain to see us on our return.

We rejoice to find that the interest in spiritual things, instead of diminishing, has increased during our absence. Some who were impressed before, have confessed Christ since our return. They are stripped of their ornaments, washed, and clothed, thus showing to the heathen that they are following Jesus. Many others express their desire to do the same, but have not the courage openly to confess Christ. We ask earnest prayers for these who are "almost persuaded."

Soon after our return, I visited the chief Inyaman, and found him as anxious to have a teacher as ever, still expressing his wish to come to school himself, and saying that he had long been looking for us to come back to help him.

On December 30, we started in the waggon to give the school treat at Hope Vale the next day, and to visit Sakayedwa and his people towards the Drakensburg mountains, taking with us a plentiful supply of cake and coffee, and other requisites for the school treat, besides food and all things necessary for living in the waggon till our return home. It was pleasant to meet the scholars and their parents after our absence, and to find that the school is still flourishing and much appreciated. The people are very poor, and almost starving this year, through the failure of the maize crop last year. It was surprising to us that two shillings and two fowls were brought as thank-offerings.

Sakayedwa welcomed us most cordially, bringing a sheep for us to kill, and in every way showing his appreciation of our visit. The Roman Catholics have bought a very large piece of land joining his location, and are doing their utmost to proselyte the people, using means which we should not feel it right to use. The people are confused between the Protestant teaching, they had received so gladly before we went to England, and the teaching of the Roman Catholics, who came in our absence, saying (the people tell us) that they were sent by the Government. Their practice seems to be to buy the people, working through the chiefs. They have bought, and are buying, large tracts of country near to each of our stations, and as near as possible to other mission stations, and many of the people have been decoyed from their missionaries by these emissaries of Rome, whose false teaching, we are grieved, indeed, to find, has been more or less received by many for want of someone to point out how it is at variance with the Word of God. Sakayedwa seems really anxious to do what is right, and he and the Christians we left there are earnestly praying that some Christian teacher may be sent to them.

On our return home we began at once to prepare to move our headquarters from Rock Fountain to this place, where we are now busy settling, while we are working Rock Fountain as an out-station.

Light for Dark Morocco.

In a recent letter to Mr. M. J. Sutton, of Reading, Miss C. S. Jennings writes from Larache, Morocco, N. Africa:—

You would be interested to see our hospital, which is just finished, the first that has been opened in Morocco for these poor Moors. Already we have two lads; our earnest prayer is that God will work in the heart of each poor sufferer, and that all patients may find within its walls perfect healing for soul as well as body.

I am really stationed in Tangier, but am staying for a short time in Larache—a little seaport town of about 5000 inhabitants, lying sixty miles south of Tangier—where are but two workers—earnest, devoted ladies, whose whole life is given up to these poor dark Moors, the few Spaniards, and the many Jews who abound. We are thankful that many of them come here to read and hear God's word. Every Saturday is kept for the Jews; men and boys assemble in our own sitting-room, and, though wild and unruly, they do hear each week portions of their own Old Testament relating to the Messiah.

On Sunday mornings we go down to the ports when any vessels are in, and invite the sailors, Spanish, Portuguese, and French, and sometimes English, to come to our house in the afternoon, and read and hear God's Word in their own tongue, and then these two ladies speak earnestly to them of Jesus. Miss Herdman, the senior missionary here, is a good linguist, and has unreservedly consecrated all her talents to the Lord. It is delightful to hear with what fluency she will address all who come in Arabic, Spanish, French, and German, and she can read with them in Hebrew, too. Our other worker here, Miss Caley, is a semi-doctor, and most wonderfully God has blessed the remedies (homœopathic) she has used, and the skilful advice given. She had sixty-one patients last week. We four are living together now. and feel our great responsibility in being the only Christians in this town.

Do pray that the Lord will speedily send out fresh workers, filled with his Holy Spirit and power, to dark Morocco.

Answered Prayer in China.

Dear Sir,—A few months ago you kindly inserted a letter from me, telling of persecution in this city which had compelled me to remove my family away, on two occasions, to Chefoo, about twenty miles from here. Much prayer went up to God for this place and for ourselves, and now I want your readers to praise the Lord for prayers answered. I have been here for about four months since then, mostly alone, my wife and children have been back here for a month, and thus far undisturbed. Those who have lived in a hostile Chinese city without any disturbance, even for this short time, know how precious the peace is.

Not that we have been without the most evident attacks of Satan in various ways. One specimen of many slight annoyances occurred yesterday. A professional beggar, of which there are many besides the really poor, came into our little preaching-room and demanded some clothing, of which he was by no means destitute. I offered him food, which he refused, and, throwing himself on the floor, threatened us with various dangers if we did not yield to his demand. A crowd gathered around, which a few months ago would have made a riot; but, thank God, we are gaining the hearts of many of the poor at least. My first thought was to send to the officials to remove him before any disturbance arose, but the Lord suggested that I should go to him only. I left the man lying in the room with the crowd around, and went myself in prayer to the Lord. Soon afterwards I found that the bystanders had urged the man to go away and not trouble us. A few months ago, under similar circumstances, they raised a riot. This small matter shows how God is answering prayer for us.

We have now four applicants for baptism, and I believe that scores at least are deeply impressed with the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, but have not yet the courage to openly confess Him. Will your readers still pray for us that we may be kept pure and full of the Holy Spirit, and that there may be a great breaking down among these people, and many fully saved? The Lord is doing great things for China, especially in those places where there has been years of preparatory work; but the work here is new, and my wife and myself are alone in this part of Shantung, not having seen a European, except our children, for a month. The labourers are few indeed; pray ye the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth labourers into his harvest.—Yours faithfully in Christ Jesus,

CHAS. H. JUDD, China Inland Mission.

HOXTON WOMEN'S WORK.

THE annual meeting of what is generally known as the Help One Another Society was held at Hoxton Hall on Monday, March 5, under the presidency of Mr. William I. Palmer, J.P., of Reading. He was supported by Mrs. William Noble, president; Mrs. J. Christie Mackenzie, vice-president. Mrs. Howell, the secretary, read an interesting report, showing an increased influence and usefulness on the part of the workers. The Society, as designated by the title, is of a missionary character. It was inaugurated on Dec. 1, 1884, by Mrs. Noble, with thirty-two members on the roll, which now shows a record of 170 full attending members. It is interesting to know that one woman brought in fifteen last year and thirteen this. Mrs. Howell has paid 1200 visits, and the "Rainy Day Club," "Maternity Society," and kindred agencies have proved useful attractions.

After an encouraging speech from the chairman, Mrs. Woodford Fawcett, Mrs. Lynn, Mr. Fawcett, and Mr. J. R. Cheyse took part in the proceedings, which were of a highly encouraging character; 270 attended at tea, increasing to about 700 after.

CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW.

ON Tuesday week, at the "Welcome Home," the first anniversary was held of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew." After tea the Fo'c's'le was crowded by sailors and friends, who came together to hear and speak of the Lord's goodness during the twelve months. In addition to bright and touching testimonies from members of the "Crew," Mr. C. R. Hurditch gave an appropriate and genial address.

A leaflet has been issued giving an account of the year's work, under the happy title of "A Few Droppings from the Showers." It tells of vessels boarded, the Tower entered, and Gospel shot (tracts) and shell (Bibles) scattered far and wide. Miss Child says, "The power of God has been frequently seen amongst our sailors during the past year......Many who had fallen so very low have been raised by the power of Christ." Not only have those who frequented evil resorts been saved; but, the report says, "We have cause for much thankfulness in that a large dancing saloon close to us has been closed during the year."

The "Crew" are ready to come to the rescue of sinking sinners if signalled for from any mission-hall. Copies of "Droppings from the Showers" may be had of Miss Child, Welcome Home, 173, St. George's-street, Ratcliff Highway, London, E.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

THE annual meeting of this Mission was held on Monday week. Professor Yeatman, who presided, gave an eloquent address, and made a stirring appeal in favour of the work. He showed that the Mission was necessary, practical, and promising.

The secretary, Mr. W. J. LOCKIE, stated that during the year an additional missionary had been placed on the staff, raising the number from seven to eight. He appealed for help to add a ninth missionary, whose special work would be amongst the English at Chantilly as well as in Paris. A good work is being done amongst the English in Paris by means of mothers' meetings and Bible-readings conducted by Miss Temple and the Baroness de Langsdorff. A juvenile temperance society has been recently commenced amongst French children.

Rev. R. W. MCALL said the increasing population of Paris would ever leave a large number of persons unsought and unreached by the Mission. He was very grateful for the two excellent agents which were furnished to him by the Paris City Mission; but what are two missionaries for thirty-six stations in Paris and twelve stations in the environs? He would like to have a missionary for every two stations, i.e., nineteen agents; better still, a round number, say twenty. He knew Miss de Broen would be glad of another agent, and Rev. W. Gibson also wanted his missionary for Chantilly. We have eight missionaries as the result of the Exhibition of 1878; may we not expect to double that number in 1889, the next Exhibition year? This is a really necessary and important Society, and experience proves that the missionaries do not labour in vain. Mr. McAll gave instances that had come under his personal knowledge of success resulting from the efforts of the agents.

Pastor THEODORE MONOD said we read in the New Testament of "helps," and in the Old Testament about "coming to the help of the Lord against the mighty." This was a "helpful society," as its French title implies, "Comité auxiliaire d'évangélisation de Paris." His helper was Monsieur Guillon, a converted Breton, who does a good work amongst the Bretons in Paris, teaching them to read the Bible, and explaining it to them at his own house. Pastor Monod read extracts from the reports of his agent, and gave a description of the good work done at a prayer-meeting held near the Rue Sainte Marguerite, one of the worst streets in Paris.

Monsieur CERISIER (agent of Rev. R. W. McAll), gave several instances of persons who had received the Gospel by means of home visits. Rev. R. S. BROWN pleaded earnestly for the work at Chantilly amongst the stable lads, jockeys, and trainers of horses. A good man is waiting to be called to this good work.

A similar meeting, at which the proceedings were in French, was held the same evening. The hon. secretary in England of the Paris City Mission is Mr. J. M. Weylland, 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's Wood, N.W.

Y.W.C.A., KENSINGTON BRANCH.—There are 142 members, 40 of whom are enrolled as "abstaining members." The branch supports a Biblewoman in Ningpo, China. Last year's report has some encouraging features; the balance-sheet, however, shows a deficit of £57.

THE ITALIAN EVANGELICAL SCHOOLS.—The seventeenth annual report of the schools connected with the Free Christian Church in Italy, has just been issued. Between the reactionary influence of the Papacy, which would make schools simply nurseries of superstition, and the deadly influence of a materialism which would ignore religion altogether, these evangelical schools appeal to thoughtful people of all classes, and are, it is gratifying to know, being cordially supported. The school in Rome is carried on under the very eyes of the Papacy, and at a very short distance from the Vatican Palace. In each and all of these schools the Bible is read every day.

UNEMPLOYED IN WEST LONDON.

ON Wednesday week, 550 poor men and women were, by the kindness of the Hon. Thomas Holt, entertained at dinner in the Bloomsbury Hall, Meard-street, Soho. The selection of the guests was entrusted to Mr. William Harrison. They were all very poor, but looked clean, and of the sober, careful class. They thoroughly enjoyed the meal, and were much pleased with the sympathy and attention they received from the Misses Holt and their friends.

After dinner Rev. W. R. Mowll addressed the assembly with much acceptance, and greatly interested the poor people as he enforced the saving truths of the Gospel. Rev. F. Schoburgh, a coloured minister from Jamaica, also spoke; he created much interest by his singing, and the earnest way in which he told of a Saviour's love.

SOLDIERS IN GIBRALTAR.

DEAR SIR,—During the past year the work in the Soldiers' Mission Home, Europa Main-road, Gibraltar, has gone on steadily, and the Lord has been giving blessing. In the early spring General Heath paid a visit to the Rock. He remained a few weeks, and while he was there (Miss Archibald writes) "we had crowded meetings, and also blessing. All through the year there have been manifestations of the Lord's presence with us in soul-saving power."

On our return from Scotland, in November, we received a hearty welcome from the soldiers. The little band had kept together, and Captain Armstrong had faithfully worked among them, and helped them in the study of the Word of God. The meetings gradually increased in numbers after the cool weather came in, and we had the joy of seeing many new faces at every meeting. One young soldier came and trusted the Lord. It was his first and last night; next day he was taken to hospital, where a few weeks after he died. We did not think so many had been brought in until Christmas-time, when one and another told us how they had spent the last one. The meeting-room is filled every night, and on Sunday nights it is crowded.

There is great need of good Gospel tracts for troopships, guardrooms, and barrack visiting. We have decided to buy the property in which our Home is. Of the purchase-money (£1400), there has been sent in nearly £700. The Lord has proved, by the blessing given, that this house is needed for his work and glory. Will your readers give thanks with us for blessing received, and will they pray that Miss Archibald, Miss Douglas Dale, and Captain Armstrong may be more and more used in this service among the soldiers on the South end of the Rock of Gibraltar.—Faithfully yours,

ALICIA TODD OSBORNE.
Ripland, Newton Mearns, N.B.

POPERY IN PORTUGAL.—A correspondent in Oporto describes the Romish ceremony of washing an image of Christ in Lisbon, and adds:—"If those who are drifting Romewards could only see the depths of greed, hypocrisy, and deceit to which the Church descends in these countries where she holds sway, and how immorality, infidelity, and spiritual darkness rule among the people from high to low, they would surely hesitate to introduce Popish mummeries into free England."

BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.—The islanders of Tanna, New Hebrides, have a traditional fear of books, and few of those who are willing to learn to read are willing to take the book home with them. But the Gospel is making its way among the Tannese, and the Society has agreed to publish the New Testament in their tongue, as translated by Rev. W. Watt. A revision of the Spanish version has been begun by a representative committee in Madrid. During the last two months of 1887, 3000 Scripture portions were applied for by native Chinamen, who are paid no wages, but who support themselves on the proceeds of sales.

NOTES FROM THE NORTH.

GLASGOW CITY MISSION.

THERE was a large attendance at the sixty-second annual meeting of the Glasgow City Mission, held in that city last week. The report told of persevering labour and much spiritual good accomplished. During the year thirty-four agents have been employed, and the usual agencies kept vigorously at work. Many deeply-touching incidents of the power of the grace of God over the most abandoned were given, and special and grateful mention was made of the blessing resting upon the work among the showmen at Camlachie fair. Mr. John Burns, the chairman, bore testimony to the admirable results which have followed the establishment of cabmen's rests in the city, and remarked, amid approving cheers, that the work of the missionary who laboured in the small-pox and fever hospital was as noble as that of the Moravians in the leper hospitals of Africa.

MR. MATHER IN EDINBURGH.

During the past week Mr. E. J. Mather, of the Deep Sea Mission, has been addressing largely-attended meetings in Edinburgh, and awakening much interest in the work with which he is associated. In Barclay Free Church Mr. Mather said that a very great change has taken place in the men's religious beliefs since the Mission began its labours among them seven years ago, and that many of them are earnest believers.

LANDMARKS OF PROTESTANTISM.

A conference to consider the best means of commemorating the defeat of the Spanish Armada in 1588, and the accession of the Protestant dynasty in 1688, was held in Edinburgh last week. Dr. Wylie, the well-known historian of Protestantism, referred to the progress made by the Papacy in Scotland, and said that nothing of all the security that their forefathers fought for two hundred years ago now remained to them but the Act of Settlement and the Bill of Rights. How long these would last no man could say. Rev. W. Barras, however, denied that there was any disposition on the part of Scottish people to patronise the Papacy, and asserted that the crisis and the catastrophe were on the Romish and not the Protestant side. Rev. George Macauley declared that society in Great Britain is honeycombed with Jesuitism. Sabbath, June 24 next, was recommended to be set apart as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, and it was agreed to hold a National Protestant Convention in Edinburgh during the week commencing June 24.

BUDDHISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

In the course of his Duff missionary lectures in Edinburgh last week, Sir Monier Williams exploded some of the deeply ingrained fallacies current on Buddhism. It is entirely false to say that Buddhism is the religion of the majority of the human race, for Christianity now stands even numerically at the head of all the creeds of the world. It is doubtful whether, if a trustworthy census were possible, it would give even 150 millions of Buddhists as against 450 millions of Christians in the world's population of 1500 millions. Sir Monier Williams said the Buddhist priests of to-day are conspicuous for their apathy and mental inertness, and a vacancy of countenance which almost amounts to idiocy.

WALDENSIAN MISSIONS.—From the last report of the Waldensian Commission of Italian Evangelisation, it appears that some who are spreading the light in the dark places of the Roman Peninsula have very encouraging experiences. The churches and stations continue to extend, and the membership to increase. The Central Committee in Scotland, in aid of the Missions, was not able last year to remit so much as in previous years, the sum sent being only £1250. The hon. secretary of the Aid Society is Mrs. Ford, 17, Grosvenor-crescent, Edinburgh.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.

To say that it is a specially useful institution is but to hint the high claims of the Strangers' Rest for Seamen, Ratcliff-highway, upon the support of Christian people. Anyone desirous of knowing the extent of the influence of the many agencies radiating from the Rest, should write to Mr. J. Theodore Isaac, Hon. Sec. of the Rest, 163, St. George's-street, Ratcliff-highway, for the tenth annual report, just published. Every page of this little book tells of real evangelisation.

Not far from the Rest is the Lads' Institute, which gives promise of being very beneficial to the large number of lads, from twelve to eighteen years of age, found in the neighbourhood. The first annual report has been issued by Mr. Isaac, and on the cover the question is proposed, "Shall the Institute be given up? An appeal is made for earnest Christian ladies and gentlemen to come forward and exert themselves to maintain in active operation the educational and spiritual agencies connected with the Institute, classes for whose enlightenment our efforts should know no stint. Here are some sentences, setting forth the general aims and efforts:—

Other and kindred institutions aim at caring for the moral and temporal welfare of sailors, and we heartily wish them God-speed; but our one aim is to win them to Christ. The daily preaching of the Gospel in the one centre in Ratcliff-highway may be truly said to be world-wide in its influence and effects. We know of several now labouring for the Lord as missionaries and workers in foreign lands, who were brought to the Saviour at the Rest. And, in addition to these, who can estimate the result of the life testimony of the hundreds of Christian sailors to whom the Rest has been a harbour of refuge, and who have there resolved to sail henceforth under the Gospel flag? Ours is an every-day work; from two p.m. at which hour the Rest is opened, until closing time at nine, sailors have free access to the Rest, and, when meetings are not in progress, are welcome to spend their time in reading or writing. Gospel meetings in English are held every afternoon and evening all the year round, as well as a nightly Bible-class for Christian sailors. A meeting for Scandinavians is conducted six nights a week, and is well attended. A German meeting is also held nightly, in connection with which some interesting cases of blessing amongst Jews have been met with.

HORNSEY-ROAD, N.—Since September last, Tollington Hall has been the centre of well-directed evangelistic operations. Earnest men connected with various denominations conduct Gospel services and advocate the principles of temperance. Meetings for working men on Sunday afternoons have resulted in a number of pledges being taken, and some who have thus entered upon a new course of life have found their Saviour in Christ. Sunday evening Gospel meetings are largely attended, and there have been many conversions. Details of the work may be obtained from Mr. F. J. Brazier, 56, Seven Sister's-road, N.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOMES. — Sixty children sailed for Canada on the 1st inst. The boys were under the care of Mr. Drummond, the head teacher, and the girls were accompanied by Miss Metcalfe, the lady teacher, whom they all love. Mrs. Louisa Birt, superintendent, writes:—"I am remaining behind to gather in a fresh family for training, and have many applicants waiting to fill up the vacant beds and desks. There are thousands of children suffering from neglect while their parents are out earning a small pittance wherewith to buy food. The little ones get cold, are injured, are drawn to early graves after painful lives. Therefore, it does rejoice our hearts to see a detachment sailing away to brighter homes and happier lives, and also to know that friends in Liverpool are making an effort to secure more suitable premises in which to carry on this rescue work."

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.*

CONSISTENT commentaries on the "Golden Gospel" are always welcome. Dr. Whitelaw's work is of sterling value. On the title page it is described as "for the use of clergymen, students, and teachers;" to all who desire a learned and exhaustive exposition and commentary, this work may be confidently recommended.

In a luminous introduction, Dr. Whitelaw discusses questions as to the authenticity, authorship, composition, purpose, and plan of the Gospel. One by one he disposes of rationalistic objections, his method being ever that becoming a lover of sincerity and truth. Writing on John's specific purpose, Dr. Whitelaw says:—

"This was fourfold: (1) To show how the pre-existent Word of God, who became incarnate in Jesus of Nazareth, 'came unto his own' (the Jewish people), unfolding before them his glory as 'the glory of an only begotten from a father'; (2) how that glory was either not discerned by 'his own,' the Jewish people, through inward moral and spiritual blindness, or, if perceived (as one can hardly help thinking it was by the ecclesiastical leaders) was deliberately rejected, because 'they loved the darkness rather than the light'; (3) how, notwithstanding, this glory of the incarnate Son was recognised and received by another 'own,' the spiritually born, who were inwardly drawn of God to believe upon his name; and (4) how by further revelations of his glory in dying for them on the cross, and rising again to a super-terrestrial form of existence, He gave to these latter the right and the power to become sons of God" (i. 11, 12).

To carry out this specific purpose, object, or aim, John arranged his work in three main divisions—a prologue or exordium (i. 1—18), a history or record of the life and death of Jesus (i. 19—xx. 31), and an epilogue or conclusion (xxi.)

This commentary has the advantage of being based on the Revised Version. The homiletical sections are suggestive throughout. The authorities quoted are legion; certainly the author is no respecter of persons while in quest of information in elucidation of the text. He not only pronounces a sound judgment himself, but sets it off well against the views of materialistic critics. This is his method (xi. 35):—

"JESUS WEPT. edakrusen; lacrimatus est (Vulg.); not sobbed aloud, as over Jerusalem, eklausen (Luke xix. 41), but shed silent tears, which were not insincere, theatrical (Baur), and unnatural (Keim), but a genuine expression of sympathy with the sisters and of sorrow for Lazarus; a proof of our Lord's true and tender humanity, and an indirect demonstration of the authenticity of the narrative, since 'a cold or stony-hearted raiser of the dead would belong to the region of fiction' (Hengstenberg)."

Careful discrimination is apparent throughout this work, and many opportunities have been embraced to show the unreasonableness and hollowness of much that passes under the name of modern criticism. For some time to come, Dr. Whitelaw's book will occupy an important place among commentaries of its class.

Students who have been troubled with questions raised by reckless or irreverent expositors will find relief in perusing its pages, while many who lean to the judgment of Lange that John's is "the Diamond among the Gospels," will be glad to have had their attention directed to a book which would certainly never have been written but for its author's fervent love of Divine truth and enthusiastic diligence in Biblical research.

THE SILENT INTERLUDE.

THE brook goes singing down the glen,
The music from the hills set free,
Through river-silences again
To break in ripples of the sea.

So shall this heart of mine, dear Lord,
Sing on the song Thou gavest me,
And, passing through the river's hush,
Break forth anew in praise to Thee.

WOMEN'S MISSION HOUSE IN JERUSALEM.

FRIENDS are earnestly asked to help the establishment of this much-needed PREPARATION PLACE FOR WOMEN'S WORK IN BIBLE LANDS.

Money is wanted to fit up Premises for Seven Ladies going out to organise Medical and other Missions to Moslem Women and Children, and others to whom they may be sent.

"The times of the Gentiles" are fast running out.

There is not a moment to be lost. When once the sign of the Son of Man appears, we shall have done our work; and then cometh the night.

We shall not have gone over even the cities of Israel before the Lord comes, but we shall be found going over them till He come!

This appeal to our sisters will, we feel assured, meet a cordial response, and many will avail themselves of our invitation to join us.

We also trust that money will be contributed largely for this work, which surely will touch the heart of Christians.

As we must decide on the premises in Jerusalem, those who give quickly give twice.

Cheques payable Rev. H. Pelham Stokes, Treasurer, crossed "Union Bank, Charing-cross," will be gratefully acknowledged by Miss M. A. LLOYD, Hon. Secretary, 143, Clapham-road, S.W.

N.B.—Every SATURDAY at 4.15 p.m., in Room 2, Eccleston Hall, S.W., a PRAYER MEETING for this Jerusalem Mission House is held, after which information can be obtained from the Hon. Secretary.

Homes of Hope,

4, 5, & 6, REGENT SQUARE, GRAY'S-INN ROAD,
LONDON, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted from their previous good character and position to mix with others.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions:—

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case where it is possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent, that every shilling has been spent.

"Hitherto hath the Lord helped us."

FIFTY-THREE years have elapsed since the establishment of the SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST. It was formed for the purpose of giving instruction to women in the Zenanas of India, and in their own homes in China. Thus it is the oldest Zenana Society in existence. It was found impossible then to carry the object of the Society into effect, for the doors of those prison-homes were locked and double-barred. The Committee, therefore, while biding their time, turned to School-work, finding it more practicable to collect and to teach children, especially of the lower classes, than to reach those of more mature age and of higher social position. Beginning with Schools in India and China, the work of the Society was subsequently extended to other countries also, and now includes Japan, the Straits, Africa, the Levant, and Persia.

The object of the Society has been strictly evangelistic—that of carrying the Gospel to the homes of the East. To this end, education was felt to be of great importance, in order that those who should be reached by these missionaries might each be carefully instructed in the truths of the Christian religion, enabled to read the Word of God for herself in her own tongue, and qualified to impart her knowledge to others. Thus the object of the Committee included evangelisation, education, and training in teaching.

The work of the Society may be thus briefly summed up:—Zenana Missions; Medical Missions; Village Missions; work among the crowds assembling at native festivals; house and hut visiting; boarding, day, infant, and Sunday Schools; Bible and sewing classes; training native Zenana missionaries, district visitors, school-mistresses, and Bible-women; mothers' meetings; also branches of the Bible and Prayer Union, and of the Young Women's Christian Association.

The souls that have been given to the Society's missionaries for their hire, out of many nations and kindreds and people and tongues, are not to be counted by human arithmetic. There are thousands now gladdening the hearts of those who led them to the Saviour, adorning His doctrine, and working in His service.

"This is the Lord's doing, and it is wonderful in our eyes."

The Committee very earnestly appeal for funds to enable them to carry on, and to extend, their various operations.

NEED & REASONS FOR ASKING.

NEED.—A House with lower rooms large enough to hold meetings in—Gospel Meetings, Y.W.C.A., and Gospel Temperance Meetings, &c.; Class and Committee Rooms. Upstairs: Rooms for occasional Visitors, Tired Workers, &c.; and perhaps as a permanence for some whom the Lord has laid aside from active work.

REASONS FOR ASKING.—1st. Because the present Rooms to let in Bristol for these purposes are very expensive, and quite beyond most societies' funds; mostly too large or too small; very noisy, from being near to the trams. 2nd. Because two Houses are now being offered for Sale, in capital positions, with good rooms. 3rd. Because the words of the Lord Jesus to His disciples were, "Hitherto ye have asked nothing in My Name; ask, and ye shall receive" (John xvi. 24); and again, "WHATSOEVER ye shall ask the Father in My Name He will give it you" (John xvi. 23).

The Lord has indeed blessed the Work here, which makes the workers bold to claim His promise, and ask those of His servants who have been given abundance of this world's riches to help in the good work.

It is calculated the amount needed will be about £4,500; which will secure the House, with some Furniture, and enable the start to be made free of debt. Any Donations will be most gratefully received and acknowledged, as well as further particulars given, by MARGARET M. LURY, Bellevue, Upper Redland, Bristol; or may be sent to MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

THE COW CROSS MISSION 22nd Annual Report, just published, price 3d., will be sent free to any address. Entirely free to subscribers.—WILLIAM CATLIN, 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, London.

Y.W.C.A., Teignmouth, Devon.—Will any friend help on Gospel-meetings for young Girls, gathered in from the streets, by the gift of an old piano.—CAROLINE FRY, Secretary.

PADDINGTON HALL, and Hyde-park Mission, 90, Church-street, Paddington-green, W.—This Mission has a Sunday-school of poor children; works amongst fallen women, dust-sifters, and poor of the neighbourhood. Gospel services in and out of doors. £40 urgently needed, to pay debt on Mission. A local Gentleman kindly promises £5, if remainder obtained by March 31.

Mr. J. DAVIDGE.

THE GOSPEL IN CEYLON.

ON Wednesday evening, last week, Room No. 6, at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, was well filled by friends assembled to hear addresses from the Misses M. and M. W. LEITCH, of the American Board's Mission at Jaffna, on Gospel work amongst the high-caste Tamils of Ceylon. These devoted sisters related in succession some of their experiences, and told of wide openings for spreading the Gospel in Ceylon. They also rendered very sweetly several of the songs sung by the native Christians.

The district in which they have laboured contains a population of over 20,000 souls, and theirs are the only white faces ever seen amongst them. In the homes of the people they are always welcomed, although at first they had to encounter some opposition. Now, however, the people are delighted when the missionaries go amongst them. In the day-schools, in connection with the Mission at Jaffna, there are more than 2000 scholars, almost all of whom also attend the schools on the Sabbath. The teachers in these schools are all native Christians. Fourteen of the native Churches, in connection with the Mission, are entirely self-supporting, whilst the Christians also give largely to other objects. The native Christians' prayer-meetings are full of life. The homes of the people are regularly visited by unpaid Bible-women, who are very warm-hearted and earnest in their work, and who go from house to house, conversing with their inmates, holding meetings, &c.

The Gospel of Christ is assuredly taking root and spreading in Ceylon. The Christianity of those who confess Christ is real, not nominal, as in many so-called Christian lands. An earnest appeal was made to those present that they would pray to the Lord of the harvest that He would thrust forth labourers into his harvest.

It is specially to obtain funds on behalf of the Christian College at Jaffna that the Misses Leitch have now come to England. Some particulars were given of this college, which which was started by native Christians in 1872. It was established with a view to giving a superior Christian education both in the English and vernacular languages. It is strictly unsectarian, and has on its board of directors missionaries of each of the Societies at work in Jaffna, besides a number of representative native Christian gentlemen.

There are at present 167 students, with seven teachers, in the High School—a preparatory school for the College and 73 students in the College itself. Many of the graduates of the Institution have become pastors, catechists, and teachers, not only in missions in Ceylon, but also in various parts of India. It is now proposed to make the Jaffna College a First-grade College; to extend its course of study; to add to its staff of foreign and native professors, enlarging and improving its building accommodation, and providing bursaries in aid of poor students. To accomplish this, the sum of £30,000 will be required. Friends in America have promised to raise half of this amount, if the rest can be obtained in Great Britain.

Rev. J. INGHAM PICKFORD, of the C.M.S., missionary in Colombo for ten years, spoke from personal knowledge of the work of the Jaffna College, and emphasised the need for a Christian education for the rising generation in India. Mr. Pickford, with deep emotion, referred to a telegram which had been received in England the previous day by the wife of a C.M.S. missionary in Kandy for twenty-three years, announcing the sudden death of her husband.

MR. JAMES B. WOOKEY asks us to state that he is open to address meetings at churches in or around London for the purpose of obtaining signatures in favour of the repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts in India. His address is 90, Almack-road, Clapton, London, E.

MESSRS. FULLERTON and SMITH.

THESE esteemed brethren continue in their good work, "the Lord confirming the word, with signs following." The postponement of their projected visit to Scotland left them free to visit several places from which applications had been received, and they welcomed the opportunity Pontypridd, at the junction of the Taff and Rhondda valleys, was the first place visited, and here they found themselves in the midst of a population of 200,000 people. The services were held in the Presbyterian, Congregational, and Baptist Chapels, and for nine days crowds flocked to hear the Gospel. It was a time of blessing. At Crosskeys, midway between Risca and Abercarne, with a scattered population of 100,000, success crowned their labours, the whole district being moved, and many of the worst characters brought to the Lord.

Despite the alarming colliery accidents which have taken place here, ungodliness is prevalent, and the growth of the churches does not keep pace with the increase in the population. Twenty-five years ago Mr. Spurgeon preached to 30,000 people here, and many lingered till near midnight, the preacher delivering several sermons in one of the chapels. The memory of this event is still cherished, and the results have not disappeared. Verily "the fields are again white unto harvest," and our brethren hope soon to be able to arrange for an extended visit.

Returning to England, they were brought into contact with a totally different class of people, but they were as much at home with the refined suburbans of Sutton as with the rough miners of the Principality. In both cases the same Gospel proved "the power of God unto salvation." Rev. J. M. Bergin, through whom the services were arranged, threw himself heartily into the work, and was as heartily supported by the members of his church. No efforts were spared, and prayer was made continually for a blessing upon the mission. The visit will never be forgotten; the town was moved, and scores were dealt with in the inquiry-room.

The success at Sutton points the moral that our suburbs are amongst the most promising fields of labour to the evangelist. With a Divine quickening and a renewed consecration, the denizens of Villadom will awake to a sense of their responsibility to the masses of our towns and cities, who are left unreached by our impoverished churches. There are whole districts in London in which there is scarcely one resident Christian family, and the consequence is, that the people are tending to a lower depth. There is a "bitter cry" which ascends to the ears of "the Lord God of Sabaoth," from hearts saddened well-nigh to breaking, and the response must come from those who are entrenched in snug villas, if it is to be silenced. With nothing but the gin-shop and the low theatre to break the sad monotony of their lot, the worst passions are being nursed, and there will be an awful harvesting from the guilt gardens in our midst. Carlyle truly says, "Soul is kindled by soul," and never was there a truer word spoken. Let it be pondered by season-ticket holding Christians, who pride themselves in the competency which enables to live out of town, and then let them answer the old pharisaic query, "Am I my brother's keeper," by the persistent resolve to "seek and to save the lost" in our vast centres of population. City missionaries, ragged and Sunday-school superintendents, and struggling pastors will welcome their co-operation, and who can tell with what results?

After leaving Sutton, the evangelists held a few days' mission at Ampthill, in Bedfordshire, with, as a friend writes, "crowds and blessing," and now they are labouring in Rotherham and Masboro', in Yorkshire. At Sutton-in-Craven, the last place visited before Rotherham, they were able to reach a cluster of large villages, where they found ministers and people ready for work after a season of earnest prayer. Preparedness for blessing usually precedes its bestowal, and the rule has obtained here. Crowds flocked to the services: while the inquiry room was filled with adults each evening, about forty children were seeking the Saviour. It has proved a time of exceptional blessing, and "the thanksgiving of many abound to the glory of God." Messrs. Fullerton and Smith, on returning to London, hope to conduct services at Putney and Wandsworth, and after the Pastors' College Conference in April will, God willing, visit Huddersfield, Burton-on-Trent, Greenock, and Tobermory. C.

MR. QUARRIER'S HOMES.

ANOTHER step forward in the development of these Orphan Homes was taken last week in the opening of a new church at Bridge of Weir. It has been erected specially for the benefit of the orphan children resident at the Homes, though there is a gallery for the public. It is a handsome erection, costing altogether some £6000, all of which has been subscribed. In addition there are a clock for the church tower, and a peal of bells, with a carillon machine, that plays hymns and national airs—all the gifts of friends of the work.

The opening of the church was signalised by an all-day meeting and conference, at which various friends delivered helpful addresses on spiritual topics. In the course of the day Mr. Quarrier said all he wanted now was £20,000 to build twelve more houses for the orphans. Every existing house is filled, and still the children are coming to him for shelter.

THE GOSPEL SHIPS.

THE French Gospel ship, after a very stormy voyage across the Channel from Bordeaux, has safely reached Portsmouth, for which we can only praise and thank God. During the voyage home, many serious disasters to the shipping and to our brave seamen have taken place.

The vessel has been on this Mission cruise in France for the past nine months at La Rochelle, Nantes, St. Nazaire, and, for the whole of the winter, at Bordeaux, where she was lent with her little crew for the use of Mr. McAll's Mission. The captain and crew have occupied their time in visiting English and other ships, holding meetings on board for the English, and distributing the Word of God, Gospel books, letters, cards, &c. A wish has been expressed that the British and Foreign Sailors' Society should take up the English work among the sailors visiting that Port. We are unable to do this ourselves, and must be content to pioneer and leave others to follow up the work.

The Herald of Mercy has been for the past two months at Plymouth, with our crew working very happily and successfully among the fishermen and seamen, several of whom have been led to Jesus. Christian seamen and fishermen have also experienced much blessing. For knitted cuffs, comforters, and waistcoats made by Christian ladies, the men are most thankful, and send their sincere thanks to those of your readers who have thus laboured for the comfort of these hard-worked toilers of the sea.

Other ports in France will shortly be visited for Gospel work, for which we ask a deep interest in your prayers. Bibles, Gospel books, &c., are always welcome.

Gosport. HENRY COOK.

PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.—A correspondent draws our attention to the "Cycle of Prayer" at the end of the pocket almanack of the Church Missionary Society, in which the work of that Society is so arranged as to make some part of it a subject for specific prayer each day of the month. It is suggested that all missionary societies should adopt this plan.

For the Young.

"SHAKING OUT A REEF."

LOOKING OUT FOR THE FISHING-BOAT.

A PRETTY sixpenny book with this nautical name has been prepared and published by Miss AGNES WESTON, of the Sailors' Rest, Devonport, who is now known all over the world as "the sailor's friend." In this book she gives many very interesting facts about the wonderful progress that has been made in helping "Jack" to lead a sober, happy, and good life. We want very much to enlist the warm sympathies of our young readers on behalf of the splendid work that Miss Weston and her helpers are doing, and we therefore give on this page some choice extracts from the little book. By Miss Weston's kindness we are able to give also several of the pictures; they will speak for themselves. If any of our young friends should want to write to Miss Weston, and tell her how much they approve of her goodness to "Jack," they should address her at the Sailors' Rest, Devonport:—

"Bright times coming for us, Miss Weston, when you shake out a reef or two at this dear old Sailors' Rest; and it's about time you did it, too. You don't know how we're crowded at night! we're like herrings in a barrel," said a stalwart blue-jacket; "we're not particular; we sleep on the ground, the bagatelle-boards, or anywhere." Such is the overwhelming answer given after thirteen years' trial, by the blue-jackets and marines of H.M. service, to the gloomy prophecies of many, that these men would never come to a place where coffee reigned instead of beer, and where every effort would be made to do them good in body, soul, and spirit.

"Are you comfortable here?" asked the Crown Princess of Germany, on a visit to the Sailors' Rest. "Yes, ma'am, we are; this is a jolly place; just walk into the reading-room, and see." Here we take a peep at them, almost as comfortable as if they were at home, reading the news, turning over bound volumes of illustrated papers, and spinning a yarn over the fire—those two shipmates, who have met after a long cruise.

"No blue-jacket or marine ever to be turned from the door, even if 'three sheets in the wind.'" "No compulsion of any kind to be used to draw men into meetings and classes; the men to feel as free as if in their own homes." "Men to pay a fair price for food, beds, and baths, but to be able to use the Sailors' Rest in every other way without payment." What is the result? Many a man, once a drunkard, now thanks God for the rule which admitted a man in drink. "I'm glad Miss Weston's got the 'Napier,'" said a seaman. "I'd spent every farthing there, and was roaring drunk, and they kicked me out into the gutter, and there I lay until the dear people at the Sailors' Rest came out and carried me in, publican's leavings as I was, and I turned to a new life, God bless 'em." "Never was so happy in my life," a sailor called out, regardless of the impropriety of disturbing a meeting; "been away four years, but here I am spending my first evening at the Sailors' Rest, and moored fore and aft;" and he pointed to the happy wife on one side, and the children on the other.

More than thirteen years ago one of Her Majesty's ships was paying off at Devonport; with Miss Wintz to help me I had just begun active personal work in the port. We were holding large Sunday gatherings in a furniture warehouse and auction room, when a seaman asked me for a few minutes' conversation. With tears in his eyes he told how he had gone adrift, and numbers of his shipmates, too. "What we want," said he, emphatically, "is a place here, close to the dockyard gates—a nice little place where we could be safe, when we paid off, from the land sharks and alligators, where there would be no drink. We talked all about it before we paid off, and we said, 'Wonder whether Miss Weston will be outside the dockyard gates to keep us from going wrong; she has written to us so often, daresay we shall see her.' We came out with a band of music at our head, and there were the publics dressed out with flags and evergreens, and fiddles going, but you weren't there; so we got 'ticed into the publics, and we all got pretty well cleaned out." Thus the first idea of the Sailors' Rest came from a sailor; there had been Sailors' Homes doing a good work, but none on the spot he pointed out, and none which could be called "Jack's Coffee-House."

The sailor boys claimed almost our first interest and attention. "Somebody's boys" they undoubtedly were, from every part of the country; but who was to look after them, and give them a happy home when ashore, amidst all the temptations of a great naval arsenal? Fine young fellows they were; very anxious to be every inch sailors, and each with his home-history to tell; many a one had a Christian mother, whose prayers followed her boy; others were orphans, and some had led a rough life before joining. Two thousand young seamen are something to deal with. "Shy birds," said one of their officers; "you will never catch them, and if you do you will never keep them." Ominous words, but with a great deal of truth in them, as was learned by bitter experience.

In "shaking out our reef," one great object will be to provide a coffee bar, and a large reading and recreation room, expressly for the sailor boys, that much larger numbers may be welcomed under our roof than is possible now.

SOMEBODY'S BOY.

If the whole scope of the work was simply to rescue and to help our future Navy, it would, as has been truly said, have been worth all the money that has been spent upon it; and a great deal more besides. I attribute the wonderful hold that the work has on the service at large, to the last thirteen years' work among the boys who now constitute the men of the fleet all over the world.

This sailor boys' work was also most appropriately commenced by one of themselves—a fine bright young fellow, full of life and spirits, and a devoted Christian. In 1875 he was training in H.M.S. Impregnable, and when the difficulties seemed almost insurmountable in getting the boys in, he volunteered to recruit. "I'll go out," he said, "into the streets and Park, and see if I can get them to come." He did so; dozens of boys followed him, and earnest and hearty were his prayers that the work might grow and prosper. We all felt that the service lost a fine young seaman when, shortly after this, he met his death by falling down into a chain-locker. I often look round on the crowds of boys under our roof, and can see how God has answered, and is answering, his prayers; and I also see the immense and increasing need of "shaking out a reef" for our future sailors.

Our Sailors' Rest would cease to be worthy of its name if we did not take a deep interest, not only in Jack, but in those near and dear to him. The mothers and fathers, the wives and little children, are living to a great extent around us, and the Sailors' Rest is very dear to them. These "little ships' companies" of children are often more than the mother can possibly keep from starvation, and they turn to us as their friends. The devoted band of ladies who work voluntarily with Miss Wintz and myself visit them, and give them needful help from our funds, invite them to our meetings, and aid them in every way. I am sure that many a reader of this little book would be willing to help me in this part of the work; little garments of all kinds for sailor babies, larger ones for the little children, and still, again, garments and warm clothing for women are constantly needed. I only wish I had a hundred working parties, plying the busy needle for me!

Many an interesting incident I could tell about the fishermen, with whom we communicate by sending them monthly a nice packet of Blue Backs and Ashore and Afloat. The fisherman's life is dangerous indeed, and he is a seaman to the backbone; his boys go afloat in our Royal Navy, and make some of our finest blue-jackets. The wife watches and prays for the return of the fishing-boat she loves so well. A fisherman wrote from the Short Blue Fleet: "We have received your parcels, and do look out so eagerly for them; our men are all reading your papers, and feeling that they have a friend who prays for them, and tries to lead them to Christ, and I do pray to God to mesh those books into a net, and to use them to save many souls for his eternal kingdom." To this fisherman's prayer we say earnestly and heartily, "Amen." I am sure that I may say, "Help me in shaking out reefs all over the world; help my Gospel and temperance work; and help me to build our Sailors' Rest, in which our men learn all that is good."

One of the prettiest sights on Whit Sunday last was an old couple from the most rural part of Essex—the old father with his gaiters and cut-away coat, the mother with her red shawl; they sat in our Hall, and the tears stood in their eyes as a very fine bronzed young seaman got up, and simply and earnestly told how he had been persuaded to come into that Hall, and that God had spoken to him, and that he had become a Christian, and that no one in the Navy was happier than he was; then the tears ran down the old people's cheeks, and they said, "To hear their boy speak like that filled their cup of joy to the brim."

I specially want to increase my children's band of "little naval volunteers," and to any little boy or girl who will become enrolled in that band, and collect if only a small sum, I will send a pretty box free on receipt of name and address.

With a paragraph from a sailor's letter, I will complete the shaking out of this reef:—"I often think of the Sailors' Rest; it has been a rest to me. Please give my love to all the kind friends there; I shall not forget what they have taught me; I have got something to live by. I have been telling my mates that we are treated at the Sailors' Rest as if we were lords of the Admiralty, and not blue-jackets. I shall try to get numbers to come, and shall look forward myself to being with you, if God spares me."

Mr. CHAS. INGLIS at NOTTINGHAM.

Mr. Charles Inglis has concluded a month of special services at Nottingham, attended with great blessing. The Albert Hall, which holds some 2500, has not only been filled on Sundays with all classes, to hear the story of a Saviour's love, but many have remained behind to be spoken with personally about their souls.

The week-night services held in the different chapels or mission halls throughout the town will long be remembered. Many in those services were found under deep conviction of sin, and many left the inquiry-room rejoicing in the realisation of their sins being all forgiven. One remarkable case amongst those who were blessed was that of an old woman aged ninety, who was deeply anxious about her soul, and, after being spoken to by one of the workers, went away fully trusting the Lord Jesus. The afternoon Bible talks at the Y.M.C.A. proved a great help to the Lord's people. Many a weary worker got refreshed, while many a disheartened one was greatly encouraged to toil on till the crowning day. One cheering feature of the united Gospel mission has been to see some who were brought to Christ on a previous mission of Mr. Inglis's to the town some twenty years ago not only stedfast, but seeking to win others for the Lord.

"MOB RULE IN LAUSANNE."

The trial of the persons concerned in the riot against the Salvation Army in Lausanne, described under the above title in our issue of Feb. 3, was concluded on the 5th inst. The prisoners were twenty-two rioters, five Salvationists, and the woman who kept the café in which the meeting and riot occurred.

Three of the rioters were acquitted; the remaining nineteen were condemned to fines, varying from fifteen to forty-eight francs, to pay collectively two hundred francs as damages, and to defray three quarters of the costs of the trial. The Salvationists were fined fifteen francs each, and ordered to pay the rest of the costs. The café proprietor was acquitted; the meeting having been held in a private room, did not thus contravene the decree passed in 1883.

The quiet speech and bearing of the Salvationists as compared with the demeanour of their opponents have been commented upon by various local newspapers. It is to be hoped that these unfortunate collisions will now give place to more friendly relations between the Army and the people.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, SANDGATE.—Would your readers kindly send me some Gospels or Testaments, to give to the Oxford Light Infantry on their departure from this camp to the Isle of Wight? This regiment attends the Institute exceptionally well, and a few have professed conversion. H. Hull.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, March 18, John xiv. 1—15; Monday, March 19, John xiv. 16—31; Tuesday, March 20, John xv. 1—15; Wednesday, March 21, John xv. 16—27; Thursday, March 22, John xvi. 1—15; Friday, March 23, John xvi. 16—33; Saturday, March 24, John xvii. 1—13.

MR. SPIERS has been holding a very successful mission at the Presbyterian Church, Haverstock-hill, N., of which Rev. Duncan Sillars, M.A., is the minister. On Sunday week 950 children came to the first service, and on Sunday last, in spite of the rough weather, 1100 were present. In the daytime Mr. Spiers has visited various schools and colleges in the neighbourhood.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, Watford, March 17; Liverpool, April 8—12. Mr. Josiah Spiers, Presbyterian Church, Haverstock-hill, March 4—16, at 7. Mr. Pericles Green, Abergavenny, March 13—16. Mr. Martin J. Hall, Trinity Hall, Stewart's-road, Battersea, March 12—16, at 6.30; Stockwell Orphanage, March 26—29. Mr. George Banaster, Anvil-street, Bristol, March 11—18. Rev. E. A. Stuart, M.A., President of Mission, Town Hall, Bromley, Kent, March 16, at 6.30. Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Norwich, March 17—18; Lausanne, March 23—27. Messrs. Lidstone and Hutchinson, Ipswich, April 17—19.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS.

The silver wedding day of the Prince and Princess of Wales, and the twenty-fourth anniversary of the Farningham and Swanley Homes, were celebrated by an excellent musical and gymnastic display at Albert Hall on Saturday afternoon, the Earl of Aberdeen presiding. The secretary, Rev. A. O. Charles, was unfortunately absent through illness, his place being taken by Canon Freemantle.

The Homes now contain five hundred homeless and orphan boys, who are received in families of thirty each, with a man and his wife as superintendents. They are fed, clothed, educated, and taught useful trades, until able to go out into the world and support themselves in an honest and God-fearing manner. Even then they are not lost sight of, and each year the "old boys" who are within reach receive an invitation to revisit their former quarters. In annual subscriptions and other sources of revenue a sum of about £3000 is annually available for carrying on the work of the Institution, but an amount of £13,000 is needed each year for maintaining the full benefits, and for the balance of £5,000 an appeal to the public is compulsory. The London offices are at 1, Bank-buildings, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

TEMPERANCE AT THE WEST END.

An eleven days' mission under the auspices of the Marylebone Temperance Federation and General Committee of the Gospel Temperance Movement, was concluded on March 9. The first five meetings were held in the Portman Rooms, Baker-street, formerly occupied by Madame Tussaud's exhibition; the latter six in St Mary's Hall, Crawford-street.

The mission was opened on Monday, Feb. 27, by Mr. William Noble, who gave an able and convincing address. Referring to the former uses of the rooms, he said, "Although there is no Chamber of Horrors here now, we may say there is a chamber of horrors in the memory of every drunkard."

Among those who subsequently addressed the meetings were Messrs. William J. Palmer, J.P., Dr. B. W. Richardson, Canon Wilberforce, W. S. Caine, M.P., Rev. Canon Barker, Hon. and Rev. Canon Leigh, Rev. Thomas Evans, Rev. William Mottram, Mr. J. H. Raper, and others. Canon Wilberforce's address created a marked impression on the large audience. He appealed to his hearers, on the highest grounds, to fight the drink traffic. A very successful meeting for ladies only was held. Mrs. W. S. Caine presided, and Mrs. William Noble, Mrs. J. Christie Mackenzie, and Mrs. Howell addressed the meeting.

This very successful mission was brought to a close on Friday last when Canon Leigh, Rev. William Stott, and Mr. William Noble addressed the meeting. Messrs. W. Sutherland and J. T. Rae acted as joint secretaries for the united committees.

THE HEBRIDES.—At the annual meeting of the West Coast Mission, held recently, one of the speakers said the present destitution in the Highlands and the want of roads in some parts were unworthy of a Christian land. There are cheering accounts of the spiritual condition of the people.

THE FOREIGN MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.—Some 8000 copies of a circular letter on the subject of the approaching Conference have been sent to the secretaries of Missionary Societies, to be forwarded to their agents and workers among the heathen, in all parts of the world. The circular embodies a request that all missionaries should unite in earnest prayer for a blessing on the Conference.

Y.M.C.A., LEYTON AND WALTHAMSTOW.—The members of this branch number sixty-seven, nearly half of whom joined last year, when more central premises were taken. At the annual meeting Ransome Wallis, Esq. presided, and addresses were delivered by Rev. Colmer B. Symes, B.A., Mr. R. Burn, and Mr. G. E. Morgan, M.A. It was shown that new agencies are being added, and that the old ones are being worked with increased vigour.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portraits of the Queen of Sweden, and of Prince and Princess Oscar of Sweden.

A valuable contribution to the literature of the questions bearing upon the Board School system of education has been made by Dr. More Madden, who has had an experience of many years in connection with an extensive Children's Hospital in Dublin. Dr. Madden says:—

> Nature has unmistakably pointed out that the first eight or ten years should be mainly given up to the domestic development of the religious and moral faculties, and to the physical training of the child, rather than to futile efforts at forcing its mental powers beyond the limits of the most elementary education.

In reference to the large proportion of the children who in our cities come within the supervision of the Education Department, he advocates State provision for a supply of food. We commend these views to those who are in doubt as to the wisdom of feeding the semi-pauper children who are compelled to attend the Board Schools; they are the opinions of one whom long familiarity with the subject in question has qualified to speak with authority.

A contemporary, referring to the recent mass meeting in the Irish Metropolis of the representatives of the beer, wine, and spirit trades in Great Britain and Ireland, in regard to the coming legislation upon Sunday closing and the drink question, disposes of the speakers' arguments very briefly:—

> It was a large gathering, but its size only proved what everybody already knew—that a great many persons depend upon the liquor trade for their sustenance.

It is a more painful fact, however, that of these persons so many are Christians who do not see any inconsistency in their being engaged in a traffic which is potent in producing poverty and crime, and who give to Christian works a tithe of the wealth which has resulted from the infliction of misery and ruin upon others.

A Roman Catholic contemporary, in an article upon Sunday-schools, pays the following tribute to theBible:—

> It is certain that the Bible, even looked at as a human production, is the very best book in the world. No other is equal to it in vivid description, in varied interest, in force of expression, in power of appeal to the heart and conscience. When read intelligently, so as to bring out its meaning, it never fails to make an impression on young people.

The writer too goes on to quote the opinion of the Roman Catholic Bishop of Birmingham, that Bible histories > seem to us to destroy half the beauty of the Scripture narrative, by not giving them in the Scripture language. We see no reason, so far as they may do so with propriety, why Catholic children should not have the same advantage as Protestants have in a familiarity with the sacred text—a familiarity which, with Protestants, undoubtedly does more for their intellectual culture than all mere literary study put together.

To this we can only add: Neither do we. We earnestly hope that the effect which the writer of the article attributes to the reading of the Bible, "with care, and reverence, and with prayer for the grace and blessing of God," as he properly puts it, may not be confined any longer to the children in our Protestant schools. But whatever an individual Romanist here and there may say, one thing is beyond question—that the Romish Hierarchy is an inveterate enemy of an open Bible, and that notwithstanding an evangelical sermon or sentiment now and then, ignorance and superstition are the Jachin and Boaz of its temple.

Historians tell us that at Christ's first advent the heathen not only felt despair because of the injustices around them, but their own consciences haunted them in their dreams, and they knew not where to fly. An article in the current Contemporary goes to show that the same hopelessness is passing over Russia. Political despair among multitudes has been succeeded by apathy; the nerves of the people are wrecked; suicides are continuous; terror and uncertainty appal; necromancy and spiritualism are resorted to; the world is forsaken for solitude. Probably the writer has not got at the heart of the pessimism that, with others, despairs of help from the world, and is looking to Christ. But he pictures a state of society that has not been paralleled, perhaps, since our Lord's first coming.

The same Review presents an aspect of the question of the freedmen in the American Southern States that is full of foreboding. A people is doomed when the subjugation, and not the elevation, of the masses is its policy. There are seven millions of freedmen, mostly in the South, and, instead of equality, an incompletely abolished slavery is perpetuating injustices, caste restrictions, social wrongs and heartburnings, which will again demand the protests of philanthropy; and no nation can escape the judgments of God while it tolerates and inflicts them.

A minister among Congregationalists writes in their Magazine of Christian Life in Switzerland, and says:—

> That which strikes one accustomed to our Congregational methods is, the division of labour adopted amongst the pastors. Our "one man, one church" system—which, in an age that in every other department demands constant change and variety, shuts up a congregation to the utterances of one man, to the speedy exhaustion of the brain of the one and of the patience of the other—has no place here.

Nor had it any place in the Apostolic Churches. We read of, at least, five prophets and teachers in the church at Antioch. A promising movement seems to have begun among some Nonconformist churches in this direction. We hear of deacons preaching and young men invited to exhort. A return to New Testament usage in this respect would be very fruitful of blessing.

During recent years the best efforts of Bible publishers have been exerted to providing large type Bibles in a really portable form. Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode have been very successful in this direction, and one of their latest productions does them great credit. It is a beautiful octavo book, in bold brevier type, with marginal references, printed on specially prepared Indian paper. Although the deservedly popular "Queen's Printers' Aids to the Student," in their fullest and best form, are bound up with this Bible, the volume is only a little more than half as thick as similar Bibles printed on ordinary paper. Strongly bound in Russia leather, it makes a specially serviceable Bible, and doubtless will prove a favourite edition with preachers, teachers, and others who have to carry the Scripures about with them.

Rev. Dr. Wylie's timely work, "Which Sovereign? Queen Victoria, or the Pope?" has been published in an abridged form, the reading of which will, it is hoped, stimulate many people to inquire further concerning the subjects discussed. The abridgment (3d. Morgan & Scott) contains a complete synopsis of Dr. Wylie's book, and several of the most important sections in full. At the end there are copies of several documents bearing on the forthcoming combined commemoration of the defeat of the Spanish Armada in 1588, and of the accession of the Protestant Dynasty in 1688.

As drink and poverty are twin sisters, it is not surprising to find a Dublin contemporary, The Medical Press, dealing in a recent issue with the question of the evils arising from the tenement house, with its terrible "one room" system. What life really is under such circumstances, and what probability there is of purity and piety remaining, may be inferred from the statement which the writer makes:—

> In what was called the parlour of one of these old mansions, we found one of the occupants had the ceiling hung with wet bladders to dry them for sale; another inmate had some hens to assist in providing bread; a third had the refuse fish of the market, in the hope that some wretchedly poor creature would buy even them before starving. In the centre of the room, on a miserable bed, was a child whose scalded legs were gangrenous; and a stifling stench, intolerable to all except those who, driven by poverty, had become inured to it, permeated the house. Yet in that room ten individuals, men and women, ate and slept.

There are in the Irish metropolis thousands of such "homes"; and, knowing this, the high death-rate and the terrible drink-rate are not difficult to account for. How long will it be, we again ask, before some practical result follows the appointment of the Royal Commission upon the Housing of the Poor?

A correspondent of one of the daily papers lately drew attention to the alarming increase of sham working-men's clubs in London. Without endorsing all that he says, his description of these places as mere "drinking-shops and petty gambling hells" must, we fear, be accepted as only too faithful. The whole system of clubs requires a thorough overhauling and re-adjustment, but no statesman has yet appeared with the courage to grapple with the subject, and face the indignant outcry of Pall Mall and St. James's at the idea of their luxurious haunts being brought into line with the workman's tap-room. The public has, however, a right to demand that the powers and penalties already existing should be exercised and enforced by the authorities against these "bogus" institutions. Are they to be allowed to work demoralisation and ruin unchecked until some Charrington arises to head a crusade against them?

At a meeting held at Liverpool a few days ago, Mr. G. S. S. Vidal, secretary of the White Cross Society, in the course of an address he gave on "True Manliness," spoke in encouragement of theatre-going. Asked to withdraw this advice to young men, he declined to do so. In explanation, he admitted that theatres are now a power of evil, but argued that efforts should be made to render them a power for good. He certainly did no kindness to music-hall performers when he said that they lent themselves to the singing of immoral songs, because such songs are in demand, rather than from a personal liking for that which is depraved. A Liverpool correspondent writes to us expressing his amazement that none of the clergymen present at the meeting challenged Mr. Vidal's advice. He asks how, in the face of the prayer, "Lead us not into temptation," White Cross young men can be recommended to seek amusement at theatres, which, with music-halls, are notoriously resorted to by immoral characters.

It has been stated that some of those who have taken part in the Down-Grade discussion are possessed of considerably more theological knowledge than Mr. Spurgeon. The assertion goes to indicate that the word "theology" is being used in a new and unjustifiable sense. A preacher who, by the Spirit's concurrence, has won thousands to Christ; who has assisted in the training of hundreds of successful pastors; whose "Commentary on the Psalms" aids preachers everywhere; whose "Morning and Evening Exercises" are read by myriads of devout persons; and whose sermons are eagerly welcomed wherever the English language is spoken, and year by year are always felt to be fresh and stimulating to Christian devotion and faith—such a man may err, but he ought not to be spoken of as a less furnished theologian than preachers who are comparatively unknown.

In last week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN was reproduced a note from The British Weekly on the short article, "The Down-er Grade" (Feb. 24). That note was incorrect, (1) in making Mr. Charrington responsible for the article, and (2) in exaggerating its statement. The original article said:—

> Last Saturday night I accompanied Mr. Charrington through a district occupying perhaps a quarter of a mile square, comprising several streets of houses, which my companion, by his own determined and fearless action, had cleared of their vicious inhabitants.
> But the most shocking feature of the case is that in every street the churches, by the direct complicity of some of their members, or by inexcusable ignorance and neglect, are aiders and abettors of this iniquity.

The note in The British Weekly was as follows:—

> It has been reserved for Mr. Charrington to make by far the most serious assault that has ever been directed against organised churches. In THE CHRISTIAN of last week it is stated, on Mr. Charrington's authority, that in nearly every street in the East-end the churches are aiders and abettors of vicious houses, either by the direct complicity of some of their members, or by inexcusable ignorance and neglect.

It will be observed that we spoke of several streets in an area of "a quarter of a mile square," not of "every street in the East-end." To describe the statement regarding some of the churches in that locality as "the most serious assault that has ever been directed against organised churches," is inaccurate, even though it was added that the same state of things as was described exists more or less in every square mile of London. The editor of The Weekly kindly undertakes that his mistake will be corrected in this week's issue.

While Germany has been mourning the death of its first Emperor, the Heir Apparent to the English throne, and his popular consort, have celebrated their "Silver Wedding." The festivities at Marlborough House have, of course, been shadowed by the gloom of the death-chamber in Berlin. Perhaps it is not amiss that their Royal Highnesses, even in the midst of their family rejoicings, should be reminded of the transitory nature of earthly pomp and glory. At the same time, all the Queen's loyal subjects will wish and pray that the Prince and Princess of Wales may see a long, happy, and useful life in their exalted position.

We know that it is no enviable thing to live and move in the fierce light that beats about a throne, or the steps that lead to it. But we could wish that the past record of the Prince had been such as to call for unqualified approval and congratulation. Even The Times, in its long, laudatory and courtly review of the Prince's wedded life, cannot refrain from a word of protest and advice:—

> Happily the cases are rare when his conduct is less free from reproach than his warmest well-wishers could desire. Amongst them is the unfortunate weakness which has led him to patronise American cattle-drovers and prize-fighters. It is to the eternal honour of the Princess of Wales that her marked disapproval of the cruel practice of pigeon-shooting has rendered it unfashionable. It would be a serious evil if anything said or done by the Prince should cause any diminution in the loathing with which the brutal practice of pugilism ought to be regarded.

We trust that with years will come wisdom, and a nobler conception of the great responsibilities and duties of one who in the providence of God seems set to rule over a mighty empire.

We turn with a sense of relief to the earliest official utterances of the new Emperor of Germany, who by marriage is so closely related to the English Royal House. In a letter to the German people, he sets forth a programme of peace and international amity that bodes well, we trust, for the future of Europe. In another manifesto, addressed to Prince Bismarck the Emperor declares himself on behalf of the largest religious toleration, and also says, on the question of education:—

> Only a generation growing up upon the sound basis of the fear of God and simplicity of morals can possess sufficient resisting power to overcome the dangers which in a time of rapid economical movement arise for the entire community through the examples of the highly luxurious life of individuals.

Many who desire to be "imitators of God as dear children" are observing with anxious and painful interest some of the features of the Wesleyan West-end Mission, and the views propounded in the first articles of the last two numbers of The Methodist Times.

A misleading advertisement, headed "The Down-grade Controversy," &c., was inadvertently inserted in this and other religious papers. The pamphlets advertised represent the so-called New Jerusalem or Swedenborgian Church, whose teaching we regard as erroneous and mischievous.

EXETER HALL Y.M.C.A.—The forty-fourth annual meeting of this Association is to be held at Exeter Hall, on Tuesday evening, March 20. The speakers include Rev. Canon Basil Wilberforce, Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, and Rev. John McNeill (of Edinburgh). Mr. McNeill is announced to give special addresses on the following Wednesday and Sunday evenings.

RYDE Y.M.C.A.—This Association is thirty years' old. The report for 1887 shows that it is serving many useful functions. There has been an improvement in the attendance at the Sunday afternoon Bible class. The library has been added to, the volumes now numbering 8,000; and Hazelwood, the home for young men of the commercial class, continues to be extensively patronised. The auxiliary agencies are numerous and in good working order.

MR. SPURGEON'S NEW CREED.

IN inviting the 432 ministers who said "Yes" to his recent inquiry to a Conference fixed for April 16, the week preceding the Baptist Union meetings, Mr. Spurgeon encloses two creeds. No. 1 is the basis already agreed to. No. 2 is much more precise and extended, and Mr. Spurgeon says, "It will be a far greater pleasure to me if many of the brethren will prefer to sign No. 2. This I have drawn up for those who may wish to enter afterwards, for all future students and associates." The new Conference is to consist of persons who have been students of the Pastors' College, such other brethren as may now be admitted by the President, and those who may be elected by three-fourths of a meeting of the Conference.

The new creed, which is preceded and followed by a good deal of explanation, runs thus:—

> We, as a body of men, believe in the "doctrines of grace," what are popularly styled Calvinistic views (though we by no means bind ourselves to the teaching of Calvin, or any other uninspired man), but we do not regard as vital to our fellowship any exact agreement upon all the disputed points of any system, yet we feel that we could not receive into this our union any who do not unfeignedly believe that salvation is all of the free grace of God from first to last, and is not according to human merit, but by the undeserved favour of God. We believe in the eternal purpose of the Father, the finished redemption of the Son, and the effectual work of the Holy Ghost.
> (1) The Divine inspiration, authority, and sufficiency of the Holy Scriptures.
> (2) The right and duty of private judgment in the interpretation of the Holy Scriptures, and the need of the teaching of the Holy Spirit, to a true and spiritual understanding of them.
> (3) The unity of the Godhead and the Trinity of the persons therein, namely, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.
> (4) The true and proper Godhead of our Lord Jesus, and his real and perfect manhood.
> (5) The utter depravity of human nature in consequence of the Fall, which Fall is no fable nor metaphor, but a literal and sadly practical fact.
> (6) The substitutionary sacrifice of the Lord Jesus Christ, by which alone sin is taken away, and sinners are saved.
> (7) The offices of our Lord as Prophet, Priest and King, and as the one Mediator between God and man.
> (8) The justification of the sinner by faith alone, through the blood and righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ.
> (9) The work of the Holy Spirit in the regeneration, conversion, sanctification, and preservation of the saved.
> (10) The immortality of the soul, the resurrection of the body, and the judgment of the world by our Lord Jesus, which judgment will be final, according to the words of the Great Judge: "These shall go away into eternal punishment, but the righteous into eternal life."
> (11.) The Divine institution of the Christian ministry, and the obligation and perpetuity of the ordinances of Believers' Baptism and the Lord's Supper.
> We utterly abhor the idea of a new Gospel or an additional revelation, or a shifting rule of faith to be adapted to the ever-changing spirit of the age. In particular we assert that the notion of probation after death, and the ultimate restitution of condemned spirits, is so unscriptural and unprotestant and so unknown to all Baptist Confessions of Faith, and draws with it such consequences, that we are bound to condemn it, and to regard it as one with which we can hold no fellowship.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.—PRAISE for much blessing and answered prayer during special services at the Corn Exchange, Huntingdon.——That God has manifested his power in the enabling many to give their hearts to Him during the mission services and cottage visitations of Miss Grace Abbott and Miss Fisher, in Stonehouse, Glos.——PRAYER for blessing on an effort to rescue discharged prisoners and released convicts in Glasgow.——For blessing on Christian work at Lewes and Brighton, by Messrs. THE LATE GERMAN EMPEROR.

At a very advanced age, and amid the sincere regrets of the civilised world, the Emperor William I. of Germany has been gathered to his fathers. It is not needful in these columns to refer to the chequered and stirring career of the deceased Emperor; the facts have been very fully supplied by the daily press. Though by the necessities of his position, and the circumstances of his time, he was as much "a man of war," perhaps, as Joshua of old, it is interesting to know that his personal sympathies have ever been on the side of peace, and he has probably done more in late years than the world is aware of to conserve the peace of Europe. The military supremacy of Germany, however, it must be said, is upheld at a tremendous cost to the Empire. Though a man of strong will and great force of character, the influence of the late Emperor was largely overshadowed by the potent personality of Prince Bismarck, who survives his august master.

"The King is dead; long live the King!" is a well-worn phrase which scarcely has its usual application in this case, since the life of the new Emperor seems so precarious. As his sentiments are known to be strongly in favour of the preservation of peace and the true development of Germany's vast resources, we can but pray that the threatened blow may be averted, and that Frederick III. may long reign over a people among whom socialistic discontent will disappear before their lessening burdens and their growing happiness.

Some deeply interesting comments on the death of the late Emperor were made by Rev. Dr. Adolph Saphir on Sunday last in the course of the morning service. He said:—

"It is a very important and solemn event to speak about as a believer to believers, and as we are met together for worship I shall limit myself to one aspect of the great man's life—his relation to the kingdom of God. Christ is King of kings and Prince of the kings of the earth; and we ought to remember the testimony lifted up by one who, in the providence of God, has sat upon a great throne. A few years ago, when serious changes were proposed to be made in the national Church of Prussia, and also in the schools, the Emperor, in an address which was published to the whole nation, used these weighty expressions:—

"'The Christian religion is the foundation on which we must abide. There is a movement in the present day in the churches—a leading astray of souls, which deeply grieves me; and a falling away from religion as the sole basis of morality. Our religious education must become much deeper, and more and more decided. That is of greater importance in the education of the young than the quantity of knowledge: the scientific training of the intellect will not produce moral elevation of character. If there is anything that can give stability in the present life, it is the one only foundation which is laid in Christ Jesus. We must all build on the one foundation of the Bible and the Gospel.'

"I was very much struck at the time by the value of this testimony to the whole nation, and, indeed, to all nations, especially in this day of confusion. I marked the words years ago, and I now translate them, because, I think, they will be solemn and interesting to us all.

"There are some other words of the late Emperor that I think we ought to remember. In the year 1873, the late Pope Pius IX. wrote to the Emperor, 'Everyone, who has received baptism belongs in a sense to the Pope.' The Emperor immediately replied, 'The Reformed faith which I, like my ancestors and most of my people, confess, does not permit us to acknowledge any mediator but our Lord Jesus Christ in our relation to God.' A year later the Emperor wrote to an English statesman, 'I have been called to lead the conflict with a power [that is, Papal Rome] whose history has proved it to be incompatible with the peace and welfare of nations; and the victory of which power would endanger in our days the blessings of the Reformation, liberty of conscience, and the authority of the law, not merely in Germany.'

"It is very evident what is meant by the words 'not merely in Germany.' In this country not only 'the world,' who, of course, do not understand these things, but even the Christian people, are blind to the danger of that fearful Church of Rome, which never changes. Strange to say, the danger of unbelief, the danger of lawlessness, the danger of Popery, are hidden from the eyes even of those who are Christians, and who are ministers in the Church of Christ. As for this great man, who has confessed the Lord Jesus Christ, and who has now been taken away after his long and eventful life, our full trust is, that when the blessed words of Scripture were spoken to him by a faithful minister of the Gospel, there was given unto him that last victory; these were the words, 'Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.'"

THE EMPEROR'S DEATH-BED.

(From "The Times" of Monday, March 12.)

The following account of the late Emperor's last moments will be read with interest—all the more as it is understood to come from the pen of the Court Chaplain, Dr. Kögel, who was called in to administer the spiritual comforts of Christian consolation to his dying Majesty:—

Dr. Kögel repaired to the Emperor's sick bed at five o'clock on Thursday evening. After a few observations, in the course of which the Chaplain spoke of the nation's prayerful sympathy with the august patient, he repeated the verse of Ps. xviii.: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for Thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." Then the verse of Isaish liv.: "For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee." And afterwards part of the first verse of Isaiah xliii.: "Fear not: for I have redeemed thee by thy name; thou art mine." After each of the above quotations the Emperor said: "That is beautiful." When the Chaplain continued, "I know that my Redeemer liveth; Christ is the resurrection and the life," the dying monarch broke in with, "That is right."

During the evening a number of further passages of Scripture were repeated, among them Isa. xiv. 27, "For the Lord of Hosts hath purposed, and who shall disannul it? And his hand is stretched out, and who shall turn it back?" Rom. v. 1, "Therefore, being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ;" Matt. xxviii. 20, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world;" 1 John i. 7, "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin"; John i. 29, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world;" and Rom. xiv. 7—9, "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord, and whether we die, we die unto the Lord: whether we live, therefore, or die, we are the Lord's. For to this end Christ both died and rose and revived, that He might be Lord both of the dead and living."

These passages were not repeated at one time, but at intervals, so that the Emperor's strength might not be overtaxed. Verses were also read from church hymns, including one of the Emperor's favourite verses. When the chaplain repeated the words of Simeon, "Lord, now lettest Thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation," the Grand Duchess of Baden asked her father if he had understood what had been said. He gave an affirmative reply by repeating the last words of the passage, "Mine eyes have seen thy salvation." In one of the pauses the Emperor remarked quite spontaneously, "God has helped me with his name." At another time he said, like one dreaming, "We are going to have a devotional hour together." Then, after an interval, he explained, on coming to himself, "I have had a dream; it was the last ceremony in the Cathedral." He evidently had in mind the picture of his own obsequies.

At four o'clock on Friday morning Court Chaplain Kögel offered up a prayer; and in the repetition of the Lord's Prayer, which followed, the Empress joined aloud. Then the chaplain began Ps. xxvii., "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?" And the Grand Duchess of Baden again asked, "Papa, do you understand?" The expressive answer was, "It was beautiful." Upon this the devoted daughter inquired, "Do you know that mamma is sitting by your bed and holding your hand?" At these words the dying Emperor opened his eyes, and turned them for a long time upon his mournful consort. When he closed them again, it was for ever. Thus his last looks were given to his wife.

The approach of death being unmistakable, the Court Chaplain pronounced a benediction upon his expiring Sovereign in the words: "The Lord bless thy going out and coming in from this time forth for evermore. Enter into peace. There remaineth, then, a rest for the people of God. Father, into thy hands we commend his spirit. Thou hast redeemed him, O faithful God." When life had left the frail body, the Imperial Family knelt down, and Dr. Kögel offered up a prayer, in which he thanked God for his goodness in preserving so long the life of the Emperor, and in redeeming him and taking his spirit to Himself. He commended Prussia and the Empire, the Empress, and all members of the Imperial Family, with their relatives, to the Divine care, and concluded with the words: "Have mercy upon our Royal House, our nation, and fatherland; and now in death fulfil to the Emperor the promise, 'I will bless thee; and thou shalt be a blessing.' Amen."

THE LATE MR. G. BREALEY.

The announcement of George Brealey's departure will have been read with sorrow by very many friends throughout the country, and also by hundreds of others in distant lands, for his name was very widely known in connection with his work for Christ on the Blackdown Hills, and through his "Blackdown Tracts," and "Arrows Shot at a Venture."

As was reported at the time, Mr. Brealey was last autumn struck with paralysis, by which he was deprived for some time of the power of speech, and so generally weakened that he was quite laid aside from active service. By the blessing of God on the means used, he partially recovered strength, and was able quietly to take part in Christian labour. In company with his wife, he proceeded a few weeks since to Weston-super-Mare. The change made him feel better, and he purposed returning to Clayhidon on Monday last week; but on the previous Saturday, in the afternoon, he suffered an apoplectic seizure, and on the Tuesday morning the Lord received his spirit.

From the beginning of his illness, Mr. Brealey suffered much from pain in his head; during the last twelve hours of his life he was quite unconscious. The funeral took place on Thursday afternoon. The hymns, "Hiding in Thee" and "Simply Trusting" (the last hymns sung by Mr. Brealey prior to his fatal illness), were sung, and addresses delivered, also affectionate references to the departed one. Mr. Thomas Newberry spoke from John xi. 26: "If any man serve Me, let him follow Me; and where I am, there shall also my servant be: if any man serve Me, him will my Father honour." And Mr. James Wright, of Bristol, from Phil. i. 21: "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." Mr. Douglas Russell afterwards read a touching letter from Mr. Stancomb, of Yeovil, and Mr. J. A. Vicary closed the service with prayer, and at the grave "For ever with the Lord" was sung.

The work on the Blackdown Hills will, God willing, be continued on the same lines as before by Mr. Walter Brealey, who has been for the past eighteen years his father's fellow-labourer in all departments.

LIVERPOOL STRANGERS' REST.—Eleven years ago, when this Rest was first opened, Park-lane was one of the worst districts of the city, sailors and emigrants being there surrounded by temptations, and profligacy abounding on every hand. Now the character of the neighbourhood is much improved, the better state of things being in a large measure consequent upon the operations of the Strangers' Rest mission. With the exception of the keeper, all the workers are volunteers. During last year meetings were held in English, German, French, Spanish, Finnish, and the Scandinavian languages. Mr. T. A. Leigh, Alexandra-buildings, James-street, Liverpool, is the hon. treasurer of the Rest.

SCRIPTURE DISTRIBUTION.

SIR,—Having had some little experience in the work of Bible distribution at my own charge, I send a few thoughts in harmony with some of the suggestions of Rev. J. Wilkinson, in his recent pamphlet.

In March last, needing a milder climate for a time, I made my way to Algiers, North Africa. On my arrival in that city, in my first walk through the busy streets, looking on the many nationalities represented, with their diversities of language and costume—French, Spanish, Italian, Jew, Greek, Arab, and others—I seemed to myself of a sudden to be in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost. I was impressed with the thought of the city as a grand centre for the distribution of the Word of God, and was glad to find a Depôt of the British and Foreign Bible Society. The agent and his assistant, a colporteur, kindly gave me much information about the work in this part of the Bible Society's great field.

I purchased a supply of Gospels in the various languages and began the distribution, spending several weeks, more or less daily, going into the cafés, shops, market-places, and among the French soldiers at the barracks, and about the governor's palace. The books were well received, with few exceptions, even among Jews and Mohammedans. I enjoyed my work, and felt it a great privilege to give the Gospels, in so many languages (thanks to the British and Foreign Bible Society), to many who had never seen them and to whom they had, at least, all the freshness of novelty.

I gave portions rather than whole New Testaments, believing that in the first work of evangelising, a Gospel was all-sufficient to guide to eternal life. In giving a Gospel rather than the whole New Testament it was with the conviction that they were more likely to read it through, and possibly repeat the reading, and, further, if they were not interested and blessed by the part, and that containing a summary of all saving truth, they probably would not be by the whole; on the other hand, if the portion was found sweet to the taste, they were sure to seek the whole, and be quite ready, if they have the means, to pay for it.

As my object was to distribute as widely as possible, I found I could give away four Gospels in the different languages, in good print, and neat binding, for one whole New Testament, of inferior print, and less attractive.

As to the question of giving or selling the Scriptures, I gave them; and for the chief reason that at Algiers the field for giving is very large, and the field for selling very small. Of the hundreds one could give away, I am sure not one in fifty could be sold. My compassion was moved when I saw the intelligent and faithful young colporteur going forth with his well-stored package of Bibles, Testaments, and Gospels for sale, and, after the toils of the day, returning with the weight of his precious burden hardly less than when he started; and for the reason that the people had not sufficient knowledge of the worth of the book to buy it.

In giving a Gospel I first questioned as to the ability to read it, and if this was lacking, as was mostly the case with Arabs, I did not generally give it, and when I did, it was with the hope that curiosity might stimulate the recipient, like Belshazzar of old, to seek some Daniel who could read the writing and make known unto him the interpretation thereof.

While I gave freely I knew it was quite possible that some of these Gospels might be destroyed; when Jesus Himself sowed the good seed, did He not know that some would fall by the wayside, and others upon the rocky places, and others upon the thorns, as well as others upon the good ground, but this did not hinder his freely sowing. If some of our books were burned, did not the Lord of the harvest permit some of his living witnesses to be burned? Did He not cause the blood of the martyrs to be the seed of the Church? and might not the blaze of a few portions of Scripture attract such attention to the meaning of all this opposition—for there are inquiring minds who are more likely to read a book that is forbidden—that the ashes of the little Gospels would become a fertiliser of the great field of the kingdom?

Shall we not, then, sow broadcast the Gospel in the very words of Jesus, and which may be printed for less than a penny? Shall not our missionaries be liberally supplied with all they can well distribute? And are not all Christian travellers called to be agents of the Bible Societies in the blessed work? We live in a day when we may penetrate every part of the world. We circumnavigate the globe in greater numbers than in former days we traversed to Italy. Christian men and women go on excursions to India and China, to say nothing of North Africa, and all the ports of the Mediterranean. What finer field for distribution of the Word of God than the deck of an Oriental steamer, where usually all nations are represented, and where they sit about the decks in groups or singly with nothing to do, and are ready to receive any book that promises to answer curiosity or give occupation. Is not here a call to every disciple, who finds himself in such companionship, from his Master saying "Freely ye have received, freely give"? And should not every such traveller when he returns to report to his friends what he has seen and what he has done, feel that a grand opportunity and privilege of his journey has been lost if he has failed to leave in his wake on the sea and on the land the light of the Gospel of Christ?

MAC.

Rev. J. Wilkinson writes:—I would call attention to one or two points in Mr. Hudson Taylor's recent letter, to prevent misunderstanding. In the second paragraph Mr. Taylor seems to understand me as opposed to colportage. On pages 28 and 29 in my pamphlet I state the contrary, as follows:—"It might be desirable, and even necessary, to supplement by colportage the distribution of the Scriptures by missionaries. In this case the expenses of the colporteurs might be borne by the Missionary Societies, or by the Bible Societies; or partly by both, according to the state of their funds, and by mutual arrangement."

In the third paragraph he says:—"The comparison of the gratuitous circulation of books, the character of which is not known, with the gifts of affection of valued friends is, to my mind, utterly fallacious. Do we not all receive gratuitously through the post publications which, without ceremony, we consign to the waste-paper basket?"

I reply:—The Scriptures are love-gifts from the best of friends, and are distributed as such; and should the recipient, after reading the book, pronounce it worthless and consign it to the waste-paper basket, he would have the satisfaction that it had cost him nothing. Further, it is true numbers of publications gratuitously received by post are consigned to the waste-paper basket, but their character is known pretty well before this takes place. Our registered and other letters, though received gratuitously, are not consigned to the waste-paper basket. It is not because books are gratuitous that they go to the waste-paper basket, but in many, if not most cases, because they are books of no value, or circulars appealing for money we are not able or not willing to give. With a moment's reflection I think my good friend will admit that this comparison is "utterly fallacious."

I thank Mr. Taylor most sincerely for having given his views on this subject so frankly and kindly, even though not quite in harmony with my own. We must, however, keep before us the needs of the world, and seek to ascertain the best methods and agencies for supplying those needs.

THE HYDE-PARK HALL, where Mr. Chas. Cook conducts mission work, was re-opened on the 6th inst., having been re-furnished after fourteen years of service. Addresses were delivered by Rev. D. M. Cameron, Battersea, Hon. J. V. Farwell, Chicago, and Mr. Cook. On Sunday afternoon Mr. Farwell addressed the workers, and preached in the Metropolitan Music Hall in the evening.

SOUTH LONDON COAL PORTERS.—A few evenings ago, about three hundred coal porters, in the employ of various firms south of the Thames, partook of tea by invitation of the Working-men's Mission, Collingwood-street, New Cut. A public meeting was afterwards held, when addresses were delivered by several friends, as well as by some earnest Christian porters. Gospel temperance was powerfully advocated, and at the close of the meeting several total abstinence pledges were taken.

EDUCATION FOR THE BLIND.—A class for the education of blind men and women was commenced on Thursday, 8th inst., in the Jubilee Hall, in rear of the North London Homes for Aged Christian Blind, Hanley-road, N. An inaugural service of a devotional character was held, at which Rev. John Jackson gave a suitable address. The classes will be held every Thursday afternoon from 2.30 to 4.30, the first hour being devoted to the study of God's Word, the second to instructing the blind in those systems most adapted to their age and capacity.

DISTRESS in SOUTH-EAST LONDON.

DURING the past winter the destitution caused by the lack of employment in our south-eastern suburbs has been of an exceptional character, and the distress has been simply appalling in its severity and magnitude. On December 31 The Times published an article showing that the workhouse at Greenwich was overcrowded; that the poor, whose bread-winners could find no work to do, had parted with every available article, and pawned all the wearing apparel belonging to themselves and their children for food; that two persons had actually died of starvation; and "that even for several days eleven persons had been subsisting upon cabbage leaves and other refuse, which had been picked up in the gutter." This is, indeed, a sad picture to be presented in the richest and most highly civilised capital in the world. At that time, however, the distress had not reached its climax; it was during February and the severe weather in the beginning of March that it assumed its worst phase; and at the present moment there is an immense amount of misery amongst the poor workers who cannot find work to do.

We have much pleasure in drawing our readers' attention to an effort, begun so far back as November last, for endeavouring to do something towards alleviating the intense suffering, and not only to assist poor men to get work, and thus provide food for their families, but also to draw them, and their wives and little ones, under the influence of the Gospel, and so to bring them comfort, and elevate them from the miserable, in many cases almost hopeless state, into which they have fallen. At that time Major Cox had his attention drawn to the lamentable state of affairs existing, and he determined to devote his energies to the service of the poor destitute people in Greenwich and Deptford. As it had been calculated by those best able to arrive at a correct conclusion that there were at least 2000 men out of employment, in the parish of Deptford alone, Major Cox undertook a formidable task, but he resolved to limit his operations to those who registered their names at the Police Stations, under the recent orders of the Commissioner of Police. By adopting this course, he avoided having to deal with professional medicants, or dishonest, or convicted people, who have a not unnatural disinclination to enter police stations under any circumstances.

Out of Major Cox's efforts shortly sprang the Society for Assisting Deserving Working Men, with a powerful committee, including Lieut.-Gen. J. Field, C.B., the well-known secretary of the Evangelical Alliance. Considerable sums have been collected, but we regret to learn that the funds are now nearly exhausted, although there is very much more to be done by this Society, not only in the direction of getting employment, if possible, for the large number still on its books, and in assisting people until employment can be obtained, but also in evangelistic work, and in improving, if possible, the social status of those assisted, as well as giving help in emigration to suitable cases.

The Society has taken a small house as officers' waiting-rooms, &c., at No. 8, Blackheath-road, S.E., in a central position, just where the parishes of Greenwich and Deptford join. In the beginning of December, in this house, Major Cox commenced a Gospel service on Sunday evenings. The first was attended by five working men, but soon the numbers increased to such an extent that he had to seek the assistance of Rev. F. Storer Clark, the Vicar of St. Peter's, Greenwich, who most kindly placed St. Peter's Mission Hall, in Bridge-street, Greenwich, at the disposal of the Society. Here have been assembled on Sunday evenings as many as 300 of these poor people, many of whom would shrink from attending any regular religious service because they have no decent clothing.

Almost every Thursday evening a good tea has been given in St. Peter's Hall, to about two hundred of these hungry people and their children, and after the tea there has been an entertainment of some kind—dissolving views, lectures, music, singing, and recitations. These teas and entertainments have been thoroughly appreciated, and have given evident pleasure and satisfaction to those who have been able to shake off for an hour or two the squalid associations of their wretched homes, where, alas! they are obliged to herd together, sometimes seven or eight in a single room.

The attendance at the Gospel services growing so rapidly, Major Cox felt that he required experienced assistance in conducting them, and on application being made, Captain Smith has supplied preachers from the Evangelisation Society.

In another brief article we hope to state of the results achieved.

The Book World.

Poor Poems.

LIFE'S INNER LIFE. By P. Chantrey. Remington. Mr. Chantrey gives us no preface to this collection of short poems, and it is hard to tell from the poems themselves whether he has any greater purpose in publishing them than the desire to see them in print. But it may be that his book is a well-meaning attempt to lead the men and women of the world to more unselfishness and decision of character. One poem, "The King," seems to us to be worth all the rest of the volume.

Sermons on Ephesians.

THE MYSTERY OF HIS WILL. By Marcus Rainsford, B.A. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. This neat little volume contains twenty-one sermons on topics in the first chapter of the Epistle to the Ephesians. Various aspects of the believer's life, hope, and prospects are set forth with charming simplicity, while blessed truths connected therewith are made to shine with self-revealing beauty, as Scripture is summoned to expound Scripture in the preacher's felicitous and impressive style. Such high-toned teaching, so full of ripe and helpful thought, so fragrant with devotion, so rich with the bloom of spiritual sympathy, cannot fail to please and to profit the thoughtful reader.

A Practical Book.

THE RELIGION OF THE CROSS. By Rev. H. B. Chapman, vicar of St. Luke's, Camberwell. Swan Sonnenschein, Lowrey & Co. This book at first sight rather repelled us, with its rough and ready, not to say occasionally uncouth, phraseology upon the holiest of subjects. It is, nevertheless, an extremely practical book, written by an active and genial man. It deals with evangelical religion as brought out into daily life. It insists, and very rightly, that our religion, if it is real, must be seen under the daily annoyances which meet us all, and that it is useless for us to find fault with our health or our surroundings, when in most cases the fault lies precisely in this, that we are too lazy to take trouble for others, and too selfish to put their welfare before our own ease. We could, indeed, hardly recommend the volume to those souls which are seeking Christ, but we very heartily commend it to all who have found Him and desire to live worthily of Him.

Messianic Prophecy.

RAYS OF MESSIAH'S GLORY. By David Baron. 3s. 6d. Hodder and Stoughton. The second edition of this scholarly work is now issued with additional notes and a valuable appendix. The author, a converted Jew, is a profound and earnest student of Holy Writ. He is eminently qualified to treat the somewhat difficult subject of Messianic prophecy. With the vigour of an earnest thinker, and the fervour of deep conviction, he most conclusively proves Jesus to be the hope of Israel, and the light of the Gentiles; to whom all the early dispensations pointed, of whom the prophets spake, and in whom are centred the prospects and glory of the latter days. The pages of Old Testament Scripture are illumined with light from the cross, as many of their wonderful predictions are shown to be realised in the person of Christ, the son of David and the Son of God. The book is worthy of a careful study; it is well calculated to convince unbelieving Israelites, and to confirm the faith of believers in respect of the Messiahship of our Lord.

Moral Difficulties in the Old Testament.

MORAL DIFFICULTIES IN the OLD TESTAMENT SCRIPTURES. In No. 56 of the "Present Day Tracts" this subject is considered by Rev. Eustace R. Conder, D.D. Moral difficulties are shown to be either apparent discrepancies in Biblical teaching, or discrepancies between some Scriptural representations of God's character and dealings, and the judgment of an enlightened conscience. Such difficulties are examined and solutions offered, and among the subjects discussed are the following:—The Sin and Sentence of our First Parents, The Deluge, The Destruction of the Cities of the Plain, The Slaughter of Heathen Nations, The Trial of Abraham's Faith, and the Imprecatory Psalms. In the end, it is pointedly shown that no difficulties evoked by either devout study or hostile criticism of the Bible, are comparable in magni-de, importance, or stubborn reality to the diffiinvolved in rejecting Him who has said of hom his teaching is not received, "The have spoken, the same shall judge is a very useful one. (4d. Re-

Some Story Books.

We have received a number of attractive story books from the Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school Union:—FRANK ARMSTRONG AND OTHER STORIES (9d.), by Sarson C. J. Ingham, contains seven wholesome tales.—ELSA'S HOLIDAY AND WHAT CAME OF IT (6d.), by Alice Briggs, is calculated to impress upon the young the duty of tender regard for others, and likwise to show the wisdom of trusting in God at all times.—IN PAWN. By Annie M. Young. 1s. 6d. Sorrow attends the steps of a son who turns a deaf ear to the wise counsel of a loving mother. Misery follows hard upon intemperance. These and other morals are pointed out in a forcible manner.—HAZEL HALDENE. By Eliza Kerr. 2s. 6d. This is a good tale, showing the beauty of a forgiving spirit.—SIRE AND SON: A STARTLING CONTRAST. 2s. 6d. Rev. Amos White's excellent temperance story has undergone revision for this edition.—DUCHESS RENEE, AN EPISODE IN THE HISTORY OF THE REFORMATION. 3s. By Sarson C. J. Ingham. The subject was worthy the interesting treatment it has here received. As a tale the book will doubtless have many readers; but its historical basis invests it with a peculiar charm. Indeed, "Duchess Renée" ought to be put in the way of young persons who are inquiring into the meaning of the Reformation.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Blackburn.—Messrs. Leonard Weaver and William Grove have held a twelve days' mission here. Large congregations gathered nightly, and the meetings have been wonderfully owned of God in the conversion of many.

Rev. Dr. Morris, of the Church Parochial Mission, has conducted a mission at Christ Church, Burton-on-Trent (of which Rev. Chas. Guest is the vicar), attended with great blessing. He is now engaged in similar work at Whitehaven.

Acton.—Rev. W. A. Meaton has concluded a six days' mission in the Congregational Church (Rev. W. F. Adeney pastor). The results have been threefold—the quickening of spiritual life in believers, the decision of the undecided, and the response of the little ones to the love of Jesus.

Mr. W. R. Lane has closed an evangelistic mission, held in the Presbyterian Church, College Park, W. Interest in the meetings was sustained throughout, and it is believed that much good was done. Believers were quickened, and not a few who had formerly been careless made profession of faith in Christ.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken will conduct a mission, March 11—24, in St. Nicholas, Whitehaven; March 25 to April 1, in Holy Trinity, Whitehaven. Prayer is requested for blessing in these parishes. There has been an abundant answer in blessing at Warton and Carnforth, for which our readers are asked to unite in praise.

Tamworth.—We have closed a short mission here, conducted by Mr. W. Smith, of the Evangelisation Society. It has been greatly owned of God. Mr. Smith is a most earnest and gifted evangelist. We praise God for souls saved, and a desire on the part of believers to be wholly consecrated to Him and his service. E. P.

Victoria Docks.—During the past three months Gospel and temperance meetings have been held three times a week in Alnwick-road Custom House. The congregations consist of the rough lads from fourteen to twenty who stand about the street corners; thirty-three have signed the pledge, and several of them have manifested signs of deep contrition and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Mr. J. Waite, who has conducted the meetings, has made the Gospel message so plain and simple that these lads are becoming much attached to him, and are thronging the room. THOMAS STUART.

Cheshunt, Herts.—A week's mission has been held in St. Mary's Public Hall, with most encouraging results. From Monday to Friday the preacher was Rev. Robert Wood, of Ramsgate, except on one occasion, when Rev. F. B. Meyer gave an address to Christians, which was much enjoyed. The interest shown was so great, the afternoon meetings being well attended and the hall filled in the evenings, that it was decided to prolong the mission for two days. Mr. J. Jackson, of London, conducted the closing meetings. The interest was well sustained to the last, and culminated in a crowded meeting on Sunday night. Almost all the evangelical Christians of the town united in this mission, including many of the students from the college.

Dr. Munhall has been holding revival meetings in Buffalo, New York. During three weeks over seven hundred people have confessed Christ.

Mr. William Forbes closed his services in Surrey on Friday last, and on Sunday he began a six days' mission at Bosworth-road Chapel, North Kensington.

Mr. J. W. Moodie, soldier-evangelist, held meetings on Sunday and Monday last at Redhill, with very good results. He has just left for Cairo, Alexandria, Malta and Gibraltar, to labour in the Gospel among the soldiers.

Y.M.C.A., Birmingham.—The visit of Rev. B. Dinnick, late of Birmingham, has been accompanied with much success. The audiences were large, especially the last evening, when Pastor Dinnick gave three addresses.

St. Mabyn, Cornwall.—The Lord has been giving showers of blessing in this village. During the past month special services have been conducted by Mr. John Elliott. Some have been won to the Saviour, and are now rejoicing in a new-found peace.

Ilfracombe Y.W.C.A.—Mrs. W. E. Legg has concluded a ten days' mission among women here. There have been many professed conversions, and much definite blessing among believers. All who had received blessing met around the table of the Lord on the last Sunday evening in the church of St. James' and St. Philip.

Crieff, N.B.—For the past three weeks evangelistic services and Bible-readings have been held in various parts of this town, by Messrs. Smith and McNab. Every evening the word of truth was preached to increasing audiences with great power. Many have been convicted of sin, and not a few have been led to embrace the truth as it is in Jesus. It has been a time of much refreshing and encouragement for believers. G. M.

Messrs. Moody and Sankey have visited Sioux City, Iowa, where a conference of ministers and workers was held, when many practical topics were discussed. At the conference Rev. Geo. Knox said there are over 6000 young men in Sioux City, and not over one-tenth of them can be found in the churches. One night there were 165 young men in a gambling saloon in the city. The Gospel meetings were large, and there were many inquirers.

Leamington.—John M. McAuliffe has just concluded two exceedingly interesting missions at Tachbrook, South Leamington, and at St. Mary's, of which Rev. S. C. Morgan, D.D., formerly of Swansea, is vicar. In the former mission at Tachbrook he was largely assisted by Rev. A. Lester, vicar of Thorndyke, Yorks. Very much interest was aroused, and many souls confessed Christ. Special meetings were held for men, women, and children, and also for Christian work, at which John M. McAuliffe pleaded for the Lord's work in the villages of England. Very real work for the Lord is being done at St. Mary's, Leamington, by the vicar and his devoted wife.

Rev. Robert Balgarnie has concluded a nine days' mission at the London-road Chapel, Brighton (Rev. Edmond Phillips pastor), with a result which has surpassed even the most hopeful, and filled all hearts with thankfulness and praise. More than two hundred persons came forward as anxious inquirers, most of whom professed to find rest in Christ, Many more were led to publicly confess Christ for the first time. A pleasing feature of the mission was its catholicity. Invitations were given to other churches to send their senior scholars; many of these gave themselves to the Lord, and will have their names returned to the schools from which they came.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle Country Mission will be pleased to communicate with Christian men who are efficient preachers desirous of becoming members. Mr. A. J. Millwood, 4, Park-villas, Colliers Wood, Merton, S.W., is secretary.

THE BARCELONA PROTESTANT COTTAGE HOSPITAL.—During last year about forty patients were cared for, 34 of them being treated within the hospital. The patients were mostly Spaniards, but England, Scotland, France, Germany, Sweden, and Brazil were represented at one time or another in the wards. Among the offerings received during the year was one of £15 3s., proceeds of the sale of used postage stamps. Further particulars of this unsectarian work may be obtained of Miss Thackrah, 33, Woodberry-grove, Finsbury-park, N.

A VERY PRESSING NEED.

In a village in the West of Ireland a Scriptural School has been carried on with much success for many years. It has been maintained by the personal efforts of the family of the resident Proprietor, whose means, under existing circumstances, do not admit of his rebuilding it. The School is attended by over forty children, who are daily instructed in the Word of God, but the School House is in a state of irreparable decay, the walls being held together by props. A new building is absolutely necessary, if a Romish education, without he Bible, for the villagers, is to be prevented.

"Clarisford, Killaloe, County Clare.

"I most cordially recommend the Appeal for the rebuilding of Ardrahan School House, the advantages and importance of which I am well aware of.

"WM. B. KILLALOE."

"I beg fully to concur in his lordship's recommendation.

"HORACE W. TOWNSEND, Clerk, M.A.
11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C."

Contributions towards this proposed new School House will be gratefully received and acknowledged by:—

Mrs. Smyly, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam Street, Dublin; or,
Mrs. Hatt Noble, Ardmore, Bray.

HELP! for the CAUSE of TRUTH and LOYALTY in IRELAND.

THE ISLAND AND COAST SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Established in the Year 1833.

FOR THE EDUCATION OF CHILDREN, AND PROMOTION OF SCRIPTURAL TRUTH IN REMOTE PARTS OF THE COAST AND ADJACENT ISLANDS.

Secretary: Rev. C. W. FLEURY, M.A., 30, Lower Sackville Street, Dublin.
Hon. Secretary for England: Rev. D. HOLDEN, Mickleham, Dorking, Surrey.

The Committee of the above Society earnestly call the attention of the Christian public to its claims. Never in its long history were more urgent appeals pressing upon them for help for Scriptural schools in the remote and thinly-populated coasts and islands of Ireland. Local aid is all but gone through failure of rents and the existing agitation. The clergy in these parts, perplexed as to how to maintain their little "Forts of Truth" where children of the loyal and patient Protestant poor are instructed in the way of Life, earnestly look to this Society; and its Committee with a similar anxiety look to those whom God has blessed with peaceful homes and means to aid them in their work.

The following valuable testimonies come from prelates in whose dioceses the Society's schools are chiefly located:—

The Lord Bishop of Derry and Raphoe writes November 17, 1887:—

"The Island and Coast Society for Ireland has rendered true and valuable aid to poor and remote parts of the diocese of Raphoe, for which we are very grateful."

The Lord Bishop of Cork, at the last Annual Meeting, says:—

"In his own diocese fifteen schools were supported by this Society, and he was there that day to express what he felt, that the work of this Society had been of very great benefit and advantage to those distant and remote parishes."

Contributions will be most thankfully received by the Secretary or Hon. Secretary at the above addresses, or may be lodged in the Provincial Bank of Ireland, Dublin.

PHTHISIS — BOTH LUNGS DISEASED.— CASE of a YOUNG MAN at MILE END.

The patient came to Coombe Lodge in June of last year. Examined by Dr. B——. Both lungs diseased in upper lobe, and heart slightly affected. He had never been well since an attack of rheumatic fever eight months before. Had been under treatment at Victoria Park and by several doctors since. Symptoms of decided phthisis were present, and he was losing flesh fast.

The patient (named S. Brooks, and residing in Bancroft-road) was sent to me by an old patient (Mr. F. J. D. Sawle). He rapidly recovered. In a few months he was thoroughly well.

In a letter of Dec. 11th, Mr. Sawle says: "Concerning the young man Brooks whom I recommended to you, I am pleased to say he continues well and attends to business. His friends are so thankful for your kindness. He came to you as a last hope. I myself cannot speak too highly of your treatment. I was a patient of yours in August, 1884, as you will see by your books. I am well known at the Sunday School Union.—Yours truly, F. J. D. Sawle, 58, Canal-road, Mile End."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

A SERIOUS CRISIS IN INDIA.

IT is impossible to believe in the God of the Bible without believing that He will punish deliberate and persistent sin. God cannot be defied without the certainty of an approaching judgment and a day of shame and confusion. In the olden times God's prophets warned rulers and peoples of the results of trampling his statutes under foot, and setting his will at nought. Has God now abdicated his position as Supreme Ruler of the world? Has he been bowed out of the universe which He created? He is in authority still. Let his own people, therefore, bear witness for Him, and, taking heed of wickedness in high places in our own day, dare to confront it with "Thus saith the Lord."

The Government that in India rules, for the time being, over one-sixth of the human race, has blotted the word "not" out of the seventh commandment, so far as its own practice is concerned. In the Bible the sinful woman is described as pursuing her course under cover of cunning and secrecy and darkness. The Government of India declares that such a veil is unnecessary. It legitimatises her calling, and provides her with a licence (vide Act 14 of 1868; also Cantonment Acts). In order that none of its subordinates shall mistake its intention, it has issued and re-issued to them an "Exposition" of the regulations under which impurity is encouraged by law. "Well-meaning men" (Government officials) are there warned not "to attempt to suppress prostitution," nor to aim at "a reduction of the number of prostitutes" (vide "Cantonment Regulations," framed under Act 22 of 1864, and re-enacted in Act 3 of 1880).

That caution is followed in the "Exposition" by an explanation of what local officials are expected to do under one of the Rules in the vain endeavour to checkmate God, and to enable men to sow to the flesh, without of the flesh reaping corruption. The filthy technicalities cannot be produced here. The Rule which is thus explained is so drawn as to give to a moral mind no clue to its real intention. Only the filthiest of the brutish would understand its purport from its surface. It is not surprising, therefore, that this particular explanation closes with :—

> "It may be said that the desired object might be declared more distinctly than has been done in the Rule, and that the procedure to be followed should be more clearly defined. We have, however, thought it best to frame the Rule in the manner that has been adopted, because the subject is one regarding which it is not desirable to enter into details in Rules of general character, which will be published by the Government. Under the Rule the necessary objects can easily be obtained without needless publicity."

The "Exposition" explains that "the interests of the army and of the civil population in this question are identical; and, although the measures which will now be undertaken have for their primary object the prevention of disease among the troops, the benefit of these measures will be shared by the civil community. If they prove successful they may, probably, be widely extended hereafter, and it would be a complete mistake to suppose that they concern the European soldiers only."

I witnessed at Umballa, on January 16 last, the carrying out of that expressed intention to extend the system of licensed licentiousness to the civil population. At that place, accompanied by an American missionary, I visited the Kucha Bazaar Chuckla (Government brothel), consisting of a square of dwellings opening on to the main street of the Kucha Bazaar. I found that the women in that Chuckla were licensed to sin with natives only. Their statements as to the particular character of their licences, which they exhibited to us, signed by the local (European) magistrate, were subsequently confirmed by the superintendent of police, and the assistant doctor of the Government lock hospital. The Europeans, however, were not left unprovided for. In five other Chucklas at Umballa the women were licensed for Europeans only.

No sin brutalises the whole character so much as the sin of impurity. The connection between licentiousness and brutality is the same now as it was in the days preceding the Flood, when "all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth," and "the earth was filled with violence through them." It is the same as it was the day preceding the destruction of Sodom. The British soldier in India, whose evil desires are intensified by being pandered to and provided for, illustrates by his treatment of native women how great a brute the training of his masters has made him. At one of the Chucklas for Europeans which I felt it my painful duty to visit at Umballa, a woman had had one eye knocked out by one of the pupils in vice of the God-defying Government. Another woman exhibited the scars upon her body caused by having her clothing set fire to by a soldier. Of course it is not private soldiers alone who are thus brutalised. Officers, and civil servants, and civilians are also affected. Several medical officers in succession at Umballa have thought it proper to suggest in their official reports that "recruiting dhāis might be employed in importing younger and more prepossessing women at a small capitation fee" to minister to the brutal desires of Europeans (vide Reports on the Umballa and Mooltan Lock Hospitals for 1886). That this Satanic solicitude is not in the interest of private soldiers alone is indicated by an offer from one of the Government-paid Chuckla Mehuldarnies (head-women) at Umballa, to supply me at my house, under the supposition that I was a British officer, with a child of fourteen years of age. At a city farther north, which I visited after I left Umballa, it transpired some time since in the course of a law suit, that a Mehuldarnie kept a register of women whom she sent out to the order of British officers, the reason she assigned for thus registering her official customers being that sometimes the young victims were missing.

Is it extraordinary that in the face of such things, and with a knowledge of them spreading among the native population, Christian missionaries make comparatively so little progress?

The brutality with which British soldiers and licensed officials, under the Acts, are drilled into treating Indian women, necessarily induces a tendency and disposition to treat the men of India also with coarseness, brutality, and contempt. Let no one think that this is a matter of minor importance. British rule is not so firmly established as to bear this unnecessary strain. It is not the coolies only, and the uneducated, who are thus treated, and are sensitive regarding it. Peculiar feelings arise in the heart of a cultured native when he hears himself addressed or alluded to as a "nigger" by some officially brutalised Englishman, who regards him in the same light as the women the Government has provided, perhaps mere girls, upon whom in some cases infinitely worse outrages are committed than can be mentioned in a letter like this. Go where he will the educated native is not free from the likelihood of being made bitterly to feel the recoil of the British degradation of his countrywomen. A native judge of the high court and his son purchase first-class railway tickets, but a British officer in the carriage to which they go, resents the indignity of having to travel with "niggers." He prevents their entrance. With feelings I shall not attempt to describe they go elsewhere.

This tension of feeling is further strained by the consciousness that women who do not lead an openly immoral life are made the victims of the British system of licensed sin. This has been reiterated in my presence by native editors and others. Indeed how is it possible for it to be otherwise, when its administrators are ever moving in a seething circle of corruption, in which the business of life is to regard women as the mere tools of wicked men? In such a circle, fraud, and lying, and bribery, and perjury, are as much at home as brutality.

If the people of Great Britain, and especially the Christians of Great Britain, do not interfere to stop the mad career of the handful of sin-supporting politicians who are at present in power in India, there can be no doubt that that career will be stopped by other means. Men "whose eyes are full of adultery and who cannot cease from sin," may regard lightly the virtue, the happiness, and the lives of Hindoo women; but the time is surely at hand when the Lord will execute righteousness and judgment for all that are oppressed. The victims have appealed to His tribunal against their abusers and murderers. Will the churches of Great Britain arouse themselves to humiliation and prayer, and action, if perchance God will stay the impending judgment, or will they allow events to take their course?

God's dealings with mankind in all ages prove that the end is the same with governments as with individuals. The execution of judgment is not hard. God has only to let events take their course. As I stood amid the scenes of the Mutiny at Cawnpore, and then at Lucknow, and then at Delhi, I realised how easily national judgment can follow national sin, as effect follows cause. I realised it afresh as a few weeks since at Peshawur, the border city of India and Afghanistan, I looked towards the entrance of the Kyber Pass, of disastrous memory, and remembered the tale of the first British-Afghan campaign. History uses the convenient word émeute to cover the character of the incident which led to the fatal ending of that unjustifiable enterprise. The truth seems to be that the indignation of the Afghans at the treatment of their women, principally by the officers, led to the rising which turned the tide against the English, and led to the retreat to Jellalabad, in which the whole army perished with the exception of one man.

Another so-called émeute, similar to that, may occur among the hardy race in northernmost India at any time. Licensed sin is in full blast at Peshawur and other cities, and places near. At Peshawur one of the Government brothels is planted close to the gate of the church. From the door of their compound the women can see the men for whom they are licensed, paraded to "Divine service." The people talk about these things. The impurity of the officers, as well as of the rank and file, is thrown up in the faces of the missionaries, as two at Peshawur themselves told me. Strange stories are current. One speaks of a commanding officer at a border military station requisitioning some young and good-looking women, and one of them dying the first or second morning after her arrival, through the outrages inflicted upon her—murdered, like the woman who perished "at the door of the man's house where her lord was," as recorded in the Book of Judges. Here are the conditions which invite retribution. Other parallel conditions it is, perhaps, best not to mention. An émeute in the Punjaub might ignite a train which would sweep British rule from India in a few days.

The Government of India should have hastened the coming of the kingdom of God among the more than 250,000,000 of this vast Empire. It ought to have been a lamp in the midst of heathen darkness. But the light that is in it being darkness, how great is that darkness? Has not the Hand that setteth up one and putteth down another begun to write upon the wall, "Mene, ———." Will He finish the sentence, or will the Hand be stayed by the bringing forth of fruits meet for repentance? It is the fool who has said in his heart, "There is no God." ALFRED S. DYER.

Allahabad, India, February 18.

We have received a letter from a British Army officer in India, in which he frames the following grave indictment against the authorities, and especially the chaplains of our forces in that country :—

"I have just read Mr. Dyer's article 'The Black Hand in India,' in your issue of January 20, which concerns Lucknow. I have no doubt of the correctness of his facts, but I confess my surprise that people in England have only so lately become acquainted with them. Mr. Dyer is, however, too hard on commanding officers of regiments, who have no power whatever to abolish licensed prostitution, and would simply subject themselves to trial by court-martial, and dismissal from the service for disobedience of orders, if they refused to allow the system in their regiments: nor could they stop it by refusing. The chaplains (Church of England, Roman Catholic, and Presbyterian) are the people who might speak and protest: but they never do, and affect to know nothing about the matter.

"The Government plan is to encourage as many prostitutes as possible to take up their abode in or near the regimental bazaars, all to be licensed women, of course; and I myself (though usually it is not my duty to attend them) have been at Cantonment Committees, where the views of the authorities as to the advantages of extending the number of licensed prostitutes, and the plans proposed have been read and discussed.

"Soldiers are practically encouraged by their superiors to commit fornication, and no doubt consider it in this light. Being mostly young and ignorant, are they not deserving of commiseration as well as censure?"

THE GOVERNMENT VERSUS GOD IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—Some years ago an account of an almost unbelievable case of callousness of heart went the rounds of the North Country newspapers. A little girl, playing on the banks of a canal with some other children, fell into the water and was drowned. At the inquest it came out that a man, a strong able-bodied miner, whose name was given, was standing near by smoking his pipe, and did not so much as take his hands out of his pockets towards the rescue of the child, but stood and watched it drown. The coroner's jury very justly passed a very strong rider of condemnation on this unnatural monster, and the coroner regretted that there was no legal method of punishing him.

But every reader of Mr. Dyer's appalling letters, who has taken no prayerful action thereon must search and see whether, in condemning such a one as this hard-hearted miner, they are not in danger of bringing upon themselves Nathan's rebuke to David, "Thou art the man!" The Committee of the Gospel Purity Association would strongly urge upon every individual reader of The Christian the duty of writing (1) to the Member of Parliament, Liberal or Conservative, of the district in which they live; (2) to Viscount Cross, the Secretary of State for India. The address of the latter is 12, Warwick-square, S.W. The House of Commons, through its financial prerogative, has the power instantly to stop the infamous system of State Licensed Harlotry in India. The Secretary of State for India has also the power to send out, to-morrow, if he chooses, a telegram sweeping it away.

Do not be satisfied with merely writing the letter, but see that a reply acknowledging its receipt is sent by the member of Parliament, or the Secretary of State, as the case may be. If no such reply is received, write again, expressing surprise. This individual action is the more necessary, as the subject has been almost completely boycotted by the London Press: only one morning paper reporting one or two answers to the questions that Professor Stuart, M.P., is now putting in the House of Commons. No doubt the action of the editors would have been the same if four thousand years ago, there had been a great and powerful newspaper Press in Egypt: but the Israelites would have come out, for all that.

Christians in India are working, and working splendidly. We have just received at this office petitions against this evil system for presentation to the Queen, and both Houses of Parliament, from the missionary women of India. They are signed entirely by native and European women who are working in the Gospel in all parts of India. All the most important languages are represented. I wish it were possible to give a fac-simile of these interesting sheets, in which English, Gujerathi, Bengali, Hindu, and other languages are curiously mixed up together. The petition to the Queen has a clause in it which runs as follows:—

> We also humbly beg to draw your Majesty's attention to the fact that whereas no girl under sixteen years of age is at liberty, by law, to change her religion, or under twenty-one to dispose of her property: a child of twelve can choose a life of sin and be brought under the Provisions of the C. D. Acts.

Shall we stand by, like the North Country miner, and see this Hindu child of twelve perish? God forbid!—Faithfully yours,

Maurice Gregory,
Hon. Sec. Gospel Purity Association.

WOMEN IN INDIA.

In the course of an address on Saturday week, at the annual meeting of the National Indian Association, Sir William Hunter made the following observations as to the position of women in India:—"The political result of the educational movement has been to make broader the basis of British rule, and its social results are numerous and complex. Conspicuous among the latter is the agitation to improve the position of women in India. I do not join in unreserved condemnation of the restrictions found in a woman's life in India, because those restrictions have a protective as well as a restraining end. In all the social relations which can be tested by statistics the position of women in India is exceptionally high. The proportion of female criminals and prisoners to male criminals and prisoners is but a mere fraction of the proportion existing in England. Female drunkenness in India is unknown, and a woman's life is safeguarded from poverty and crime in a manner which some of her English sisters might well envy. But the question has arisen whether Indian women do not purchase their safety at too high a price, and whether security is not compatible with a larger measure of freedom. And this question has presented itself most prominently in the movement against child-marriage and enforced widowhood among the Hindoos. These customs are neither of them practised by the great masses of the people, but only among the great majority of the upper classes—the very people who come most strongly under Western modes of thought. In Bengal, out of every thousand girls between the ages of five and nine, 271 are married and 11 are widows. Among the high caste all girls are either practically wives or widows before they reach their fifteenth year. It is estimated that there are about one million of young widows belonging to the Brahmin and Rajput castes, to whom the system of enforced celibacy must be a cruel infringement of their natural rights. To simply forbid such customs by legislation is difficult, for it is the imperative duty of a Hindoo father of good caste to absolutely secure that no daughter of his house should ever be without a protector; and the re-marriage of widows is closely bound up with the liability of the husband's heirs to provide that no woman of the family should ever be without a home. Native opinion must ultimately decide the question, many of the difficulties of which are already being removed. The leaders of Hindoo thought are beginning to perceive that these restrictions rest upon no injunctions of the Vedas, but upon mediæval customs and texts; and British legislation has declared the right of Hindoo widows to marry again, and to carry their property with them if they have renounced the Hindoo faith, and adopted some other religion. A large sect of the Brahmin caste, which supplies the intellectual leaders of the people, is in favour of reform, and they are supported by large numbers in the lower castes. The more conservative castes will yield when they find that the only alternative is a loss of influence with the people.

KIRKCALDY, N.B.—A Working Lads' Institute has been started here; to a large extent it is the outcome of Mr. George Clarke's first visit to the town in 1886. Mr. Clarke was present at the opening of the Institute recently, and gave to the 400 lads who were present some excellent advice.

BRIDGEGATE, GLASGOW.—The workers of the Bridgegate Slum Mission recently held their first annual meeting, when reports of the work were read. Gospel effort is much needed in the district, and the mission has been greatly blessed and prospered during the past year. Owing to the increased attendance at the evangelistic meetings, the first premises of the Mission became too small, and a much larger place has therefore been secured.

RESCUE WORK AT BRIGHTON.—With nearly 500 houses licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquors, Brighton has a sad drunkards' list. The Police Court and Rescue Mission directs its efforts to reclaiming the victims of intemperance. The report of last year's work shows that the missionary attended the police court [illegible] times, paid [illegible] visits to prisoners in the cells or on their discharge from custody, and also visited [illegible] persons in their homes, instructing them in the Gospel, and helping to supply their temporal necessities. Fallen females and workhouse inmates have likewise been brought under Christian influences, and many public meetings held in connection with the Mission.

SOCIETY AND SUNDAY.

It is gratifying to find that the Press has almost unanimously approved the action of the Upper House of Convocation in its protest against the increased desecration of the Lord's Day by the idle and wealthy classes. For them there is not the excuse pleaded for those who work hard during the week. During the London season certain sets in "society" have begun to choose Sunday for a variety of amusements, some of which are disreputable on any day, or at any season. Without discussing the religious or social aspects of the question, I ask your permission to mention a few historical facts.

When the Marquis Wellesley, the Duke of Wellington's brother, went to India as Governor-General, he found that the English community, civil and military, had thrown off almost every restraint of religion. In fact, it was a common saying in those days that every Englishman left his Christianity behind when he rounded the Cape of Good Hope. As the Marquis believed religion to be the best safeguard of law and order, he resolved to throw the whole weight of his government on the side of decent observance of Sunday. After he had been a few months in the country, he issued a Proclamation, forbidding horse-racing, and other sports out of keeping with the Christian Sabbath. He spoke plainly of these amusements on that day, as being contrary at once to English customs and to the ordinances of the Protestant religion. He ordered all magistrates, and officers in command of stations to prohibit such practices; and he announced that anyone disregarding his order should forfeit the protection of Government, and be sent back forthwith to Europe. As long as Lord Wellesley's firm hand was at the helm, and his own noble example was witnessed, the despisers of religion were kept in check, as we are told in Marshman's Life of Dr. Carey.

It was from the good influence of George III. that Lord Wellesley took his ideas of what an English Sunday ought to be, or, at least, what it ought not to be—a day of reckless and profane revelry, such as we are now threatened with in England. George III. had not been many months on the throne before he abolished the Sunday levées and the Court entertainments which had been the usage in the time of George II. In the first Proclamation made by the good King "against vice and immorality," he referred to the desecration of the Lord's day by those who ought to set a better example to the nation. In his biography many incidents are recorded which show the strong feeling he had on this point all through his life. On one occasion, when the palace at Kew was being repaired, the King missed a workman with whom he had sometimes held communication on religious subjects, as was his custom on meeting with persons like-minded, in every rank of life. On hearing that the man had been dismissed because he refused to work on Sunday, the King was greatly offended, and commanded that he should be at once restored: saying, "the man who respects the law of God is the man for me, let him be sent for." It will not tend to the stability of the throne if the example of George IV., in this and other public matters, is followed by our future King, instead of that of George III.

The same respect for the Divine law and for English usages, in regard to Sunday, has been always shown by Queen Victoria. Let one instance suffice. When the Queen and the Prince Consort paid their first visit to Paris, the Emperor Napoleon (whose knowledge of English opinion on religious observances did not extend much beyond the Bohemian circles of Blessington House) had prepared special amusements for Sunday. The Queen and the Prince sent a courteous intimation to the Emperor that they would like to pass the Sunday quietly; and their wish was respected.

I may add that during the first International Exposition, in the Champ de Mars, the whole of the English department was closed on Sundays. So far from this being met with ridicule by the French, many expressions of surprise and approval were heard, and a lesson of a practical kind was given, which working men in this country would do well to ponder.

A Sunday of pleasure to the rich means a Sunday of labour to the poor. Once break through the restraints of religious and social usage, and the Continental Sunday, with its toils, as well as its so-called amusements, will take the place of the good old English "day of rest and gladness." M.D.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, MARCH 18.——AMOS VI.

1.—Woe to them that are at ease in Zion, and trust in the mountain of Samaria.—"This woe applies to the great men in Zion and Samaria, i.e., to the chiefs of the whole of the covenant nation, because they were all sunk in the same godless security. In order to define with still greater precision the position of these princes in the congregation it is added 'to whom the house of Israel cometh' (so R.V.)—namely, to have its affairs regulated by them as rulers."

6.—But they are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph.—"Joseph signifies the people and kingdom of the ten tribes."—Keil. Upon these first came the judgment of God in the earlier invasions of Assyria. Luxury and self-indulgence were out of place at such a time.

9.—If there remain ten men in one house, that they shall die.—"In the straitness of the siege of Samaria (2 Kings xvii. 5) famine must have been followed by pestilence.'—S.C. The scene which follows reminds one of the fearful scenes described in Defoe's history of the great plague of London, when a cart went through the streets with the cry, "Bring out your dead!" The despair of the sufferers is vividly described by being forbidden to make mention of the name of the Lord.

12.—Shall horses run upon the rock?—"The questions represent what is absurd and fruitless. Is the conduct of the nobles and judges of Israel more reasonable who have turned God's law and equity into a means of oppression and violence, and yet hope to escape the Divine judgment?"—S.C.

MONDAY, MARCH 19.——AMOS VII.

"The prophet had just announced the punishment to be inflicted on Israel by a powerful enemy. He now adds a series of visions in which the Lord showed him some details of the approaching calamity. The first three correspond with the gradual advance of the Assyrians. First, Pul invaded the land (2 Kings xv. 19, 20), but retired on receiving from Menahem 1000 talents of silver (this would correspond to ver. 3, 'It shall not be, saith the Lord'). Secondly, Tiglath-pileser, at the invitation of Ahaz, made a second invasion, and carried captive the tribes on the north and east (2 Kings xv. 29, xvi. 7; 1 Chron. v. 26) (this would correspond to ver. 6, 'It shall not be, saith the Lord God'). Lastly Shalmaneser subdued and carried away the remainder of the people (2 Kings xvii. 3—6)."—S.C.

6.—This also shall not be, saith the Lord.—"This points not to what was past, but to some greater unnamed calamity that was to follow. A respite was granted."—S.C.

8.—I will not again pass by them any more.—"He will no longer spare as hitherto."—Keil.

14.—I was no prophet...but I was an herdman.—"Amos repudiates the insinuation (12) that he practises prophesying as a calling or profession by which he gets his living."—Ibid.

17.—Israel shall surely go into captivity.—A repetition of the words (11) which he was charged with having used.

TUESDAY, MARCH 20.——AMOS VIII.

"Under the symbol of a basket filled with ripe fruit the Lord shows the prophet that Israel is ripe for judgment (1—3); whereupon Amos, explaining the meaning of this vision, announces to the unrighteous magnates of the nation the changing of their joyful feasts into days of mourning, as the punishment of God for their unrighteousness (4—10), and sets before them a time when those who now despise the word of God will sigh in vain in their extremity for a word from Him (11—14).—Keil.

2.—A basket of summer fruit...the end is come.—There is a play upon words: "summer fruit" is kaits, "end" is kets. "At harvest time there is no more to be done for that crop. Good or bad it has reached its end, and is cut down. Israel was ripe, but for destruction."—Pusey. See, as to the world, Rev. xiv. 15.

7.—The Lord hath sworn by the excellency of Jacob—i.e., by Himself.—So Pusey and S.C.

9.—I will cause the sun to go down at noon, I will darken the earth in the clear day.—"The correspondence of these words with the miracle at our Lord's death (Matt. xxvii. 45) was noticed by the earliest Fathers."—Pusey. When Christ died "for that nation" (John xi. 51) the words were fulfilled (7) "I will never forget any of their works," for they were visited upon the Substitute. To those who reject Christ another day is coming when "the sun shall be darkened" (Matt. xxiv. 29), and their works shall be visited in judgment upon themselves, seeing that they reject God's salvation.

12.—They shall wander from sea to sea.—The restless, unsatisfied, wandering life of Israel among the Gentiles is here depicted. They have rejected the Word of God in the person of his Son (Heb. i. 2), and cannot elsewhere find it.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 21.——AMOS IX.

1.—I saw the Lord standing upon the altar.—"It has been disputed what altar is meant. Some suppose that the altar at Jerusalem must be intended, since that alone deserved the name. Others more naturally take it as the altar set up by Jeroboam; for the context relates to Israel, and to Israel alone. The destruction of this same altar had already been foretold by Amos (iii. 14)."—S.C.

11.—In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen.—This prophecy does not relate to the throne of David, but to the tabernacle of David. The Tabernacle of David is that which David erected on Mount Zion (2 Sam. vi. 17; 1 Chron. xv. 1) for the ark of the Lord, in which it remained all his lifetime, until removed to Solomon's temple. It was thus separated from the tabernacle of Moses, which continued all this time at Gibeon (2 Chron. i. 3), where the regular Levitical ceremonial was carried on. David thus enjoyed by anticipation the Gospel privilege of access into the holiest (Heb. x. 19), i.e., direct access to God without priestly intervention. He could go in and "sit before the Lord" (2 Sam. vii. 18), and hence the psalms of David breathe the spirit of direct communion with God, which makes them suitable to the Church of God in all ages. This explains the meaning of James at the council of Jerusalem (Acts xv. 15), who quotes this passage to justify admitting Gentiles to a like privilege, viz., direct access to God without the burdensome ceremonial of the Levitical law. David's Tabernacle was thus a type of Gospel worship.

12.—That they may possess the remnant of Edom.—For "Edom" the LXX. evidently read "Adam," which differs but in one letter. Hence their rendering "that the residue of men." They also read "seek" for "possess," which also differ in Hebrew by but one letter.

THURSDAY, MARCH 22.——OBADIAH.

"The silence of Holy Scripture as to the Prophet Obadiah stands in remarkable contrast with the anxiety of men to know something of him. Hence they hoped that he might prove to have been the faithful protector of the prophets under Ahab, or the son of the Shunammite whom Elisha recalled to life, or the Obadiah whom Jehoshaphat sent to teach in the cities of Judah, or the Levite set over the temple in the reign of Josiah. Fruitless guesses at what God has hidden."—Pusey.

1.—Let us rise up against her in battle.—"Vv. 2—9 contain the denunciation of Edom; 10—14 the cause of the denunciation; 15, 16 an expression of the denunciation; 17—21 a declaration of the glories of Zion following the fulfilment of the denunciation."—S.C.

3.—Thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock.—"The word 'rock' is Selah, and by it the prophet probably designates 'Selah,' which was the name of the Edomite capital, whose site was afterwards occupied by 'Petra,' a word of like import. The site abounded with cliffs, honeycombed with caverns, and in these caverns the Edomites dwelt."—S.C.

12.—Thou shouldest not...neither shouldest thou...neither shouldest thou.—All these should be corrected, as in margin, to "do not." So R.V. "Look not thou," "rejoice not," "neither speak." It is a warning to Edom as to the future, not a remonstrance as to the past.

17.—But upon Mount Zion shall be deliverance.—R.V. better "shall be those that escape." Comp. Joel ii. 32.

FRIDAY, MARCH 23.——JONAH I.

All we know about Jonah is to be found in 2 Kings xiv. 25. He flourished in the reign of Jeroboam II., near the time of Amos and Hosea.

2.—Their wickedness is come up before me.—Comp. Gen. vi. 2; Acts x. 4; Rev. xvi. 19.

3.—To flee unto Tarshish.—"Probably the Phœnician settlement of Tartessus in Spain. Jonah wanted to get away to the furthest point westward that he knew of; so averse was he from the mission eastwards to Nineveh."—S.C. He found a ship going to Tarshish.—The success of our plans does not always indicate Providential guidance.

6.—If so be that God will think upon us.—"It was common among the heathen, in their more serious moments, to raise their minds above the gods of their mythology to a higher Deity."—S.C.

7.—Come, let us cast lots.—Josephus in relating how they suspected one of their number to be the occasion of the storm, and how they cast lots to discover who it was, adds "as is usual in such cases" (Ant. ix. 10, 2).

17.—The Lord had prepared a great fish.—The LXX. rendering of "great fish" which is quoted in the New Testament, means, "any sea-monster, or huge fish" (Liddell and Scott), so that our English "whale" is by no means necessary. "The great fish was not a whale, because this is extremely rare in the Mediterranean, and has too small a throat to swallow a man, but a large shark or sea-dog, which is very common in the Mediterranean and has so large a throat that it can (an instance is given) swallow a living man whole."—Keil.

SATURDAY, MARCH 24.——JONAH II.

1.—Then Jonah prayed unto the Lord his God.—"What follows is not a petition for deliverance, but thanksgiving and praise for deliverance already received. The sentiments are those he then felt, but the form we must suppose to have been the production of a later and more tranquil hour. It consists for the most part of reminiscences of passages in the Psalms."—Keil. Three days and three nights.—"Signify, according to the Hebrew usage, that Jonah was cast out by the fish on the third day. Comp. Esth. iv. 16, with v. 1."—Keil. See also, Sam. xxx. 12, 13.

3.—All thy billows and thy waves passed over me.—"The expression is identically the same as Ps. xlii. 7."—S.C. There it is a prophecy of the baptism with which Christ should be baptized (Luke xii. 50), and here, although fulfilled literally in Jonah's case, he thus became a type of Christ in death and resurrection, as our Lord teaches (Matt. xii. 40).

6.—I went down to the bottoms of the mountains.—Jonah does not regard the fish's belly as the place of danger, but the previous sinking into the depths of the sea from which the great fish rescued him. So with the Antitype, not the grave, but the previous death was the baptism which the Lord Jesus underwent. In Matt. xii. 40, the heart of the earth corresponds to the whale's belly.

7.—My prayer came in unto Thee.—As though once within the fish's mouth he realised his deliverance, which came fully on the third day.

9.—Salvation is of the Lord.—Almost identical with the words of Ps. iii. 8.

10.—The Lord spake unto the fish.—The Lord's intervention has special significance in view of the resurrection of Christ.

QUARTERLY REVIEW.

HEROD AND JOHN.

Matt. xiv. 1—12. Golden Text: Matt. xiv. 12.—Here we see the man of this world contrasted with the man of God.—Herod, the king, with John, his prisoner and victim. How tremendous this contrast in respect of situation, character, true happiness, and fame. In that day men pitied the lonely, helpless prisoner; but now he is the glorified martyr. Then, Herod was great in power; but now, how dishonoured!

Lesson points in Scripture words.—"Herod had laid hold on John, and bound him, and put him in prison" (ver. 3). "And he sent and beheaded John in the prison" (ver. 10). "And his disciples came, and took up the body, and buried it, and went and told Jesus" (ver. 12).

THE MULTITUDE FED.

Matt. xiv. 13—21. G.T., John vi. 35.—We have here a great lesson in doing good. Observe: (1) The Compassion of Jesus, shown in his care for the sick, the hungry, and the ignorant; (2) the glorious power of Jesus, and what can be done by feeble disciples who go to help others at his bidding, and (3) the privilege of working for, and with Jesus. He did not really need the lad's loaves and fishes. How glad and honoured the lad was when Jesus made so much of his little store!

Lesson points in Scripture words.—"His disciples came to him saying...Send the multitude away... But Jesus said unto them, They need not depart; give ye them to eat" (vv. 15, 16). "And they did all eat, and were filled" (ver 20). "He satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness" (Ps. cvii. 9).

JESUS WALKING ON THE SEA.

Matt. xiv. 22—36. G.T., Matt. xiv. 27.—This lesson reveals Jesus as the great Friend of his people. (1) Watchful.—They toiling in rowing, He on the hill-top praying, but watchful (Mark vi. 48). (2) Encouraging.—"It is I; be not afraid." (3) Majestic.—Lord of Nature, Himself walking on the waves, and bidding Peter "Come."

Lesson points in Scripture words.—"He saw them toiling in rowing" (Mark vi. 48). "Jesus went unto them, walking on the sea. And when the disciples saw Him walking on the sea, they were troubled. And straightway Jesus spake...It is I; be not afraid" (Matt. xiv. 25—27). "Behold, He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep" (Ps. cxxi. 4).

JESUS AND THE AFFLICTED.

Matt. xv. 21—31. G.T., James v. 13.—This lesson shows how we may prevail with God. This was the most extreme case possible, for the petitioner had no claim, no promise. Christ met her first with chilling silence, and then with most discouraging speech. Yet she prevailed gloriously—winning our Lord's highest commendation.

Lesson points in Scripture words.—"A woman of Canaan came...and cried unto Him, saying, Have mercy on me, &c.; my daughter is grievously vexed with a devil. But He answered her not a word. And his disciples besought Him, &c. But He answered, I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Then came she and worshipped Him, saying, Lord, help me. O woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt" (Matt. xv. 22—29).

PETER CONFESSING CHRIST.

Matt. xvi. 13—28. G.T., Matt. x. 32.—This lesson urges upon us the great question of life, "Whom say ye that I am?" It will not do to be concerned about other folk, unless we ourselves have a true heart-knowledge of Jesus.

Lesson points in Scripture words.—"Whom do men say that I the Son of Man am?...But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God" (vv. 13, 15, 16). "This is life eternal, that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent" (John xvii. 3).

THE TRANSFIGURATION.

Matt. xvii. 1—13. G.T., Luke ix. 35.—This scene tells us that Jesus is God—the "beloved Son"; and that He must be first. "Jesus only." It also gives us a glimpse into the life of God's people after death.

Lesson points in Scripture words.—"And as He prayed, the fashion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and glistening. And, behold, there talked with Him two men, Moses and Elias: who appeared in glory, and spake of his decease....And there came a voice out of the cloud, saying, This is my beloved Son: hear Him" (Luke ix. 29—31, 35). "We beheld his glory," &c. (John i. 14).

JESUS AND THE LITTLE ONES.

Matt. xviii. 1—14. G.T., Matt. xix. 14.—This lesson teaches that only childlike people can possess the kingdom; that the childlike, whatever their age and position, are very sacred and precious in his sight; that we should fear, above all things, to cause any of his "little ones" to stumble; and that the worst evil that can befall us is sin.

Lesson points in Scripture words.—"Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth Me....Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones....If thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and cast it from thee" (Matt. xviii. 3, 5, 10, and 9).

A LESSON ON FORGIVENESS.

Matt. xviii. 21—35. G.T., Matt. vi. 12.—We here learn the awful contrast between the wrongs we suffer from others and the sins we commit against God. They are as 100 pence to 10,000 talents, i.e., as 1 to 1,250,000. This is a strong way of saying the difference cannot be measured. We learn, too, the awful nature of an unforgiving spirit; and that the only way to learn forgiveness is to receive fully God's pardoning love.

Lesson points in Scripture words.—"One...owed him 10,000 talents....The Lord forgave him the debt. But the same servant went out, and found one of his fellow servants which owed him an hundred pence, and...he took him by the throat, saying, Pay me that thou owest...He cast him into prison. And his Lord was wroth," &c. (Matt. xviii. 24, 27, 28, 30, 34).

THE RICH YOUNG RULER.

Matt. xix. 16—26. G.T., Matt. vi. 24.—This is a very solemn lesson on the importance of the one thing needful. Without thoroughgoing decision for Jesus the life is lost. How pitiful, this young man's great refusal of eternal life!

Lesson points in Scripture words.—"Go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come and follow Me...He went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions" (Matt. xix. 21, 22). "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him" (1 John ii. 15).

CHRIST'S LAST JOURNEY TO JERUSALEM.

Matt. xx. 17—29. G.T., Matt. xx. 28.—This teaches our Lord's perfect courage and obedience. All the details of his suffering and shame are before his mind. He knows that two weeks or less will bring Him to his cross. Yet how calm He is, and resolute, and how free to care for others! We see Him, too, the perfect example of self-sacrificing love.

Lesson points in Scripture words.—"Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of Man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn Him to death, and shall deliver Him to the Gentiles to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify Him. Even as the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many" (Matt. xx. 18, 19—28).

CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM.

Matt. xxi. 1—16. G.T., Ps. cxviii. 26.—This lesson reveals Jesus as our King: in his authority claiming the ass as his—his triumph, his sorrow (Luke xix. 41—44), his indignation, terrible in his wrath as He cleanses the Temple, his mercy, healing the sick, and his joy, in the children's praises.

Lesson points in Scripture words.—"Lift up your heads, O ye gates; even lift them up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of glory shall come in" (Ps. xxiv. 9). "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee. He is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt, the foal of an ass" (Zech. ix. 9). "His name shall endure for ever: and men shall be blessed in Him" (Ps. lxxii. 17).

THE SON REJECTED.

Matt. xxi. 33—46. G.T., John i. 11.—We have here an expression of the desparate sin of determined, wilful selfishness. The husbandmen are set on holding the vineyard as their own against all right. The end is murder and destruction. The Jewish leaders, too, hold their place and power for their own profit. The end is the murder of God's Son.

"The carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be" (Rom. viii. 7). "Kiss the Son, lest He be angry...Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him" (Ps. ii. 12).

OUTLINES PREPARED BY HENRY THORNE.

Sunday Afternoon, March 25.

NEIGHBOURLINESS.—PROVERBS iii. 27—35.

All men are neighbours. Some are so because they live in the same street; others because they live in the same country; and all, because they live on the same planet. The law of Moses said much of the duty men owe to their neighbours (Exod. xx. 17), and our Lord emphasised this duty in one of his most graphic and pointed parables. The spirit of neighbourliness, in its best and truest sense, is one of the firstfruits of love for Christ. This spirit is the chief theme of the verses we are now to consider.

Note.—(1) The Character of Neighbourliness.—The neighbourly spirit is (a) Equitable (ver. 27).—Dues must be regarded. Note the dues named in Rom. xiii. 7. (b) Charitable (ver. 28).—Needs as well as dues to be observed. We must beware of deferred beneficence. (c) Harmless (ver. 29).—To "devise" means here to "cut out." There is often great ingenuity displayed by the devisers of evil. (d) Peaceful (ver 30).—The persecution of the innocent is a heinous sin. See our Lord's words about being angry with a brother without cause (Matt. v. 22).

(2) The Character of Bad Neighbours.—Five classes of persons are described in the lesson, and they may all be regarded as bad neighbours. These are (a) The Overbearing (ver. 31).—"The oppressor" is one who presses hardly upon others. Note the violent hand and the corrupt heart (Gen. vi. 11—13). (b) The Proud (ver. 32).—"Frowardness" here means "perversity," and the root of this is pride. Note the seven abominations in chap. vi., and how pride heads the list. (c) The Malicious (ver. 33).—Wickedness is wrongness. See the curse of the wicked, as described in this book. The tenth chapter shows how there is a curse upon his substance (ver. 3); his mouth (6); his name (7); his work (16); his affections (20); his life (24). (d) The Scornful (ver. 34).—The men who sneer at what is good. See how hateful such persons were to the Lord (Luke viii. 53). (e) The Foolish.—The fool of this verse is a self-confident person. See the word defined in chap. xxviii. 26. Note the irony of this verse. In the ranks of Satan promotion is disgrace. (Comp. the better promotion, chap. iv. 8).

(3) The Character of Good Neighbours.—They are (a) Righteous (ver. 32).—Literally, upright. No stooping to wrong doing. The bent body indicates physical weakness, and the bent soul indicates moral weakness (comp. "The stature of the fulness of Christ," Eph. iv. 13). (b) Just (ver. 33).—Here is righteousness in relation to others. (c) Lowly (ver. 34).—"Humility," it has been said, "is the rarest of Christian graces." It is also the noblest. It is the grace which was, perhaps, the most characteristic of our Lord (Matt. xi. 29). (d) Wise (ver. 35).—Neighbours are often consulted in times of difficulty. How well it is when they can give wise advice (chap. xii. 18).

For such persons there is the wisest counsel (ver. 32), the greatest happiness (ver. 33), the highest honour (ver. 34), and the most glorious prospects (ver. 35).

RAMSGATE.—The report for 1887 of St. Luke's Convalescent Home and Workers' Rest shows steady progress in the work of the Home. Rev. W. T. and Mrs. Hathaway are living in it that they may superintend personally, and make it more homelike for visitors who will value Christian fellowship with themselves and their co-workers. A large number of those engaged in Christian work and in teaching avail themselves of the quiet rest and refreshing offered by the Home. Rules, &c., may be had on application to Mrs. W. Hathaway, Hon. Sec., Finsbury House, Ramsgate.

THE LAND AND THE BOOK.—Many of our readers will be glad to know that the four lectures lately delivered by Rev. J. Neil on this subject, at Exeter Hall, are being published in separate form. The first two lectures will form one of the "Penny Library" series, and will be entitled "Strange Scenes." The last two will compose another of the series under the title of "Figurative Language of the Bible." This "Penny Library" series, which is being edited by Mr. Neil, and published by Messrs. Woodford Fawcett & Co., Dorset Works, Salisbury-square, E.C., is a most valuable addition to popular literature, and deserves to be widely circulated. The first issue, "Talking Trees," has already had a circulation, we understand, of over 60,000.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. Charles Davis has been appointed organising secretary of the Church Parochial Mission Society.

The Rock of last week contains a portrait and biographical sketch of Rev. E. A. Stuart, of Holloway.

Rev. T. Aston-Binns, of Reigate, has been appointed honorary Home Secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

The Archbishop of Canterbury opened the new mission hall of the Wellington College Mission, South-street, Walworth, on Saturday last.

The Bishop of Truro, whose state of health for some weeks past has been such that he has been prohibited by his medical adviser from doing any active work, has been ordered abroad for a month's rest.

Rev. William Wetton Cox has been appointed clerical secretary of the London Association in Aid of the Moravian Missions, in place of Rev. James Henry, now one of the secretaries of the Church Pastoral Aid Society.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. J. B. Meharry, of Newcastle, has accepted the call to the church at Crouch-hill.

The children of the Presbyterian Church of England, during the past year, have contributed £1723 for foreign missions.

£50,858 was contributed for charitable and religious purposes by the Established churches in Edinburgh presbytery last year.

Professor Henry Drummond, it is stated, is to visit America again this year, and will be one of the Carew lecturers at Hartford Theological Seminary.

Dr. Oswald Dykes, minister of Regent-square Church, and Moderator-elect of the English Synod, is to be invited to a professorship in the Presbyterian College, London.

Rev. J. A. Hogg, minister of Galston Established Church, has resigned his charge and seceded from the Church of Scotland because of his inability to conform his preaching to the Confession of Faith.

The Bible-class in Cowcaddens Free Church, which is one of the most remarkable classes in Glasgow, has in four years quadrupled its membership, which is now 435. Four years ago it numbered only 70.

Edinburgh Free Church presbytery, acting on the report of the committee appointed to consider the application for increased accommodation for the M'Crie-Roxburgh church (Rev. John McNeill's) unanimously and cordially recommend the project to public sympathy and encouragement.

METHODIST.

A series of special evangelistic services at Exeter, conducted by Rev. T. Cook, have resulted in much blessing. Over 450 persons sought Christian counsel and prayer in the inquiry-room, and many have been born again.

Barry-road Chapel, East Dulwich, is a hive of spiritual industry. The congregational and mission premises are seldom closed, every agency for good being in vigorous operation. The Sunday-school has nearly 1000 children on the roll.

A special mission has recently been held at Bradley, Wednesbury, by Rev. J. G. Mantle, of Birmingham. The village has been mightily moved, and some of the worst characters brought to Christ. The good work is still going on.

Priory-street Chapel, York, has a vigorous young men's class, which has just attained its quarter-centennial. It has a membership of 553. In connection with the class a bright little Monthly Messenger is published, which has a circulation of 1000.

The work of God continues to prosper in connection with Clapton-park Tabernacle. The increase for the year is 28 church members, 11 teachers, 111 scholars, and 80 Band of Hope members. Seventy adults have been led to the Saviour at the services during the year.

There has been a great awakening at Shildon in connection with a series of evangelistic services, conducted for several weeks by Mrs. Coates, of Hull. About three hundred persons have professed conversion. The same lady proceeded to hold services at Gilkes-street Chapel, Middlesborough, and at the close of the mission over two hundred had come forward to confess Christ.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A week's Gospel mission has been concluded by students of Cheshunt College at Stanstead, where much bright and happy result has followed.

Rev. Professor Elmslie, of the Presbyterian College, has received a unanimous invitation from the congregation at Westminster Chapel, to fill the pulpit vacant by the removal of Rev. H. Simon to Canonbury.

Owing to family circumstances, Rev. E. Reeves Palmer has resigned the position he held for five years as agent for the British and Foreign Bible Society in Spain. He has returned to England, his present address being 3, Carisbrook-terrace, Walthamstow, Essex.

A successful eight-day mission, in Christ Church, Rhyl, has been conducted by "Gipsy" Smith, of Hanley, whose labours were greatly owned of God. He was assisted by Rev. D. B. Hooke, pastor of the church, and by ministers of various denominations.

Dr. Joseph Parker, of the City Temple, proposes a "Rural Mission" to Scotland in the autumn. He thinks Scotland the finest field in the whole world for preaching, and that the Scotch are prepared to go in energetically for any wise scheme for making the Gospel better known.

The anniversary of the church at Victoria-park, South Hackney, was held on Tuesday, 28th ult. The pastor, Rev. George Snashall, gave a short review of the moral and spiritual aspects of their work. They had enjoyed a year of peaceful and harmonious labour. The spiritual life of the church was deepening and giving promise of fruitfulness.

The result of eight consecutive weeks of nightly evangelistic services at the branch chapels connected with the church at St. Helens has been that 400 persons have declared themselves on the Lord's side. The Liverpool Congregational Magazine says that the work has been done without any external help or attraction in the way of a special missioner, and that among the converts there are quite as many men as women.

The report of the past year's work of the Church at West Croydon, of which Rev. J. P. Wilson is pastor, speaks of good progress in connection with all the agencies of the church; thirty-five members have been admitted into fellowship during the year, and the amount contributed was £1875. A new mission-hall was opened a few weeks ago, where a working-men's club has been established and a religious service is held every Sunday evening

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Under the auspices of the Friends Foreign Mission Association, Caroline Southal, of Leeds, is going out to China; and Henrietta Dean, of Leeds, will proceed to Madagascar to support the work there.

William Hobson, of Cardiff, has finished a ten days' mission in Manchester and Oldham. The meetings throughout were lively, and the interest sustained. The hearts of not a few young people are devoted to Christ and his work in those great centres.

Henry C. Andelott, writing from Fall River, U.S.A., on the 13th ult., says:—"The revival here is wonderful. It is estimated there were 400 conversions yesterday, as men count. The men's meeting last night numbered over 2000; the women's, 1500. The meeting to-night was one of great power."

At home the missionary spirit seems spreading. Joseph Farrar, of Kendal, is to devote a part of his time to home mission service. Frederick de Carteret, of Jersey, will again serve the Home Mission Committee during the summer, while Agnes Thompson, a young Friend of Barnard Castle, has been led to engage in similar work.

SALVATION ARMY.

Work has been commenced in Aalborg, one of the most northern towns in Denmark.

The Army have opened a new barracks at Ballinderry, co. Antrim, under hopeful auspices.

An officer in Sweden—a young woman of nineteen—has been imprisoned for holding meetings after 9 p.m.

Last week's War Cry has a very interesting illustrated article describing the work at the new Night Shelter and Food Depôt in Limehouse.

Commissioner Tucker is to be married to Miss Emma Booth, General Booth's second daughter, on Tuesday, April 10, at the Congress Hall, Clapton.

Bishop Gregg, of the Reformed Church of England, laid the foundation-stone of a new Salvation Army barracks at Southend on-Sea, on Thursday last week.

The Salvation Army corps at Berwick, on Sunday week, paid their second annual visit to St. Mary's Episcopal Church on Sunday week, at the special invitation of the vicar, Rev. James King.

Staff-Captain Cooke appeals for "at least twenty young women, filled with God's love," to carry the Gospel to the thousands living in misery in the London slums. The Foreign Secretary appeals for twelve officers for the work in Australia.

Fifty-one summonses were heard before the Torquay magistrates last week against twenty-two members of the Salvation Army for contravening a clause in the new local Act, by taking part on the past four Sundays in street processions with instrumental music. Fifteen defendants were sentenced to terms of imprisonment ranging from a fortnight to one month, and "Colonel" George Nicholson was fined 40s. The remaining summonses were adjourned or dismissed. The decision of the Court has caused great excitement in Torquay, and the matter will probably be brought under the notice of the House of Commons.

BAPTIST.

Rev. J. H. and Mrs. Weeks and Mr. Arthur D. Slade leave England for the Congo on Monday next.

The British Weekly suggests that Rev. William Cuff, of Shoreditch, should be the next president of the Baptist Union.

The Baptist church at Ayr, of which Rev. John Horne is pastor, has purchased the "Queen's Rooms," at the price of £1350, including the building which was formerly for many years the theatre, the church having become too small.

The annual report of the church at Stanningley tells of a year of unusual prosperity. "For the past six months we have," it is said, "had baptisms each month, and we have still a numerous and well-attended class of inquirers."

On Monday week a meeting was held in Camden-road Chapel to bid farewell to Mr. Alfred Thompson, who has been educated at the Regent's Park College, and is setting out as missionary to Nagercoil, Travancore, South India, under the auspices of the London Missionary Society. Rev. Dr. Kennedy presided.

Mr. Alf, the Russian Polish Baptist evangelist, writes Dr. Harwood Pattison, is in America just now. He is making friends everywhere, and will no doubt profit by his visit. A man who has been twenty times imprisoned, who has marched weary miles with chains on his arms and feet, and with the threat of Siberia hanging over his head—and all this because he would be true to his conscience—is the right timber from which to make a martyr.

At the missionary prayer-meeting at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Monday week, Mr. A. H. Baynes, Secretars of the Baptist Missionary Society, and Rev. Francis James, of North China, were present. Mr. Baynes mentioned that the Society in four years had nearly quadrupled its work in China, doubled it in Africa, and strengthened it in India. Mr. James gave a few interesting incidents that had come under his notice, and made an earnest appeal for the prayers and sympathy of the congregation.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A successful series of evangelistic services have been held in Crumlin Presbyterian Church.

The annual report of Methodist Sunday-schools in Ireland has been issued. There are at present 314 schools, with 2857 officers and teachers, and 24879 scholars.

The death of Rev. Isaac Nelson, Presbyterian minister, of Donegal-street, Belfast, has taken place, in the 77th year of his age and 50th of his ministry. He was a man of great ability; and, as he considered it his mission to expose "shams" of all kinds, religious and political, a few years since he resigned his pastorate and entered Parliament. He soon found himself in uncongenial company, and withdrew into private life, in which he remained till his decease.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Mrs. Saibai Sheshadri, wife of Rev. Narayan Sheshadri, D.D., of the Free Church of Scotland Mission, Jalna, near Poona, India.—Rev. Isaac Nelson, one of the oldest Presbyterian ministers in Ireland.—Mr. David Crawford, of Londonderry, an earnest local preacher, suddenly after preaching, and a zealous temperance worker, whose house for years has been the home of many a Christian philanthropist.—Rev. H. R. Holahan, of Dublin, a respected minister of the Church of Ireland, in a good old age.—Suddenly, at Kandy, last week, Rev. John Allcock, for tweny-three years a missionary of the Church Missionary Society in Ceylon.—Rev. William Niven, an aged evangelical clergyman, formerly for upwards of a quarter of a century vicar of St. Saviour's, Upper Chelsea.—Rev. Canon Charles A. Hulbert, vicar since 1867 of Aldmondbury, Huddersfield.—Rev. P. R. Atkinson, Canon of Winchester, and Archdeacon of Surrey. He was for many years vicar of Dorking, but since 1885 had been vicar of Frensham.—Rev. John Yardley, for nearly fifty-two years vicar of St. Chad's, Shrewsbury.—Rev. Richard Hornabrook, for twenty years a missionary in the West Indies, and one of the oldest ministers of the Wesleyan Connexion.—Rev. E. Goodall, late pastor of Rehoboth Congregational Chapel, Morley.—Rev. William Bull, for twenty-five years pastor of the Baptist Tabernacle, Wellingborough.—Rev. Thomas Price, for forty-two years pastor of Carmel Baptist Chapel, Aberdare.

OBITUARY.

REV. WALTER DE VEAR, M.A.

THIS devoted servant of the Lord finished his course, at the age of sixty-three, at the beginning of the present month. Formerly vicar of St. Stephen's, Tovil, Maidstone, and of St. Peter's, Stonegate, Ticehurst, he was latterly chaplain to the Hahnemann Convalescent Home, Bournemouth. He was closely connected with the Y.M.C.A., conducted a Bible-class for young men, and was universally beloved, alike as a man and as a follower of Christ.

RAILWAY MEN'S MISSION.—The first Gospel tea-meeting in connection with the Shields Branch, Glasgow, took place last week, about 300 of the Railway men and their friends being present. Mr. William S. Ross, Bridge-building Department, Clutha Iron Works, president, occupied the chair, and gave a very encouraging account of the progress of the branch. Started only fifteen months ago, it has now a membership of sixty. The attendance on Sunday afternoons averages about a hundred. Every Tuesday evening there is a fellowship meeting. The testimony of the deputation sent by the branch to other meetings has been greatly blessed of God.

OUR OPIUM TRADE WITH CHINA.—On Tuesday, last week, a public meeting was held in the Assembly Room of the Y.M.C.A., Brighton. Mr. Marriage Wallis, J.P., presided. Rev. Goodeve Mabbs proposed the following resolution: "That our national opium trade with China is wrong in principle, disastrous in its consequences, a hindrance to the spread of the Gospel in China, and a disgrace to Great Britain; and that it is the duty of British citizens who desire the exercise of righteousness in our national policy, to use their influence to put an end to our connection with it." Rev. T. Rhys Evans seconded the motion, and Rev. E. Storrow, late of Calcutta, supported it. The motion was carried unanimously.

DUBLIN PRISON GATE MISSION.—At the annual meeting recently held, the Archbishop of Dublin, who presided, gave some account of the nature of the work done. Ladies connected with the movement wait at the gate of the prisons at all times, in all weathers, sometimes amid many jeers, to receive their erring sisters on their being liberated after undergoing terms of imprisonment. To these frail creatures, no matter what their creed, and without any unreasonable conditions being imposed, the Mission gives advice and renders help in earning a livelihood or emigrating from surroundings of evil and misery. The annual report showed that some new industries for women have lately been adopted in connection with the Mission.

CENTRAL AFRICA.—At the meeting, last week, of the commission of the General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland, Edinburgh, Professor Lindsay drew attention to recent events in Central Africa. He said that through the powerful personal influence of Dr. Laws war between the Angoni and Atonga had disappeared, and they were under no great concern about the safety of their missions on the west side of Lake Nyassa. The matters on the north side of the lake did not so much concern their mission station as they concerned other peaceful legitimate traders. Their missionaries had not asked for Government protection, and they, as a committee, did not wish to ask for Government protection for their missionaries. The committee were, however, already in communication with various missionary and benevolent societies both in England and in Scotland, and they wished to make some real representation some time or other to Government to see whether they could not do something to follow out the line of policy laid down by Livingstone long ago, and to follow out the pledges which they believed they gave to Livingstone long ago to do something to make the slave trade cease at that its very centre and source.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Monday, March 12, 1888.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

A BRIGHT START IN LIFE!

DEAR FRIENDS,

The time has come to draft off the boys rescued and trained in our Homes during the past year away from the sins and sorrows of this over-peopled City, to the healthy, happy homes of our farming kin across the sea.

We have 150 bright, well-diciplined boys ready to start. Through the generosity of one who himself 54 years ago left England's shores a poor boy, we have a Distributing Home in the "Queen City" (Toronto), to receive them comfortably on their arrival. Our Canadian Council have carefully selected capital openings for them to enter upon after a few days' rest, in the families of highly respectable farmers, carpenters, blacksmiths, &c. The following extracts, received by last mail (a few out of scores of similar testimonies continually coming to hand), will show you

What they say in Canada:—

From The Christian Guardian.

"My own knowledge of this work, together with the constant reports from Mr. Brace, superintendent in the Dominion, convinces me that great attention is paid to their moral and spiritual training. This is evidenced in the fact that numbers of the lads have joined Churches, and are active Christian workers in this country.

"A lengthened tour of visitation, recently made by the superintendent, found the boys giving general satisfaction, and farmers anxious to re-engage. What could be better for this vast Dominion than to encourage such enterprises, and what more Christ-like than to remove these lads from overcrowded centres of the Old Land, where they have no chance of success, to a country where broad acres invite the toiler, and certain reward will crown honest effort?"

COVENTRY.

DEAR SIR,—I can endorse the statements you made in The Guardian so far as my knowledge of Mr. Fegan's boys. I am personally acquainted with three of them in our neighbourhood. They attended our Sabbath-school last summer, and one took the prize for attendance and diligence.—Yours, W. McK.

OAKVILLE.

DEAR MR. BRACE,—I drop you a few lines to say that W—— was much pleased with your kind remembrance of him. H—— is a good, steady boy, and is a useful lad about the farm. He is not very strong, but is always civil. We like him, too, because we have always found him honest and truthful, and we have never yet heard an ill word fall from his lips. This is important, as our little Dewart and Annie are much in his company, and we feel confident always that they learn no harm from him.

He is very kind to the children, too, so that we can leave them in his charge, and feel no uneasiness about them.—I am, yours truly,

R. A. FLEMING.

AURORA.

SIR,—I would like to know if you have a boy about 14 or 16 years of age, as quite a number of my neighbours have got them from you, and they like them splendid?—Yours, WM. A. B.

Mr. D. S. says: "I have seen Mr. McM.'s boys, and like them and their behaviour very well. I should like one like them, or, brother and sister, or two brothers.

Mr. W. writes: "Your boy P—— is doing well. I leave the place at 12 o'clock every day, and he has charge of the whole affair—horses, fowls, land, and everything. I tell him my interests are his, and he feels the responsibility of keeping the place right. I want to keep him another year."

I attach great importance to our boys having a comfortable outfit, and their whole kit betokening that they come from friends who carefully consider their comfort, and will not cease to watch over their future welfare. I am convinced that more depends upon this than is generally supposed. We cannot send out boys in this style, and pay all expenses connected with their emigration, from the time they leave our doors till they reach their new homes, under £10 a head. A boy thus transplanted into an industrious, God-fearing family in Canada, will never again need a farthing of English money to be spent upon him.

IN MEMORIAM.

SEVERAL friends have given £10 in previous years to send out one boy—some as a special protégé, with whom they have corresponded, and whose future they have watched with prayerful interest—others "In Memoriam" of some John, Richard, or Alfred, dear to their heart, whose memory has been cherished in the living monument of one of "Nobody's Boys," provided with a bright start in life.

Will you, dear reader, at least send some little token of your loving interest in these dear boys, that they may leave the "Old Country" with memories of kindness shown them for Christ's sake, which will for ever endear to them the land of their birth?

Ever yours indebtedly,

J. W. C. Fegan

Respecting the New
List of Proper Names,

The Baptist Magazine says:—

"A valuable Appendix: in which we have, first, a list of all the Proper Names of the Bible in Alphabetical Order, with their meanings in the original; and, second, mention of the various places in which they are found. This Appendix has been supplied by Rev. ALFRED JONES, M.A., and is scholarly and trustworthy. It will greatly increase the usefulness of this valuable work."

Respecting Morgan & Scott's
Cheap Portable Edition,

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON says:—

"Messrs. Morgan and Scott are resolved not to be beaten, and so they have produced a portable edition of 'Cruden's Concordance' for 3s. 6d. It is the same as usual, with the Apocrypha left out. This omission we look upon as a gain rather than a loss. Nobody should now be without a Concordance: which is to the Bible-reader what a foot-rule is to a carpenter, or a chain to a land-surveyor. For the sake of all the poor parsons in the three kingdoms, we feel grateful to Messrs. Morgan and Scott. How they can issue such a book at such a price we cannot tell."

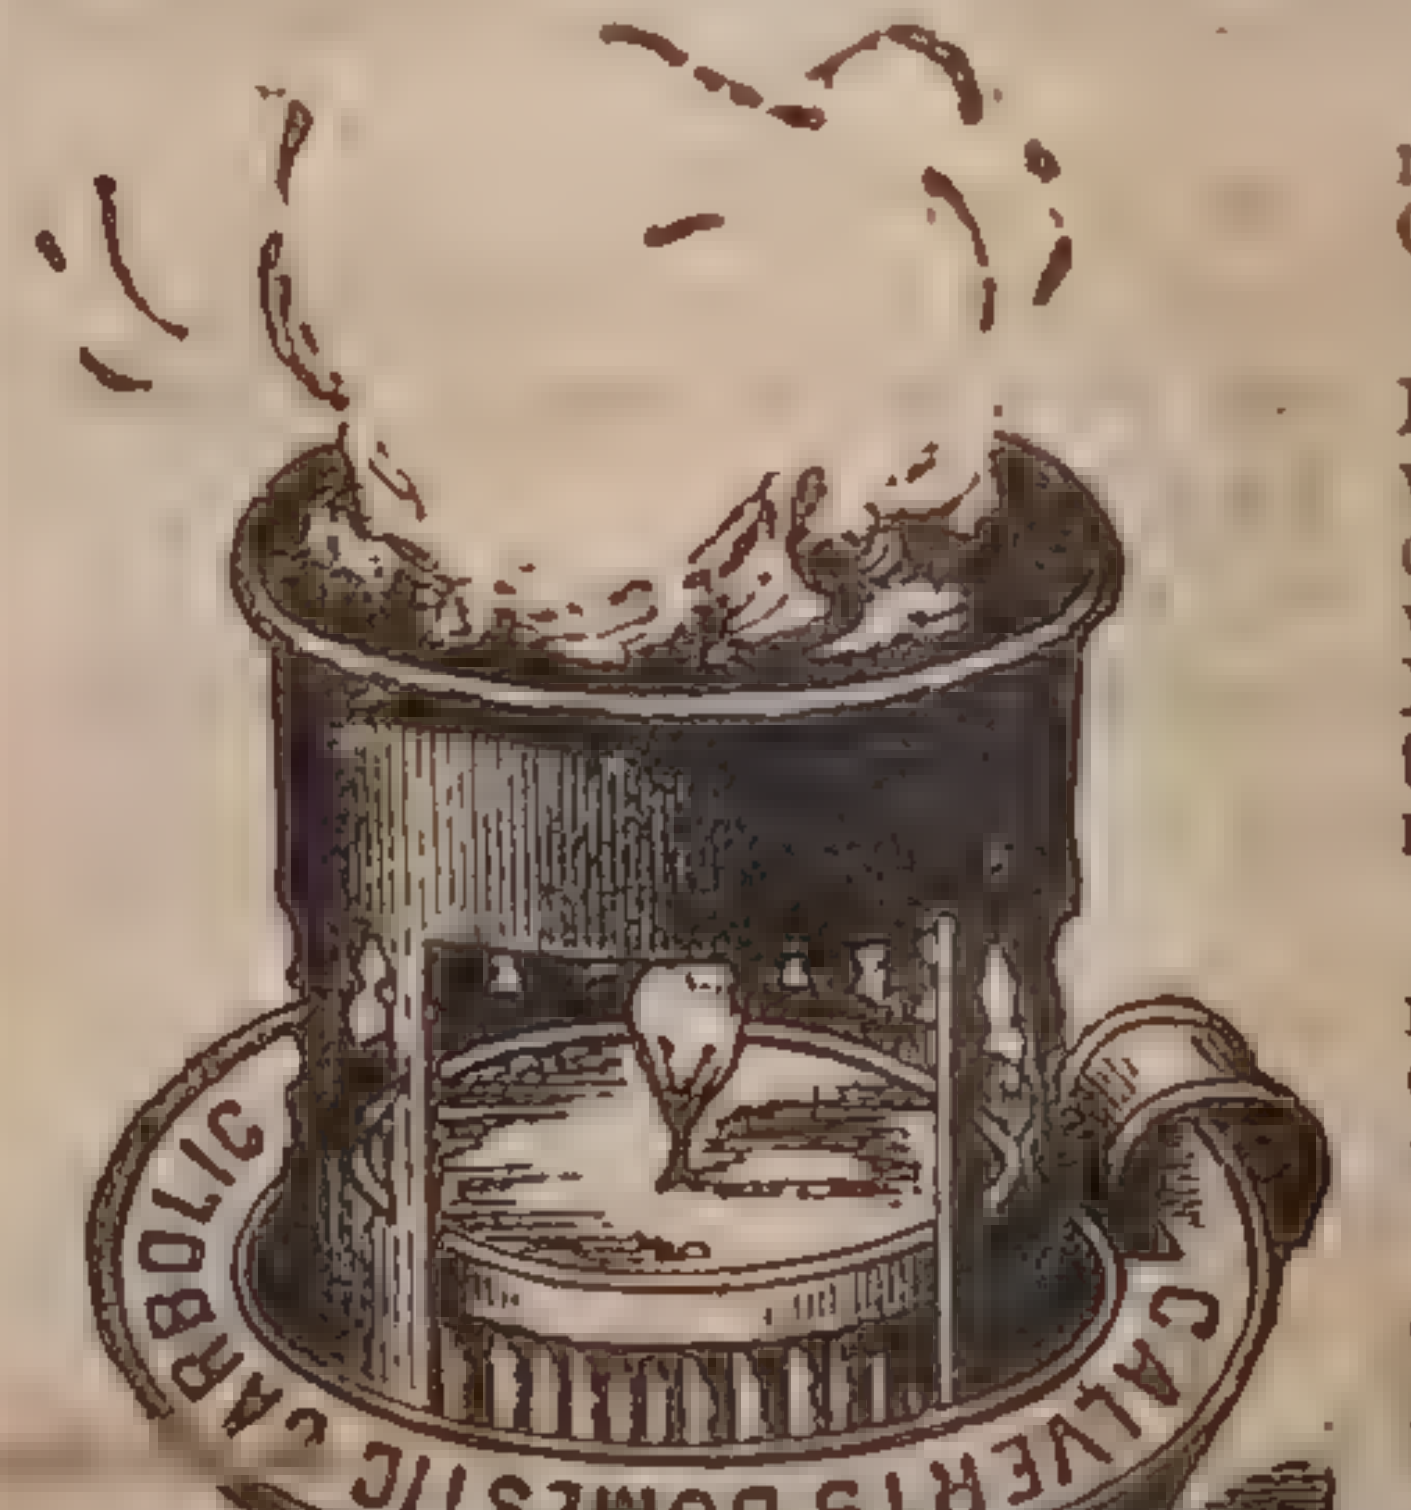
CALVERT'S DOMESTIC Carbolic Vaporiser

(REGISTERED).

For Purification of the Air in Sick Rooms, Removal of Mosquitoes and other Insects, and General Use where an Aerial Disinfecting and Purifying Agent is required.

The valuable effects of CARBOLIC VAPOUR in cases of Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Phthisis, and most infectious diseases, are now fully established. It also acts beneficially in preventing attendants, nurses, &c., from infection.



Professor Tyndall has said:—"After making numerous experiments on germs floating in the air, Carbolic Acid is a deadly foe to disease germs."

For phthisis and chronic bronchitis, Dr. Robert Munro, of Glasgow, reports a series of cases in which very decided and favourable results have followed frequent inhalations of the vapour of Carbolic Acid and water. Dr. G. Hunter Mackenzie and Dr. Thomas Inman have also separately vouched for the utility of the same treatment as the result of numerous experiments.

Medical Press, Dec. 24, 1879, reports cases where marked benefit has been obtained by inhalation of Carbolic Acid Vapour, and it is stated that "it is in no way injurious to healthy persons."

Dr. T. Gurney (Senior Physician to the London City Dispensary) and other reliable authorities vouch for the utility of Diluted Carbolic Acid Vapour in diphtheria, consequently it may safely be assumed that bronchitis and other throat or lung ailments will benefit by its application.

It can be used either with Calvert's 50 per cent. Carbolic Powder, in 6d., 1s., and 4s. boxes (specially prepared for the purpose, and without risk in using), or Calvert's No. 4 or No. 5 Carbolic Acid.

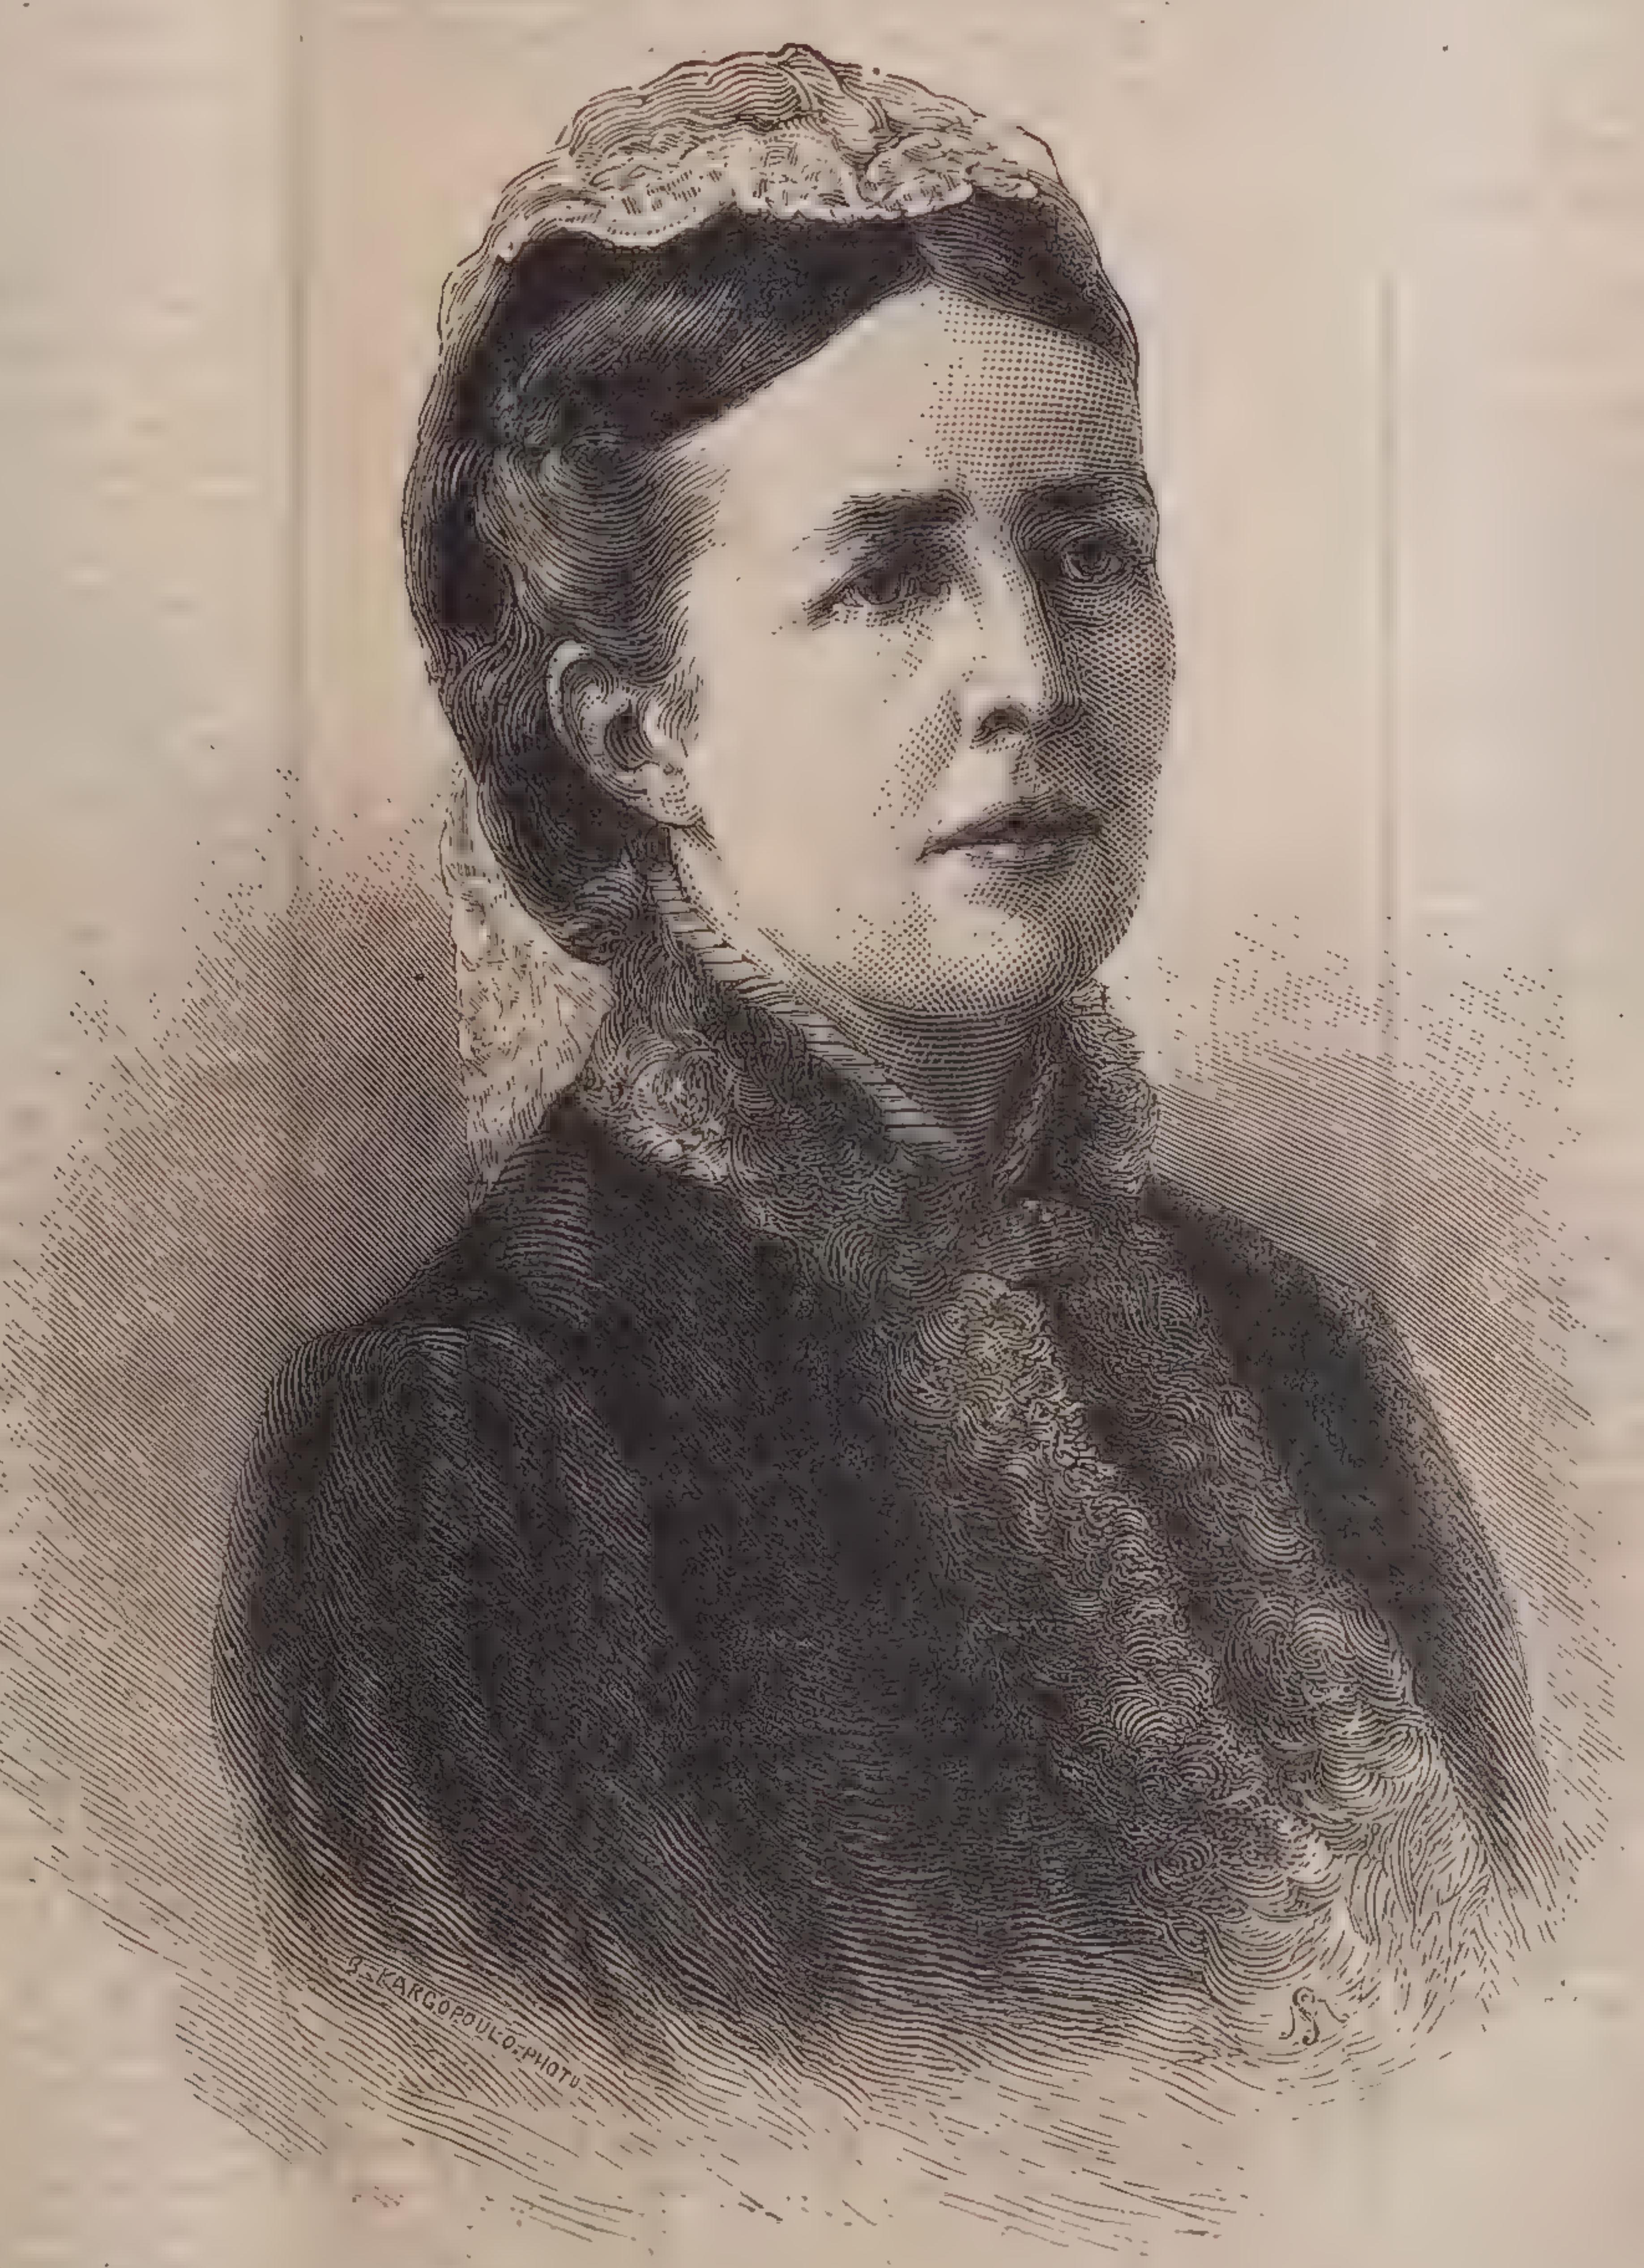
SOPHIE, Queen of Sweden and Norway.

THE great blessings resulting from the life and work of Christian women—even when they are in the humblest station of life—can hardly be exaggerated. In a high position, however, this influence is more significant. The religious revival that has taken place in Sweden and Norway during the last twenty years has doubtless helped largely to mould the character and influence of the illustrious lady whose portrait we have to-day the pleasure of presenting to our readers.



Her Majesty the Queen of Sweden and Norway, born in 1836, was the youngest child of William, Duke of Nassau, and Princess Pauline of Wurtemberg. The Duke died August 20, 1839, when the Princess was quite an infant; therefore the responsibility of her education entirely devolved upon her mother, the Duchess Pauline, who, after the death of her husband, took up her abode in Wiesbaden. This responsibility was discharged with great care and judgment. Princess Sophie had the best masters, and, being gifted with much natural ability and an ardent thirst for knowledge, she made great progress. Her musical talent, which was by no means insignificant, was developed under the celebrated Rubenstein.

During her residence at Wiesbaden the Princess was brought in contact with several English families, and from some of these she received religious impressions which bore fruit in later years. At this period she became much interested in the literature and life of the English people.

The year 1854 saw the Princess staying with her aunt, the Grand Duchess Hélène, in St. Petersburg, herself a most accomplished lady, and her house the resort of savants, politicians, and professors of arts in St. Petersburg. Two years after she sustained a great loss in the death of her beloved mother, when she found a home with her half-sister, Princess Marie, eleven years her senior, who, in the year 1842, had married Prince Hermann, of Wied. The Princess had previously spent many happy holidays with her sister at Castle Mont Repos, a very strong attachment existing between them, so that the Castle was a real home to the young orphan.

During her stay at Mont Repos the hereditary Prince Oscar of Sweden and Norway came on a visit to the Prince and Princess of Wied, and he soon became attached to Princess Sophie. Prince Oscar, who had great personal charms—tall and of dignified bearing, gifted, extremely fond of poetry and music—was not likely to prove an unsuccessful suitor. The tastes of Princess Sophie and Prince Oscar were so much in accord that an engagement was entered into during his first visit. After a brief betrothal the marriage took place at Bieberich, June 7, 1857, and soon afterwards the royal couple left for Sweden. A very enthusiastic reception awaited their Royal Highnesses on their arrival at Stockholm.

The alliance of these illustrious personages proved a very happy one. Strong affection and perfect harmony of taste and pursuits were the links that bound them together. Princess Sophie's education and experience had admirably fitted her as a companion in Prince Oscar's literary researches and musical studies. The evening pursuits and pastimes of the Prince and Princess were of a very simple and homely character, and show a great similarity to that recorded of Queen Victoria and her Royal Consort.

The happiness of the royal couple was increased by the birth of the present Crown Prince in 1858. The following year Prince Oscar was born, who, with his mother, is now in England; in 1861 Prince Carl, and in 1865 Prince Eugen. Her Royal Highness has always taken a deep personal interest in the education of her children. At an early age they were sent to Pastor Beskow's public school, their intercourse with boys of their own age giving them an independence of spirit and a knowledge of human nature which they could not have acquired had they been educated privately at the palace. The Princess watched with interest the progress of her children, often visiting their school as well as the Royal Training School for Teachers at Stockholm. God's blessing has rested on her efforts in the education of her sons. The unanimous opinion throughout Sweden is that the Queen, in this respect, has been an example to all the mothers of the country.

In 1866, the Princess showing signs of delicate health, her Royal Consort provided for her a beautiful retreat on the coast of Southern Sweden, which he named after her "Sophiero" (Sophie's Rest). In later years she has often been confined to her couch, but during these days of enforced rest she has found strength and consolation in the study of God's Word. She also gained spiritual help from Pastor Gustaf Beskow, through whose efforts a large Lutheran Free Church in Stockholm was built. Pastor Beskow was in training to enter as an officer in the Navy, but on his conversion decided to study for the ministry, went to the university at Upsala, and, on the completion of his theological course, was ordained priest in the Lutheran Church.

King Carl of Sweden and Norway died on September 18, 1872, leaving issue Princess Louisa; but, as, according to Swedish law, a woman cannot ascend the throne, his brother, Prince Oscar, became king. The King and Queen were crowned on May 12, 1873, and the bright expectations then raised have been fully realised. King Oscar at his accession to the throne took as his motto "The welfare of the sister countries," and, though strictly constitutional, he has always used his great learning, ability, and energy in promoting the happiness of his Scandinavian subjects. The Queen has given her Royal Consort her best support in this matter; but she has always considered it to be her first duty to "look well to the ways of her household."

The splendour of the throne did not diminish Her Majesty's religious interest. She felt herself more and more anxious to submit herself entirely to the King of kings. But it was during the Queen's stay at Heidelberg in 1876 she found "the peace of God which passeth all understanding." It is stated that a German clergyman, Pastor Frommel, was, under God, the instrument of her gaining that great blessing.

In the beginning of 1881 Queen Sophie came for the first time to England. Her Majesty took a lively interest in religious work in the Metropolis, and experienced much blessing in listening to such preachers as Rev. W. Hay Aitken and Rev. Neville Sherbrooke. She found a pleasant resort in Bournemouth, where she took up her residence, and spent there a very happy time. Her bodily strength was improved, and she enjoyed the company of Christian people there, especially the late Lord Chancellor and Countess Cairns. The Y.M.C.A. in Bournemouth has a remembrance of the Queen's first visit in a text painted by Her Majesty's own hand, "I live, ye shall live also."

The Queen was suddenly recalled from Bournemouth to the sick-bed of King Oscar at Stockholm, but she had the happiness of seeing him recover, whereupon the King followed his Royal Consort to England. They resided at Bournemouth for some time, and returned with improved health to Stockholm.

Court life in Sweden is in many respects a model one. A distinguished Englishman who has visited many capitals in Europe, and sojourned a winter in Stockholm, has said, "There is at present no country in the world which has got such a Queen and such Princesses as Sweden now has." Everyone who knows anything about the Royal Family, its life and active benevolence, must with thankfulness to God, say the same. The King's sister, Princess Eugénie, is known as a very earnest Christian, and it is related how some years ago she sold her jewels to raise money for erecting a much-needed hospital.

Whilst the Sabbath is not observed in the same way in Sweden as in England; the Royal Family never give dinner-parties on that day, and are careful to allow their servants as much rest as possible.

The Queen generally rises at an early hour, and very often spends a great part of the forenoon in seeing persons of different classes who come to her for counsel and help. She is always ready to support and encourage those who are engaged in philanthropic work in Sweden. Her Majesty takes a great interest in the political affairs of the country, and reads daily several Swedish and Norwegian newspapers of different shades of opinion. As already mentioned, she takes a great interest in English literature, more especially that of a religious character. The works of Anna Shipton she values much, and has received great blessing through them.

Since 1878 Queen Sophie has been a constant reader of this paper, and is very familiar with Christian work in England, the Conferences at Mildmay, and the progress of missionary enterprise. Her Majesty has taken a deep interest in missions to seamen. Miss Child's "Welcome Home" for sailors in Ratcliff-highway has twice had the honour of receiving a visit from her. She is also patroness of the Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home conducted by Miss Agnes Hedenström.

Last year was one of great trial for Queen Sophie. Her health, which for years has been delicate, became much worse. She suffered greatly from severe seizures of cramp, and recovery did not seem possible. But she was still kept in the most peaceful frame of mind, the result of her deep trust in her God and Saviour. According to the advice of the Court physicians she decided in the beginning of April to undergo a very dangerous operation. It was a question of life or death. Deep sympathy was felt all over the country. Whilst the anxiety and sorrow felt by the Royal household was beyond description, Queen Sophie herself remained calm and hopeful. The operation was performed by Her Majesty's physician, Dr. Salin, and, happily, was most successful. A special service of prayer was held at the time in the Royal Chapel, conducted by Pastor Wallin, Court chaplain, and was attended by the foreign ministers resident at Stockholm, and other Court representatives, the chapel being crowded. Many informal gatherings of Christians were held throughout the land to entreat the Divine Physician on behalf of their Queen. These supplications ascended to Him who hears and answers prayer, and He turned their united prayers into universal praise.

Her Majesty, however, made but slow recovery, which was a trial to her faith, but she bore it with great patience and fortitude. Remembering the benefit she had derived from her former stay in England, it was decided at the end of last year that she should come to Bournemouth for a time. She came to England on February 10, and stayed in London for a few days, most of her time being occupied in seeing religious and philanthropic work. She also paid a visit to Regent's-park Chapel, to hear Rev. F. B. Meyer. At Bournemouth her face has become familiar at meetings held at the Shaftesbury Hall, and in connection with other good works. In May next the King purposes coming to Bournemouth, after which time the Queen will return to her native land. We trust that the visit to our Southern shores may prove highly beneficial to Her Majesty in the renewing of her health.

HOMES FOR LITTLE BOYS.

The twenty-fourth anniversary dinner in aid of the funds of these Homes took place on Saturday evening last, at the Hôtel Métropole.—Mr. W. H. Willans, the treasurer of the Institution, presided, and amongst the numerous company present were Lord Kinnaird, Sir T. Chambers (Recorder of London), Mr. W. A. M'Arthur, M.P., Major-General Sir P. Lumsden, Mr. Alderman Savory, Mr. R. T. Turnbull, vice-president, and Dr. Donald Fraser. The chairman said that since the Institution was established twenty-four years ago, more than 1000 boys had passed through them. They were all taught trades, and were not sent out without the directors knowing what became of them. They had the present addresses of 460 of them.—Mr. Joseph Weatherley, a member of the committee, said they had now 500 boys under their care—320 at Farningham and 180 at Swanley. They had frequent visits from old boys, bringing with them testimonials from their employers of their efficiency, their honesty, and the way in which they were conducting themselves in their positions in life. We greatly regret that during the past year two of the Homes have been closed for lack of funds.

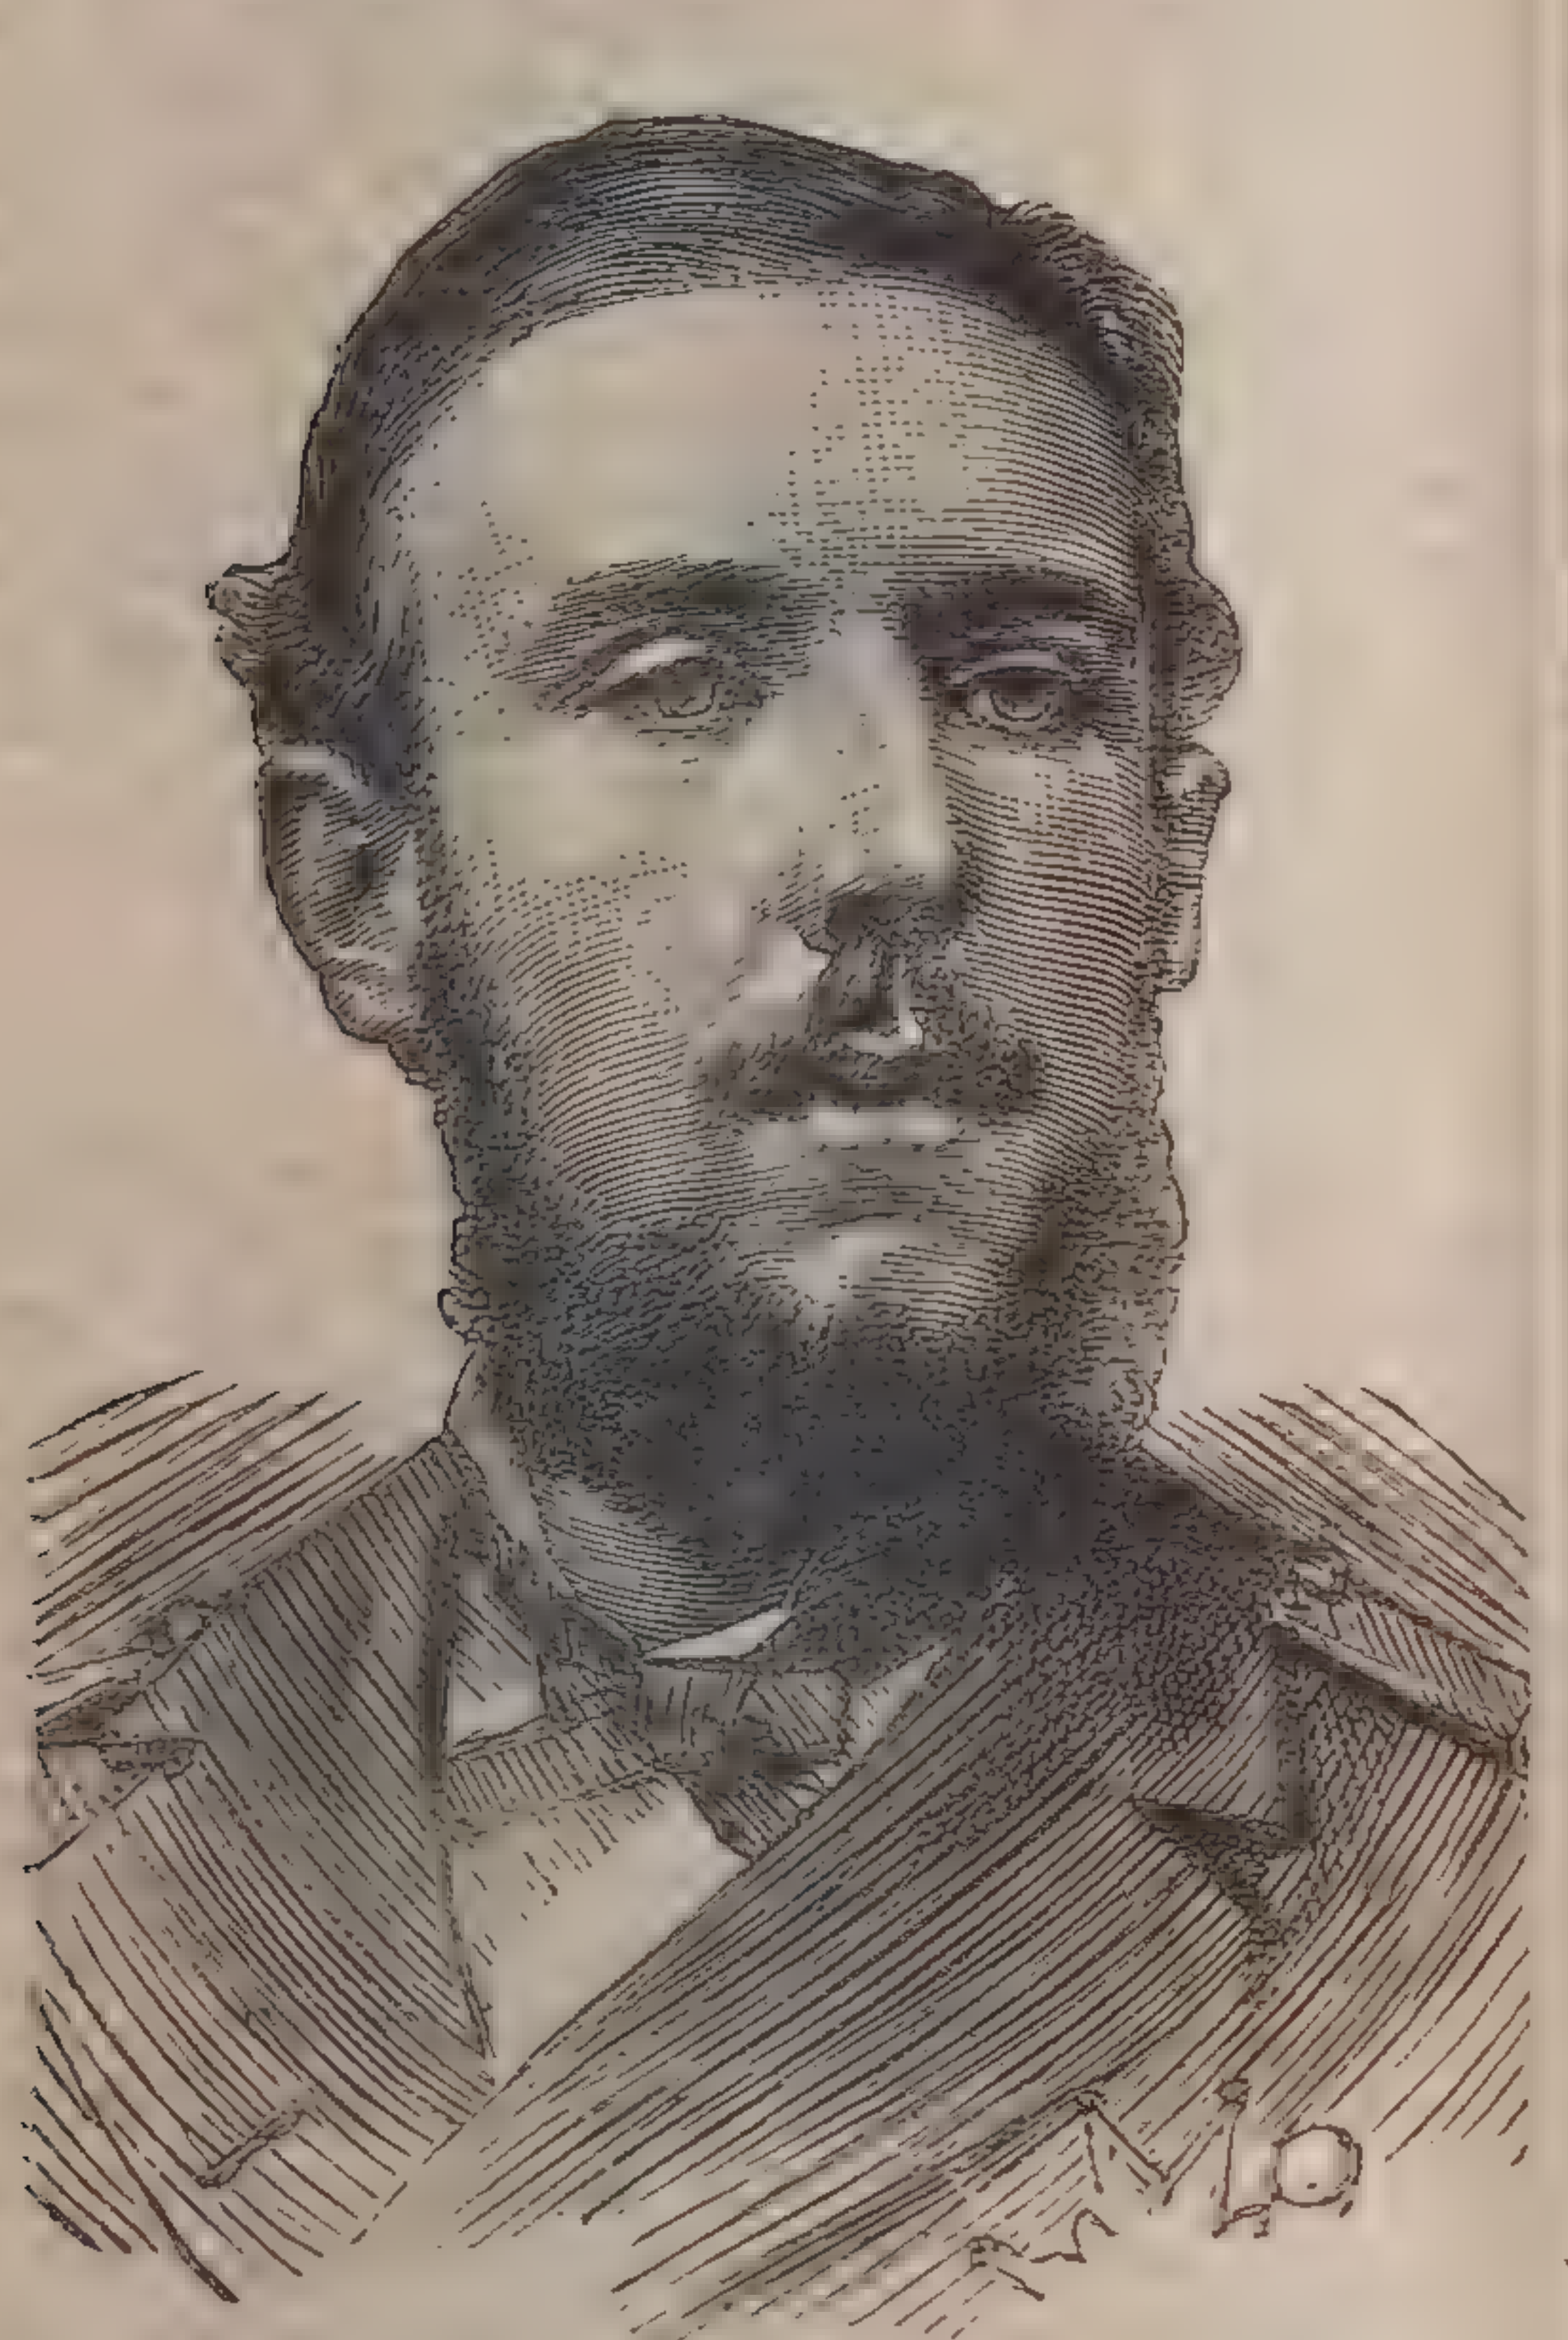
PARIS Y.M.C.A.—An important meeting of the clergy and ministers of the English-speaking congregations in Paris was held recently at the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, Rue Montmartre. Rev. T. Howard Gill presided. Mr. Skepper, president of the Association, and Mr. Long spoke of the remarkable development of the work of late, both in the French and the Anglo-American branches, and of the great interest which is being manifested at the present time by the pastors and members of the French churches, and by friends in America. The Association had resolved to erect a large permanent building for its future work. This project was advocated in addresses by Rev. R. W. McAll, Rev. Dr. Morgan, and Rev. Patrick Beaton.

BLISSETT-STREET MISSION, GREENWICH, with something of its present development, has been in operation for about twelve years. Gospel meetings are held in the mission-hall and in the open air, and in connection with it are a Sunday-school, Temperance Society, Band of Hope, and provident societies for men, women, and children. Until lately it has been attached to Greenwich Presbyterian Church, which, on account of responsibility for another somewhat similar work, now withdraws from this Mission. The workers, who belong to various denominations, believing that their operations should go on, remain at their posts. They can, with their friends, hope to contribute about £20 annually, but, as the expenses must reach above £80 each year, they are constrained to ask for the sympathy of fellow-Christians. Further information will be gladly given by Mr. Thomas Watson, 89, Lewisham High-road, New-cross, London, S.E.

Prince and Princess Bernadotte.

The royal marriage at St. Stephen's Church, Bournemouth, was, in several respects, remarkable. Probably it was the first time that a wedding ceremony has been conducted, according to the ritual of the Swedish Lutheran Church, in a place of worship belonging to the Church of England.

The romantic story connected with this union has given it an immense interest, but for us this interest is intensified by the knowledge of the fact that H.R.H. Prince Oscar of Sweden and Norway and Miss Ebba Munck (now Prince and Princess Bernadotte), are both devoted Christians. Amongst others, we have been assured of this by the Court chaplain, Pastor Beskow, whose important work in Sweden we have referred to in another article.



The ceremony in the church was very simple. After the bride and bridegroom had taken their places at the chancel steps, Psalm cxxi., "I will lift up my eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my held," &c., was sung in Swedish verse. Before Pastor Beskow conducted the marriage service according to the Lutheran rites, he gave the following address, of which we give a translation :—

"'If we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin' (1 John i. 7).

"In these words we have an exhortation to walk in the light—in the everlasting light; though we are here below in a dark world, we can walk in the light, and then we shall have fellowship with God, who is Himself the everlasting Light, and with the innumerable company of angels which surrounds Him. We then have communion with our heavenly Father, with the King of kings, and are led by the Holy Spirit through the whole of our life's journey. If one should ask us how we members of a fallen race can have communion with the heavenly world, the answer lies in the last part of our text: 'The blood of hisSon Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." Through the Atonement, the way is open to the home of everlasting light.

"May that light be shed upon this wedded pair, who have now come before this altar! The light of truth has shone upon your ways till now; from henceforth you will tread a different path from heretofore as you walk together hand in hand. We are not told that the light of earthly happiness shall cast its mild sunshine upon your life's course. Here light and darkness interchange; but if you walk in the light of which our text speaks, you will, when your wanderings on earth are over, enter into the kingdom of everlasting light.

"Such unions as these are but for a time, they must all be cut asunder by the hand of death; but when the covenant, which to-day is to be sealed, is dissolved by death, may both husband and wife meet one another at the heavenly bridal-feast, where they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but the Church and her great Chief Shepherd celebrate their eternal union.

"These heart-felt desires we here assembled express to you, and they are re-echoed by the sister-people on both sides of the Koelen. From our snow-covered mountains and valleys a thousand voices greet you, and I would remind you of this before I seal with the Church's blessing the union in which your hearts are already knit."

At the end of the service the Swedish hymn, "Jesus är min vän den bäste," was sung, of which we hope a translation will be acceptable to our readers :—

Best of Friends is Jesus to me,
No one can with Him compare;
Shall I with the thoughtless worldling
E'er forget or leave Him here?
There is none can separate me
From the One who holds me dear;
One our will upon life's journey,
Till we endless glory share.

He in death for me has suffered,
Nothing can condemn me more;
He has prayed his Father for me,
And my life with Him is sure.
Who is there that can accuse me,
When Himself has chosen me?
Who can ever draw me from Him,
While He keeps me safe and free?

I am certain and assured
Neither life, nor death, nor pains;
Neither mighty powers, nor angels,
Things to come, nor what remains;
Neither height, nor depth can ever
Separate me from God's love—
Take my soul away from Jesus,
Till we meet in heaven above.

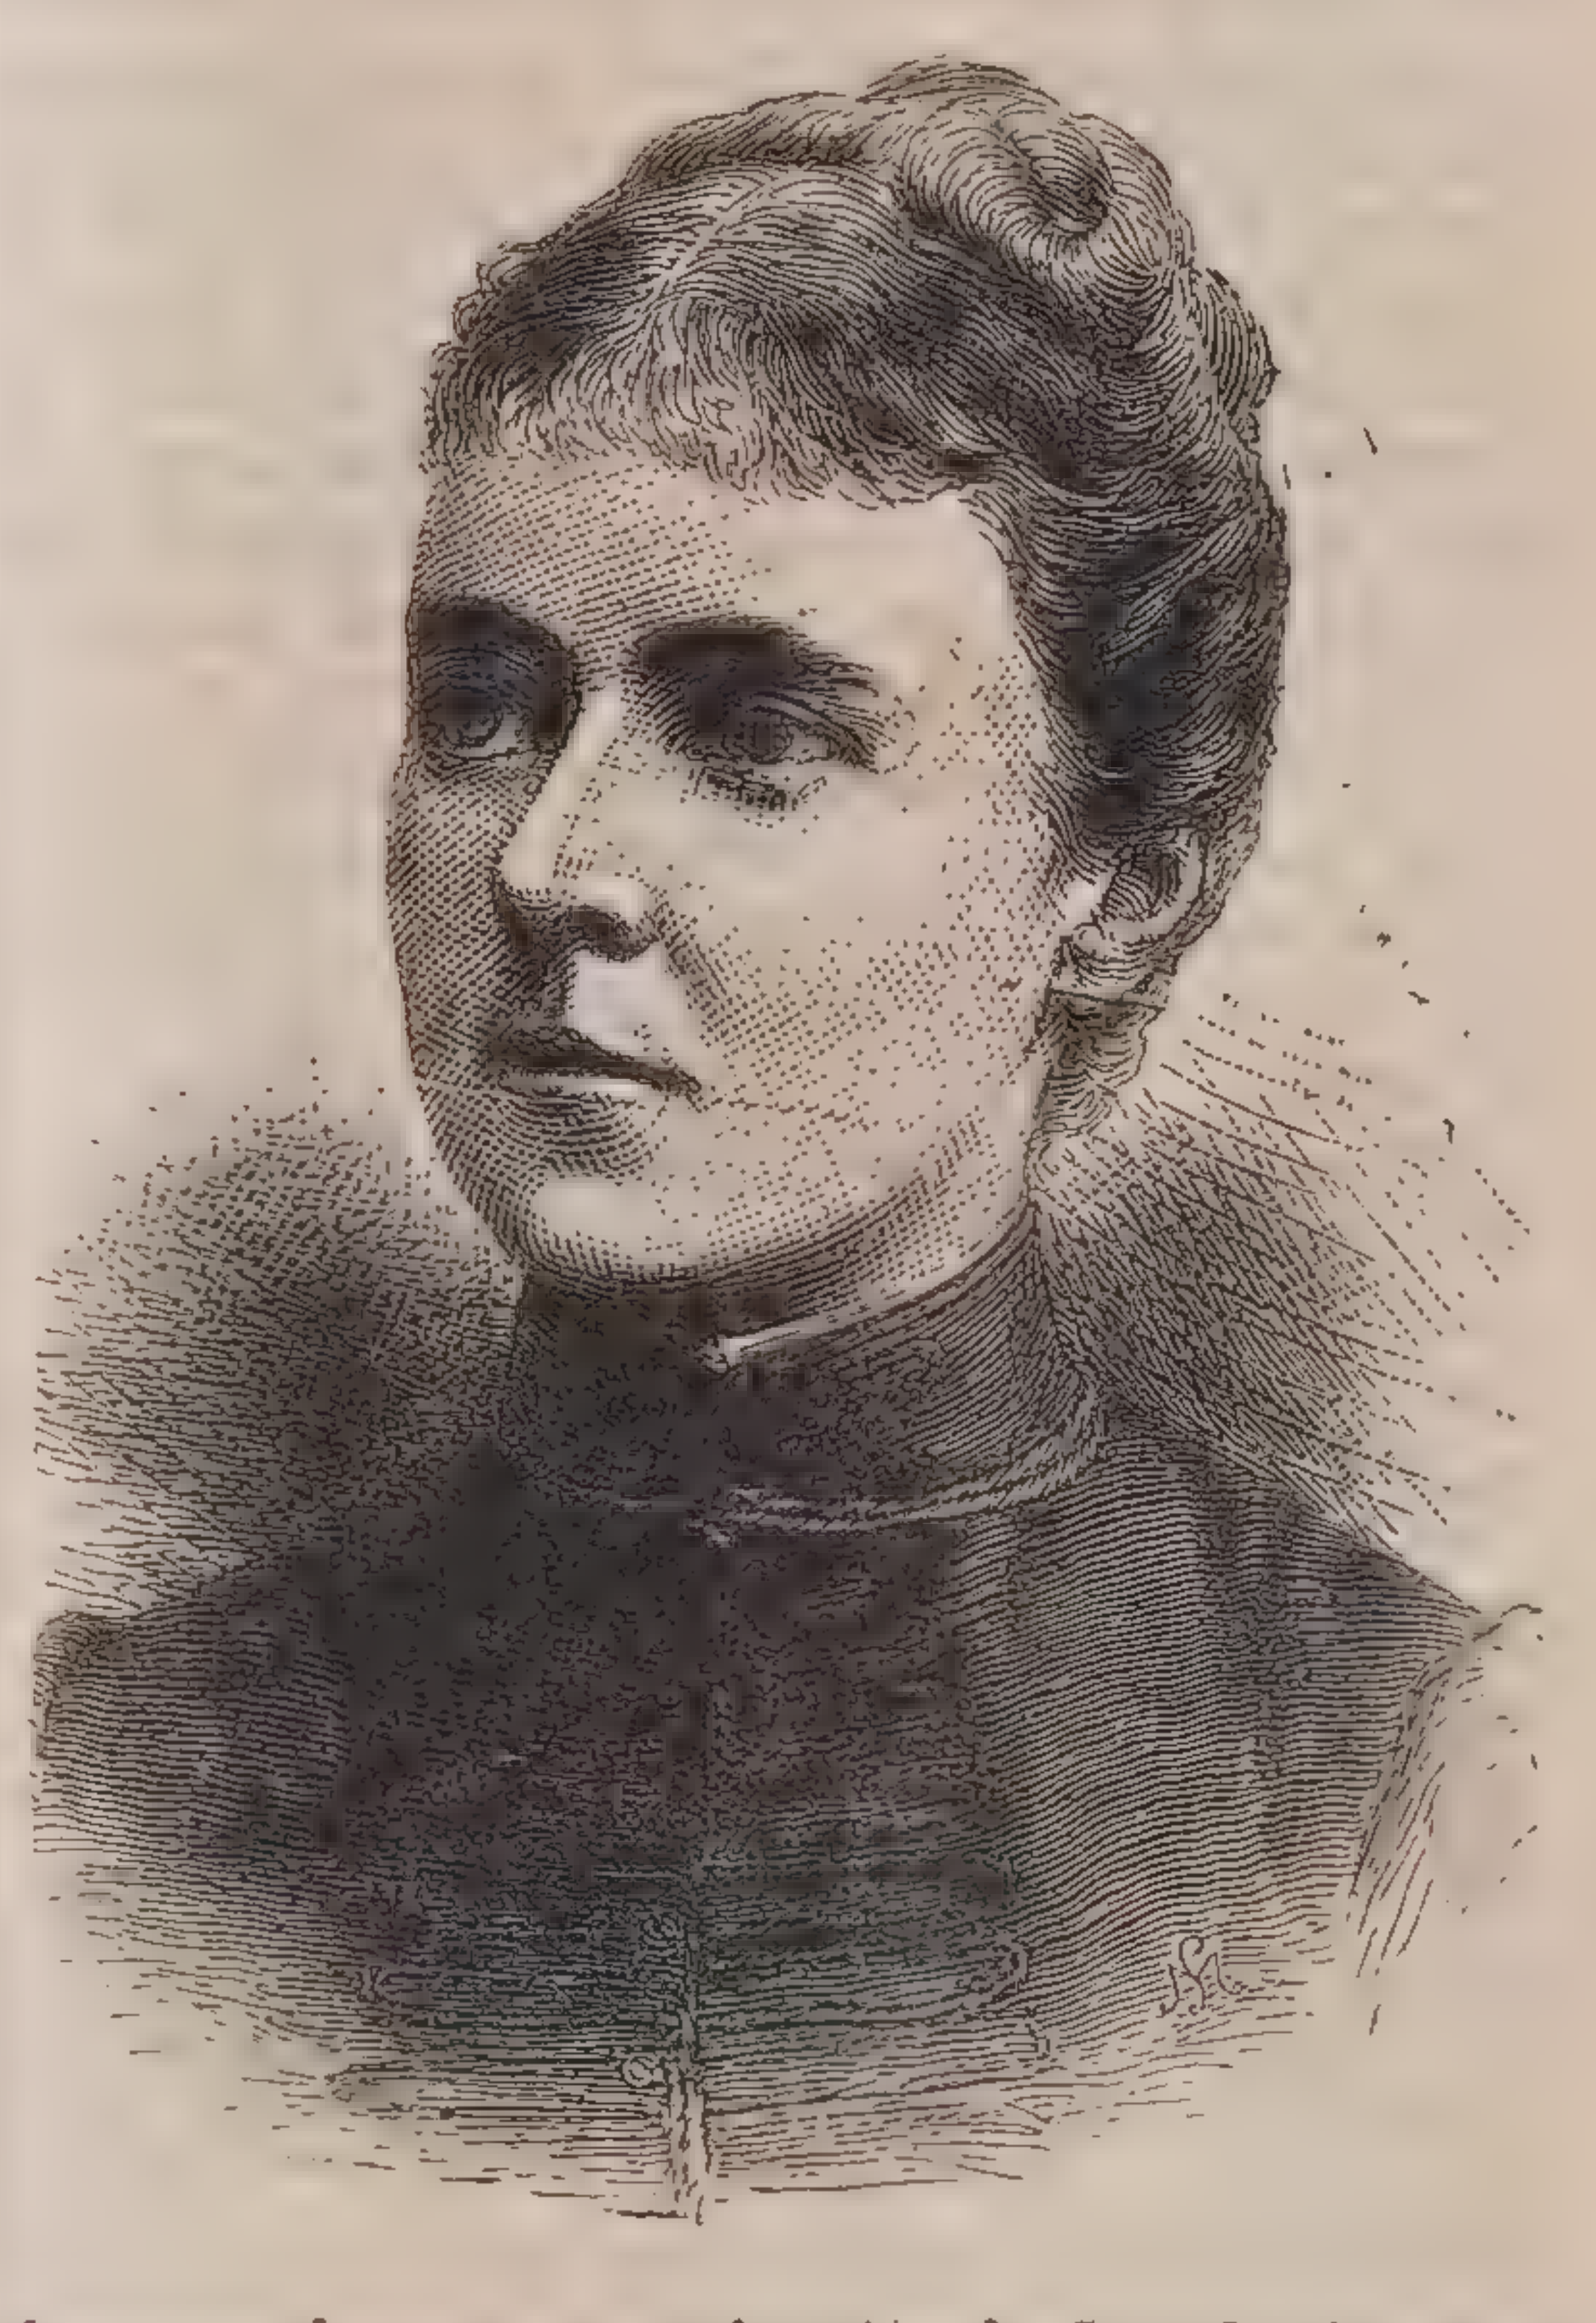
Prince Oscar Charles Augustus Bernadotte was born November 15, 1859. He is the second son of King Oscar and Queen Sophie of Sweden and Norway, and received at his birth the title of Duke of Gothland. As we have already stated in the sketch of Queen Sophie, the young prince received a very careful education. Prince Oscar attended Pastor Beskow's school at an early age, and was very much beloved by the teachers there, especially by the Pastor himself, who gave him divinity lessons. The Prince was the best pupil in the class in that subject, and showed, even as a boy, a lively interest in religious matters.

From Pastor Beskow's school, he went to the Royal School of Naval Cadets, and, after having served several years on board Swedish men-of-war, he passed a successful examination and entered as an officer in the Swedish navy. The Prince has always been a great lover of the sea, and spent his happiest hours on board ship. He has developed his great natural gifts by ardent study and by travelling a great deal both by land and water. As an officer on board the Swedish frigate Wanadis, Prince Oscar made a tour round the world in the years 1883—1884. The Prince returned in the winter to Sweden, and the sudden change from a warm to a cold climate proved very bad for his health. Following the advice of the physicians, the Prince went to Amsterdam to undergo "massage" treatment in Dr. Metzger's celebrated establishment there. The Crown Princess of Sweden and Norway, who was staying at Amsterdam at the same time, was attended by her charming maid of honour, Miss Ebba Munck. Prince Oscar soon became very much attached to the latter, and it is stated that it was their religious sympathy that brought them together.

Miss Munck's history is, in short, the following: After the death of her father, Colonel Carl Jacob Munck, of Fulkila (of an old noble family), Miss Munck became attached to the Swedish Court. Here one of the Crown Prince's equeries, a young and wealthy cavalry officer, soon made her an offer of marriage, and, after some consideration, she accepted him.

Shortly before the marriage was arranged to take place, Miss Munck, to her intense grief, found him unworthy of her affections, and the engagement was broken off. Miss Munck then gave up her position at the Court, and went over to England. During her visit to Countess Cairns, at Bournemouth, she came under Christian influence, and after a time Miss Munck had found in her God and Saviour a better friend than the one who had deserted her. When she returned to Sweden it was evident that a great change had taken place in her, and she had to suffer much because she refused to take part in worldly pleasures, &c. She became, however, again attached to the Swedish Court, and met, as we have already heard, Prince Oscar at Amsterdam.



The King as well as the Queen disapproved of the Prince's affection for her, and hoped that time would cool his feelings. As for Miss Munck, she considered it to be her duty to resign her position at the Court. Nevertheless she did not lose the favour of the Queen and the Crown Princess, who both entrusted her with several commissions concerning charitable work. The Queen became more and more interested in Miss Munck, whose high Christian character she had learnt to admire, and at last her approval of her son's choice was gained. The King's consent, however, was more difficult to obtain.

By marrying the daughter of a private gentleman, the Prince had to give up his privileges as a member of the royal family, his right to the throne and the annual allowance from the diet. Consequently, this marriage was a question which required His Majesty's greatest consideration. Owing to the entreaties of the Queen, the King yielded to his son's wish, and the betrothal took place at the Royal Castle at Stockholm. The day following, the Queen together with Prince Oscar and Miss Munck left Sweden for England.

During his stay in England, the Prince has taken a lively interest in philanthropic institutions, the Y.M.C.A. and other Christian works. We trust that this marriage will prove a great blessing, not only to the princely couple, but that the whole of Sweden will be benefited by their Christian example and life.

The Evangelical Alliance Conference

THE meetings arranged by the Evangelical Alliance, as a testimony on behalf of cardinal truths, have been attended by a large amount of success. The first one, on Wednesday morning, was unusually crowded and enthusiastic, largely owing to Mr. Spurgeon's presence and speech. Though the meetings could hardly be called representative gatherings, yet they have revealed a very strong feeling in many quarters, of sympathy with Mr. Spurgeon in his recent protests against what he happily designated Down-grade teaching, which is undoubtedly quite as prevalent as he said it is.

Exeter Hall is not the place to argue out contested points, but it is always the gauge of the sentiment of that great body of Christian people who are most deeply interested in missions, who give most liberally to religious objects, and who furnish some of the most devoted Christian workers of the age. And, from the way in which they cheered the successive points, it was clear that they were not inclined to compromise, but were true to their traditions. And, whilst the great body of Christian people are firm, there is every reason for hopefulness about the future. The leaders and teachers of the people are much more affected by the state of opinion in their congregations than they would care to admit.

The Alliance deserves hearty thanks for having brought forth such a body of testimony to foundation truth; and to the speakers for their timely and valuable testimonies.

Canon Girdlestone's remark that the true Vicar of Christ, and his true Interpreter, is the Holy Ghost, is worthy of remembrance. It not only disallows Popish claims, but shows that the true antithesis to the papal assumption of authority in the interpretation of Scripture is not the right of private judgment, but the revelation of the Holy Spirit to the individual soul. Canon Fleming also well said, and history has overwhelmingly proved it, that Christian union is not to be effected by creeds, or anything else but by the cementing, uniting power of the Holy Spirit.

Rev. Ebenezer Jenkins gave a noble and eloquent testimony to that Gospel of which Paul was not ashamed. By more than one speaker the wickedness of sin was dealt with, in contradiction of its palliative treatment by those who subordinate the Sovereignty to the Fatherhood of God. No truth is more fundamental than the inspiration and authority of Scripture, and its assertion by Dr. Angus was an able summary of unanswerable proofs. The treatment by Mr. Webb-Peploe, of the subject of Future Punishment, was calculated, on the one hand, to relieve the minds of many as to the salvation of infants and the judgment of the heathen; but, on the other, to show the certain and terrible retribution awaiting those who reject the Son of God their Saviour; who know the will of God and do it not.

It is interesting to notice the drawing together of many different sections of the one Church at this juncture. And it would be, indeed, a marvellous result of the present controversy, if men who have been divided on points of church order, but who are agreed in their main views of Christian truth, should be led to recognise and exemplify that real unity of which our Lord spoke. It may be that the hand of the Breaker is at work among us, destroying our little systems, with which we have been too content, and compelling us to seek out and prize that oneness of which the vine and its branches are the type. It would be a work worthy of the Spirit of God, in these last days, to disclose the thought of God Himself with respect to the unity of Christians; and to achieve it in living embodiment before the gaze of the world.

Notes and Comments.

☞ OUR next weekly issue will be an Extra Number (price 1½d.); and will contain a report of the addresses on Fundamental Truth given at the Evangelical Alliance meetings held this week.

The extended space devoted to our report of the Evangelical Alliance Testimonies compels us to hold over many articles.

Next week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Dr. Kalley, of Edinburgh.

When the Affirmation Bill was thrown out of the House of Commons five years ago the snake was only scotched, not killed. The Oaths Bill which has now been read a second time is but the re-appearance of the previous agitation in another form. Tear away the mask, and we find an Atheists' Relief Bill. The plea of "conscience" is entirely out of place in this connection. It is not a question of altering the form of the oath out of regard to the sincere scruples of God-fearing and law-abiding men, but of practically abolishing all oaths at the desire of a few to whom the fear of God and spiritual religion are meaningless terms. With the spirit of restlessness and aggressive impatience of restraint, of coarsely obtrusive infidelity and delicately veiled Agnosticism, busy all around us, this is no time for removing from our Law Courts that which constitutes a real, visible link between "religious" and "secular" affairs. If this Bill become law, a distinct forward step will have been taken along the treacherous path which leads to individual demoralisation and national decay.

The following conversation between Mr. Bradlaugh and the representative of a contemporary clearly shows that the present measure is but a step to still further and more drastic changes:—

> "After the Oaths Bill is passed, what will be your next point of attack? The Basphemy Laws, I suppose?"
> "We shall not rest content until we have established perfect equality before the law—in short, not until we have realised the ideal that is set forth in the programme of the National Secular Society, whose object is to agitate for the removal of all laws which impose any penalty or disability with regard to religious belief. Of course that goes very far, for it includes Disestablishment, and its realisation is incompatible with the compulsory teaching of any form of religious belief in national schools. It is for this the National Secular Society was formed, and with its attainment, its object of existence having been achieved, there would no longer be any reason for it to exist."

The italics are ours. We are glad to know what Mr. Bradlaugh is really aiming at. We trust that this bold assertion will open the eyes of those who have hitherto been blinded by the plausibility of the Oaths Bill. It will be a sorry day for us when the children of England are brought up without "any form of religious belief."

Our readers will learn with great sorrow that Miss Clara M. Lowe, who has been so long associated with Christian work in this country and India, is now quite blind. Many prayers will, we are sure, be offered that her declining days may be cheered with an especial sense of her Master's presence.

The rejoinder of Mr. Gooch (p. 8) to the letter of Mr. Pearce Clark must close that correspondence. The correctness of the view taken by each must be judged by the reader. But these letters, both by men sound in the faith, testify to the truth of what we have before said, that we are in danger of losing sight of the enemy in contention with one another.

What a testimony was furnished to the power of the Bible to sound the depths of human experience, and to cast the spell of its influence over human hearts, in the account of the last hours of the great German Kaiser. What other book could have so calmed and quieted a spirit on the brink of eternity? Well might Sir Walter Scott exclaim on his own death-bed: "Reach me the Bible, it is the only book for a dying hour." It is the guide of youth; the stay of mature years; the comfort of age and weakness; the torch for the dark valley. Happy is he who has his memory well stored with its helpful and comforting words, which ring as silver bells in the heart.

The recent debate in the House of Lords on the sale of intoxicating spirits to the native population of British and other Colonies, beyond forcibly recalling the attention of the Government to the question, cannot be said to have produced any satisfactory result. The Government, it appears, are waiting until they have received replies to certain circulars which have been sent round to the Colonies. Past experience does not justify the expectation of much practical good from this process. The difficulty, apparently, is to secure united action on the part of all the countries interested, and the refusal of the United States to join in an international agreement for the suppression of the traffic in West Africa is especially to be deplored. The single bright spot appears to be in Basutoland, where, according to the official report, "the drink traffic has ceased to exist." One thing only seems certain, viz., that unless some stringent measures are taken, and taken quickly, the native races will soon have disappeared under that "trinity of evil"—arms, gunpowder, and alcohol.

It is one thing to pass an Act of Parliament, another to ensure its being carried out. A recent incident at the Thames Police Court illustrates this, and shows how "vested interests" impede reform. The secretary of an organised trade society applied to the magistrate to grant a summons, as provided by statute, for the compulsory inspection of certain unsanitary dwellings, used as workrooms. He further stated that he had a list of two thousand of such places, known as "sweating dens." In answer to the magistrate's remark that it was the duty of the local authorities to take the matter up, the applicant is reported to have said:—

> The fact of the matter is that some of the members of the Vestry are really the owners of these dens, and that is why they will not take any notice.

It is high time that the primary responsibility for much preventable misery and sickness and over-crowding was laid at the right doors—viz., of those owners, whether corporate or private, who fail to recognise that property has its obligations and its duties no less than its rights.

At Lambeth Police-court the other day the owner of several houses, who knowingly allowed them to be used for immoral purposes, and in spite of the fact that some of his previous tenants had been convicted for such an offence, was sentenced to three months' hard labour without the option of a fine. A disgraceful state of things was shown by the evidence to exist in the neighbourhood in consequence of these places. The magistrate in sentencing the prisoner reminded him that he had power to give him three months' imprisonment for each house, and said that he was glad to find the authorities had reached such a man, who, doubtless, lived a very godly life at home, but had no compunction in coming to London to get his rent for these dens of infamy. These strictures were richly deserved, and it is earnestly hoped that the action of the overseers of St. Mary, Newington, in thus tracing out and prosecuting such an offender, and the well-merited punishment inflicted, will act alike as an example and a warning.

We are pained and shocked by the profanity of which The Pall Mall Gazette is guilty in turning the Word of God into burlesque. Some weeks ago one of the Irish prisoners was represented sans culottes, and a verse from the Revelation was prostituted as descriptive letter-press. Last week a coarse caricature of Mr. Chamberlain with Cabinet Ministers bowing down to him was entitled "Joseph's Dream." And words of Scripture, given by inspiration of God, were similarly outraged. Those who see in Joseph a type of the Son of God are inexpressibly pained to see words which they hold sacred thus abused. No Law and Liberty League, though all its intentions should be fulfilled, will undo the mischief done to men or expiate the sin perpetrated against God, by thus degrading words taken from his perfect Law of Liberty.

We have received from Rev. A. F. Buscarlet, of Lausanne, the translation of a letter written by Mons. Galliard, "one of the most esteemed and aged Christian men" in that city. The letter has reference to the recent report on "Mob Rule in Lausanne," and to subsequent notes, in which a correspondent stated that the "Free Churches" of Switzerland have sanctioned the attacks on the Salvation Army. Mons. Galliard says:—

> The Free Church (of the Canton de Vaud) vindicates for others, as well as for itself, religious liberty, and deplores any law passed by the civil power which is contrary to it. The Free Church looks upon such decisions as a violation of the Cantonal and Federal Constitution. Let me express the keen sorrow I have felt at seeing your anonymous correspondent casting an accusation, without any proof, in the face of a Christian church. We meet it with the most positive denial of its truthfulness.

At length there are signs that the discussions on the condition of the poor are about to bring forth fruit. Notice has been given of a Bill to be brought before Parliament "to facilitate the better housing of the working classes." The measure seems to be a somewhat comprehensive one, as it will give power to purchase land and lay it out to provide "baths, lodgings, washhouses, and halls," inside or outside the Metropolitan area. We hope no time will be lost in carrying the schemes into effect, should the measure pass, for the condition of things is becoming worse and worse day by day.

Some time ago we commented upon some terrible revelations as to the moral condition of street children in Newcastle. We are glad to observe that at the recent Assizes in Newcastle the foreman of the grand jury stated he was authorised to bring before the judge the frequent occurrence of assaults upon little children, to request his lordship to bring the matter before the Home Office, and to urge upon the executive the desirability of authorising the infliction of the punishment of flogging for such offences. We trust the matter will receive the careful consideration of the Government, for ordinary means seem not to have the desired effect of preventing crimes of this nature.

Commenting upon the evil results flowing from the publication in England of translations of impure French works of fiction, The British Weekly says:—

> No line of demarcation can be drawn which has not already been passed over, and from the Press, even from the religious Press, there has been practically no protest.

Generally speaking this may be correct, but our readers are aware we have very frequently called public attention to the matter in the strongest possible terms. It certainly seems to us that if the law cannot interfere to prevent the printing and dissemination of the pestiferous volumes, an enactment should be obtained to put an end to the shameful trade, by the side of which the traffic in indecent prints and photographs is respectable, and comparatively harmless.

In a paper in the current issue of Eastward Ho, the Earl of Meath says:—

> The law of elevenpence halfpenny is a law which is fatal to religion, and one which must crush out of the minds and souls of those who are subject to it all desire to cultivate a spiritual life. How can this be otherwise? He must be a truly good Christian whose temper will stand continuous work for sixteen or eighteen hours a day on starvation diet, for a wage which he is satisfied is no remuneration for his services. I wonder how many of us who have had the advantage of education and of spiritual training would come triumphantly out of some such ordeal as falls to the ordinary lot of thousands of our poorer countrymen and women? Think of the fatigued body, the weary brain, the disordered digestion, the absence of all spiritual life, example, or encouragement, the degrading surroundings; and then let each answer for himself my question in the affirmative if he dare. I for one unhesitatingly say, I dare not.

We commend the paper, from which these noble words are taken, to the thoughtful attention of our readers.

It is hard to please scientific dogmatism. There was a time when the Duke of Argyll was not only regarded as a great thinker, but a great scientist, and he was placed in high official positions in scientific associations. Now, because he contends in Good Words that a true principle of evolution involves that of creation, his science is disparaged. One writer designates him as having "evolution on the brain." There never was a more outrageous violation of the common sense of man than a system of development that excludes design. The transmutation of a caterpillar into a butterfly is certainly a creation, and we are glad that the Duke leads a reaction against a designless and Godless philosophy.

Spite of Freethinkers in Northampton it appears that during the last thirteen years four additional ecclesiastical parishes and churches have been formed there with their staffs of workers. Further church extension is contemplated. Very timely, however, was the advice of Bishop Magee—to begin, not with the building, but with the man. This is the true order, and applies to others besides Episcopalians: first, the loving spiritual man, then the people in a room, and last the church. A disastrous mistake has been made of late years by Christian givers, who have begun with the last first.

We may hope that the prominence given in the newspapers of Germany to the confession of Christ, and to the authority of Scripture, on the part of the late Emperor, is an evidence that the reign of scepticism is being weakened. And may not England learn a lesson? On the one hand, that assurances of Scripture give confidence in the supreme crisis of life; and on the other hand, that the fashion of ignoring in public notices the consolations of the Christian faith of those who in dying have made prominent mention of them, is a concession to infidelity, and to modern custom, which has nothing to justify it.

The future policy of Germany, and the direction that shall be given to European affairs, sway just now in great uncertainty. An Emperor is on the throne who is a friend of peace, and capable of giving a new impulse in favour of international conciliation; but he is, unhappily, an invalid, receives ambassadors in silence because of physical disease, and holds a most precarious life. It is at such a time as this that men are silently but powerfully called to turn their thoughts to One who does according to his will among the inhabitants of the earth. None can conceive what this unusual aspect of human affairs means. We have to look to Him who by unexpected events will hasten the coming of the kingdom that cannot be moved.

SANCTIMONIOUS SELFISHNESS.

As surely as darkness follows sunset will the alienation of the masses follow sanctimonious selfishness in the Church. If a Christian's motto is "Look out for number one," then let him look out for estrangement and coldness on the part of number two. The Church millionaire stands at exact antipodes to the Church millennial, and in proportion as the former flourishes, the latter will be hopelessly deferred. It is not an orthodox creed which repels the masses, but an orthodox greed. Let a Christian man stand forth conspicuously in any community, as honest as the law of Moses, and yet let it be seen that he is building up an immense fortune by grinding the faces of the poor and compelling them to turn the grindstone for him while he does it, and he will wean a whole generation from the Gospel. The reckless "I don't care for the Church," which is coming up in loudening chorus from the poorer classes, is but the echo of the stolid and selfish "I do care for myself and my own that we may live luxuriously and fare sumptuously," which is the undeniable expression of so many Christian lives.

We have no power to prevent men of the world from heaping up colossal fortunes if they wish to do so. But our Gospel plainly forbids Christians to do it. "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth," said Jesus to his disciples for all time—a text which requires no very skilful exegesis to explain; but which it would require a very ingenious exegesis to explain away.—Rev. Dr. A. J. Gordon.

ABRAHAM: GOD'S FRIEND.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

III.—"He Obeyed."

Ah! how much there is in those two words. Blessedness in heart, and home, and life; fulfilled promises; mighty opportunities of good lie along the path of obedience to the word and will of God. If Abraham had permanently refused obedience to the voice that summoned him to fare forth on his long and lonely pilgrimage, he would have sunk back into the obscurity of an unknown grave in the land of Ur, like many an Eastern sheikh before and since. So does the phosphorescent wave flash for a moment in the wake of the vessel ploughing her way by night through the southern seas; and then it is lost to sight for ever. But, thank God, Abraham obeyed, and in that act laid the foundation-stone of the noble structure of his life.

It may be that some shall read these words whose lives have been a disappointment, and a sad surprise: like some young fruit-tree, laden in spring with blossom, but which, in the golden autumn stands barren and alone, amid the abundant fruitage of the orchard. You have not done what you expected to do. You have not fulfilled the prognostications of your friends. You have failed to realise the early promise of your life. And may not the reason lie in this, that, away back in your life, there rang out a command which summoned you to an act of self-sacrifice from which you shrank, and that was the mistake of your life. The worm at the root of the gourd. The little rot within the timber. The false step, which deflected the life-course from the King's highway into a blind alley.

Would it not be well to ascertain if this be not so, and to hasten back to fulfil even now the long-delayed obedience, supposing it be possible. Oh, do not think that it is now too late to repair the error of the past; or that the Almighty God will now refuse, on account of your delay, that to which He once summoned you in the young, glad years, which have taken their flight for ever. "He is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in goodness and truth."

Abraham, as the story shows, at first met the call of God with a mingled and partial obedience; and then for long years neglected it entirely; but the door stood still open for him to enter, and that gracious hand still beckoned him; until he struck his tents, and started to cross the mighty desert with all that owned his sway. It was a partial failure, which is pregnant with invaluable lessons for ourselves.

(1) At first, then, Abraham's Obedience was only partial.—He took Terah with him; indeed, it is said that "Terah took Abram his son, and Lot the son of Haran, and Sarai his daughter-in-law; and they went forth with them from Ur of the Chaldees" (Gen. xi. 31). How Terah was induced to leave the land of his nativity, and the graves of his dead, where his son Haran slept, we cannot tell. Was Abraham his favourite son, from whom he could not part? Was he dissatisfied with his camping grounds? Or, had he been brought to desire an opportunity of renouncing his idols, and beginning a better life amid healthier surroundings? We do not know. This, at least, is clear, that he was not whole-hearted; nor were his motives unmixed; and his presence in the march had the disastrous effect of slackening Abraham's pace, and of interposing a parenthesis of years, in an obedience, which, at first, promised so well. Days which break in sunlight are not always bright throughout; clouds, born of earth, veil the sky for long hours; but presently the sun breaks out again, and, for the remaining hours of daylight, shines in a sky unflecked with cloud. It was so with Abraham.

The clan marched leisurely along the valley of the Euphrates, finding abundance of pasture in its broad alluvial plains, until at last Haran was reached; the point from which caravans for Canaan leave the Euphrates to strike off across the desert. There they halted, and there they stayed till Terah died. Was it that the old man was too weary for further journeyings? Did he like Haran too well to leave it? Did heart and flesh fail, as he looked out on that far expanse of level sand, behind which the sun set in lurid glory every night? In any case, he would go no further on the pilgrimage, and probably for as many as fifteen years, Abraham's obedience was stayed; and for that period there were no further commands, no additional promises, no hallowed communings between God and his child.

It becomes us to be very careful as to whom we take with us in our pilgrimage. We may make a fair start from our Ur, but if we take Terah with us, we shall not go far. Take care, young pilgrim to eternity, to whom you mate yourself in the marriage-bond. Beware, man of business, lest you find your Terah in the man with whom you are entering into partnership. Let us all beware of that fatal spirit of compromise, which tempts us to tarry where beloved ones bid us to stay. "Do not go to extremes," they cry; we are willing to accompany you on your pilgrimage, if you will only go as far as Haran! Why think of going further on a fool's errand, and whither you do not know." Ah! this is hard to bear, harder far than outward opposition. Weakness and infirmity appeal to our feelings against our better judgment. The plains of Capua do for the warriors what the arms of Rome have failed to accomplish. And, tempted by the bewitching allurements, which hold out to us their syren attractions, we imitate the sailors of Ulysses, and vow we will go no further in quest of our distant goal. It is a fatal mistake to take the old man with you. "Put off the old man, with his affections and lusts."

"When his father was dead, he removed him into this land." Death had to interpose to set him free from the deadly incubus, which held him fast. Terah must die, that Abraham might resume the forsaken path. This is the reason why your hopes have withered, your schemes have miscarried, your income has dwindled, your children have turned against you. All these things were hindering your true development, and, out of mercy to your best interests, God has been compelled to take the knife in hand, and set you at liberty. He loves us so much that He dares to bear the pain of inflicting pain. And thus Death opens the door to Life, and through the grave we pass into the glad world of Hope and Promise which lie upon its further side.

Glory to God, to God, he saith
Knowledge by suffering entereth,
And life is perfected through death.

(2) Abraham's Obedience was rendered possible by his Faith.—"So Abram departed, as the Lord had said unto him. And he took Sarai his wife, and Lot, his brother's son, and all their substance that they had gathered, and the souls that they had gotten in Haran, and they went forth." No easy matter that! It was bitter to leave the kinsfolk, that had gathered around him; for Nahor seems to have followed his old father and brother up the valley to their new settlement at Haran, and we find his family living there afterwards. There was no overcrowding in these ample pastures. And to crown the whole, the pilgrim actually did not know his destination, when he turned his back on the Euphrates, and his face towards the great desert. Do you not suppose that Nahor would make this the one subject of his attack?

"What do you want more, my brother, which you cannot have here?"

"I want nothing but to do the will of God, wherever it may lead me."

"Look at the dangers: you cannot cross the desert, or go into a new country without arousing the jealousy of some and the cupidity of others. You would be no match for a troop of robbers, or an army of freebooters."

"But He who bids me go must take all the responsibility of that upon Himself. He will care for us."

"Tell me, only, whither you are going, and where you propose to settle?"

"That is a question I cannot answer; for, indeed, you know as much about it as I do myself. But I am sure that if I take one day's march at a time, that will be made clear, and the next, and the next, until at last I am able to settle in the country which God has selected for me somewhere."

This surely was the spirit of many a conversation that must have taken place on the eve of that memorable departure. And the epithets so common to our words, "Enthusiast," "Fanatic," "Fool," would be freely passed from mouth to mouth. But Abraham would quietly answer:—"God has spoken, God has promised. God will do better for me than ever He has said." At night, as he walked to and fro beneath the stars, he may have sometimes been inclined to give up in despair; but then that sure promise came back again on his memory, and he braced himself to obey. "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed" (Heb. xi. 8). Whither he went, he knew not; it was enough for him to know that he went with God. He leant not so much upon the promise as upon the Promiser; he looked not on the difficulties of his lot, but on the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God; who had deigned to appoint his course, and would certainly vindicate Himself.

And so the caravan started forth. The camels, heavily laden, attended by their drivers. The vast flocks mingling their bleatings with their drovers' cries. The demonstrative sorrow of Eastern women mingling with the grave farewells of the men. The forebodings in many hearts of imminent danger and prospective disaster. Sarai may even have been broken down with bitter regrets. But Abraham faltered not. He staggered not through unbelief. He knew whom he had believed, and was "persuaded that He would keep that which he had committed to Him against that day." "He was fully persuaded that what God had promised, He was able also to perform."

Moreover, the sacred writer tells us that already some glimpses of the city which hath foundations, and of the better country, the heavenly, had loomed upon his vision; and that fair vision had loosened his hold upon much which otherwise would have fascinated and fastened him.

Ah, glorious faith! This is thy work, these are thy possibilities! Contentment to sail with sealed orders, because of unwavering confidence in the love and wisdom of the great commandment. Willinghood to arise up, leave all, and follow Christ, because of the glad assurance that earth's best cannot bear comparison with heaven's least.

(3) Abraham's Obedience was finally very complete.—"They went forth to go into the land of Canaan, and into the land of Canaan they came." For many days after leaving Haran, the eye would sweep a vast monotonous waste, broken by the scantiest vegetation; the camels treading the soft sand beneath their spreading, spongy feet; and the flocks finding but scanty nutriment on the coarse, sparse grass.

At one point only would the travellers arrest their course. In the oasis, where Damascus stands to-day, it stood then, furnishing a welcome resting-place to weary travellers over the waste. A village near Damascus is still called by the patriarch's name. And Josephus tells us that in his time a suburb of Damascus was called "the habitation of Abraham." And there is surely a trace of his slight sojourn there in the name of his favourite and most trusted servant, Eliezer of Damascus, of whom we shall read anon.

But Abraham would not stay here. The luxuriance and beauty of the place were very attractive. But he could not feel that it was God's choice for him. And, therefore, ere long he was again on the southern track, to reach Canaan as soon as he could. Our one aim in life must ever be to follow the will of God, and to walk in those ways which He has preordained for us to walk in. Many a Damascus oasis, where ice-cold waters descending from mountain ranges fill the fevered air with delicious coolness, and temper the scorching heat by abundant verdure, tempts us to tarry. Many a Peter, well-meaning but mistaken, lays his hand on us, saying, "This shall not be unto thee: spare thyself." Many a conspirator within the heart counsels a general mutiny against the lonely, desolate will. And it is well when the pilgrim of eternity refuses to stay short, in any particular, of perfect consecration and obedience to the extreme demands of God. When you go forth to go into the land of Canaan, do not rest until into the land of Canaan you come. Anything short of complete obedience nullifies all that has been done. The Lord Jesus must have all or none; and his demands must be fulfilled to the last iota. But they are not grievous.

What a glorious testimony was that which our Lord Jesus uttered when He said, "The Father hath not left Me alone; for I do always those things that please Him." Would that it might be true of each of us! Let us give, henceforth, Christ our prompt and unlimited obedience; sure that, even if He bids us ride into the valley of death, it is through no blunder or mistake, but out of some sheer necessity, which forbids Him to treat us otherwise, and which He will ere long satisfactorily explain.

Ours not to question why,
Ours not to make reply,
Ours but to do and die.

BILLINGSGATE CHRISTIAN MISSION.—At the March monthly meeting, which was largely attended by salesmen, clerks, and porters of the market, Mr. W. H. Williamson, the treasurer of the Mission, explained that it is the intention of the committee to erect, as soon as possible, a Mission House. The new building is to stand immediately in front of the market, and is to be thoroughly adapted to the special requirements of the Mission, the office of which is at 83, Lower Thames-street, E.C.

REV. F. B. MEYER, of Regent's Park Chapel has arranged to conduct a series of Bible-readings for young men at the City of London Young Men's Christian Association, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Friday evenings, commencing April 6, at eight o'clock. The subjects will be: "Joshua, the Warrior," and will be divided as follow: April 6, "Strong to Follow Fully"; April 13, "Through the Jordan of Death"; April 20, "Victory and Defeat;" April 27, "Portioning Out the Land." All young men will be heartily welcomed.

For the Young.

A WALK IN DELHI.

BY AUNT HELEN.

(A Letter to Katie her Niece in England.)

I should like to take you for a walk down the Chandui Chowk, the principal street of this interesting old city of Delhi. So shut your eyes, and imagine for once that you have skipped over six thousand miles of land and sea, and can see for yourself what I point out to you as we go along.

It is a fine broad street, with a raised pavement, or rather causeway, about fifteen feet wide down the centre. This pavement is edged with trees on each side, green and leafy, though it is winter time. The weather is cool and pleasant, something like a bright English day in the early spring. But we must keep our umbrellas up while walking in the sunshine, for it is curious what effect the direct rays of the Eastern sun have upon us English people. Even in the coolest part of the year it is unsafe to expose our heads or necks to it, though the natives sit and bask in the sun with very little clothes on, or none at all.

The end of Chandui Chowk at which we enter is just opposite the fort, and there on our right is a grove of trees, with a band of monkeys disporting themselves. They are very shy, and we cannot get near enough to see them very closely as they run from branch to branch. I am afraid it will be a long time before we get near enough to catch one. All the way along we shall see these dear little Indian squirrels, with their handsome brown striped backs and bushy grey tails. They are only about a quarter the size of our English squirrels, but have just the same cunning ways. Here is one running up this tree with a scrap of sugar cane in his mouth. See how he stops and nibbles it, holding it between his forefeet as an English squirrel would a nut. Where did he get the sugar cane? you ask. Do you see that man there with that bundle of long green rods over his shoulder? That is the sugar cane just as it is cut down in the fields where it grows. He has sold a stick to this man in front of us for a few pies. The purchaser is whittling and munching it as he goes, dropping many such scraps as the one Master Squirrel has possessed himself of.

Now you want to know what pies are. A pie is the very smallest coin. There are twelve pies to one anna. An anna is worth at present rather more than a penny. On the pavement in front of those shops on the other side is a man sitting with piles of copper money on the ground beside him. He has also piles of tiny shells. They are cowries, and are used instead of money by the poorest people. An anna is worth fifty or sixty cowries. He takes the cowries which the poor people earn by working in the fields, and gives them pice in exchange. There are no anna pieces. Quarter annas are most used, and are called pice. The smallest silver coin is two annas. Now that you know something about the money, you will be able to do your shopping to better advantage.

You think they are funny shops? So do I. They always put me in mind of the spacious china closets of our grandmothers' days. They are raised a little from the ground, and the floor does duty for counter, seat, and all. Here the baniya sits, with his goods conveniently arranged around him. The floor projects a little, and forms a sort of platform in front in many instances. All the shops are of this class, though the houses, of which they form the lower story, vary considerably. Here are some broken-down places falling to pieces with age, and the grass growing out of the roofs; and yonder are smart new blocks with brightly painted balconies rising tier above tier.

That large white stone building, with its pillared portico, at the beginning of the street, is the chapel belonging to the Baptist Mission, although no one would know it unless they were told. There is no writing of any sort to indicate that it is a building used for the worship of God. Notwithstanding, it was filled with natives on the morning of New Year's Day. Mr. Smith, who worked for so many years in Delhi, is back again in India, and he had the pleasure of baptizing thirteen converts.

CHRISTIAN POLICE ASSOCIATION.

The fifth anniversary of this excellent Association was celebrated on Tuesday, last week, at Exeter Hall, when over two thousand members of the police force and their wives and friends assembled. The several engagements of the day were entered into with much zest, and many of the men and their wives sat down to tea. There were conferences in the morning and afternoon, and meetings at five and eight o'clock. The conferences were presided over by Mr. J. E. Mathieson and Mr. A. C. P. Coote; the earlier of the evening meetings was presided over by Sir Charles Warren, Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police, and addresses were delivered by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, Lieutenant H. Mandeville, R.N., Major Ross, and Baron Pollock.

The second of the evening meetings was preceded by one for testimony, at which a number of members of the police force related their Christian experience. Mr. J. Herbert Tritton, who occupied the chair, delivered a hearty address, in which he urged the policemen to appreciate the distinction between joining the Association and becoming united to Christ. He pointed out the danger of reliance being placed upon externals, and impressed upon each and all the imperative nature of the Lord's words: "Follow thou Me."

Rev. H. Dening, in a speech full of practical counsel and abounding with appropriate illustrations, advised the policemen to cultivate pluck, brain, and muscle, but, above all, to become servants of Christ. Now, indeed, policemen may take into custody, but in due time death's hand is laid upon all; and then even policemen must either be prisoners at the bar or princes on the Bench.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse delivered an address couched in very kindly terms. His topic was Salvation, and his mode of appeal was such as the occasion specially called for. He declared his strong sympathy with policemen in the difficulties of their calling. Some years ago a policeman told him that, having to do with so many bad people, he had doubted if there were any good; also that, having to suspect people so much, it was very difficult for him to exercise faith. Christian policemen would, Mr. Pearse said, feel their loneliness less if association with other Christians was one of heart and hand all through the year.

Mr. Reader Harris also spoke. He urged the men to decide for Christ without delay. The entire proceedings gave great pleasure to the policemen in general.

THE OPEN-AIR MISSION.

We were favoured in London, last Monday evening, with an incipient blizzard—not the beau ideal of a time for an Open-air Mission anniversary. Mr. Gawin Kirkham and his subalterns, however, are not arm-chair, fair weather Christians, so they mustered in good strength at Exeter Hall, to support their Secretary-chief.

Though suffering from an attack of rheumatism, Sir Arthur Blackwood faced the wintry blast, and presided on the occasion. He spoke very warmly of the work of open-air preaching. He was, in his earlier days, a pretty regular outside preacher himself—so much so that when he entered the civil service, The World certified that he had fully developed his "tub thumping proclivities." He regarded the proclamation of the Gospel message as not only a thoroughly apostolic practice, but one most applicable to the needs of the present time.

Mr. Secretary Kirkham was by no means like the needy knife-grinder—without any story to tell; quite the contrary. His story of the past year's work is a very full and a very fascinating one, as those who will read the printed report, when it appears, may discover. But, of course, there was no time to tell it on Monday evening. We may say that during the year nearly 1000 preachers have been at work, and it is computed that three million persons have heard the word of life from their lips. About 10,000 tracts, books, &c., have been distributed. The Secretary has been the hardest worker of them all. He has visited ninety-three towns, scattered over thirty counties, and travelled about 11,000 miles. A good work has been done at fairs, among hop-pickers, and in other ways; for this special kind of work a number of men are set apart. The nature of the work of the Mission is such that the fruit can only seldom be seen by the workers, but we may confidently believe that a great harvest has been reaped, if not always by the hand that sowed the good seed.

The other addresses on Monday evening were really excellent, both in supplying illustrations of the power of the preached Word, and in suggestions as to how it ought to be preached. Rev. Canon Pelham had a very gratifying story of success to tell in connection with his parochial work at Lambeth. Mr. F. A. Bevan gave several striking instances of the power of Gospel song, and urged that this agency should be more assiduously cultivated. Mr. Harry Guinness expatiated in glowing style on the glorious character of the message that the Gospel preacher is entrusted with, and counselled his fellow-ambassadors to be careful in so presenting it that the people shall be attracted, and not repelled. He told some ludicrous incidents showing the unwisdom of some preachers in selecting their illustrations, and in affecting an unnatural tone of voice.

In closing the meeting, the chairman acknowledged the spiritual stimulus he had received, and we fancy the experience of others was the same.

WAKEFIELD Y.M.C.A.—The second annual public meeting of this branch was held on March 13, and was presided over by the retiring President (Mr. Alfred W. Stanfield, J.P.) The Association has more than doubled its membership during the past year, the number now being 269. Among the speakers was Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, who gave a most stirring address to the young men on "True Christian Manliness." The gathering was quite a success.

THE MONTHLY TRACT SOCIETY hopes to have a kiosk near the International Exhibition at Brussels for the free distribution of tracts and Gospels in various languages. Adjoining the kiosk there will be a tent, where Gospel addresses will be delivered in French and Flemish. Work of this kind at former exhibitions has been greatly blessed, and the Society appeals for help in aid of their fresh endeavour. Mr. J. R. Mackenzie, Bridge-House, 181, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C.

MR. SPURGEON AND THE BAPTIST UNION.

A REJOINDER.

Dear Sir,—I have read with no little surprise and regret the letter from Rev. J. P. Clark, re Mr Spurgeon and the Baptist Union, in your issue of the 9th inst; and after waiting a week to see whether anyone would give an equally certain sound on the other side, write to call attention to one or two important points involved. I trust to your well-known fairness and regard for truth to give insertion to another version of the story.

Mr. Clark says, "the opposition (to Mr. Spurgeon) of necessity contains those among us who are more or less unsound in the faith." This is precisely what Mr. Spurgeon has asserted, and forms the ground of his withdrawal from the Union, and of all his charges against it. Surely an organisation which necessitates union with those who are "unsound in the faith" cannot be in harmony with the Word of God, as see 1 Cor. i. 10; Gal. i. 6—10; 2 Thess. iii. 6, 14, 15; 1 Tim. vi. 3—5; 2 Tim. ii. 16—21; Jude 3, 4; Rev. ii. 2, 6.

The point at issue is not whether Drs. Maclaren, Culross, and others, whom all good men love and respect, are true to the doctrine of the Atonement—no one doubts that—but whether union with men who are "unsound in the faith" is of God. Mr. Spurgeon feels, and many others feel with him, that it is not; and to say that, because he declines to mention certain men by name, as though he were their individual censor and judge, he is therefore unjust and reckless in his charges, is only to shirk the general question he has raised, and to cover up the principle for which he contends.

To allege, as Mr. Clark does, that Mr. Spurgeon has "omitted" to take steps to purge the Baptist Union of complicity with error, is to contradict years of faithful testimony, as well as of patient and brotherly waiting to see if such testimony would avail, before taking such action as he has been compelled at last to take. Leaders have long known Mr. Spurgeon's uneasiness, and some at least have shared it, while some members have withdrawn on similar grounds years ago, and have watched eagerly the result of the growing conflict between his unbroken testimony and the spirit of compromise which has seemed to prevail.

It has been proved and admitted that Mr. Spurgeon has "called together leading men and laid the case before them in private." The action taken by him, and admitted by Mr. Clark, when he says, "On one occasion he did formally protest against what grieved very many among us," is itself a proof that he has not "omitted" to give "distinct and effective warning." Mr. Clark says Mr. Spurgeon professed then to be "fairly satisfied." What is meant by "fairly," I cannot say, but at least it indicates a modified satisfaction, which, in the case of a man of Mr. Spurgeon's position and calibre, was in itself a warning of further action, if matters did not change.

As to offending "in what he did," the fact that he resigned on the general principle of refusing to be confederate with men "who make void the Gospel," appears to be objected to, because he declined to introduce personalities, and become the accuser of individuals. It is positively untrue to say that Mr. Spurgeon "led men to think that the worst charges in Down-Grade articles applied to us generally," for again and again he has said that he believed the Baptist communities were freer than others from the errors he exposed. Mr. Clark admits that the Down-Grade articles were needed as a protest, and cites Dr. Underhill as having hailed their appearance; and, further, from them "expects great good," and "in the main sympathises strongly with them." If they were thus called for, and I for one believe every word of them is true, then assuredly the writer of them cannot be blamed for resigning a position in which those who condemn them, and found the "cap to fit," are in nominal union with him, and thereby shielded, while practically neutralising his most earnest convictions and most faithful testimony.

As to permitting, "in the name and interests of Christ's Gospel, what no one would permit in an ordinary secular society," it may be asked, Would any such society retain members who were adverse to its highest aims, or acting counter to its first principles? Would a Radical Club, for instance, retain a member after it was known he was a Conservative, although willing to sail under Radical colours? I trow not, and nothing can be of more moment in the interests of Christ's Gospel than fidelity in its testimony and purity of fellowship on the part of its adherents—fidelity such as will not allow the rebuke addressed by our Lord to the Church at Pergamos to be applicable to themselves (see Rev. ii. 14, 15).

No, Sir, Christ is not wounded in the house of his friends, as Mr. Clark says, by those who, like Mr. Spurgeon, refuse to be in an association which finds a place for deniers of truths vital to the glory and grace pertaining to his person, work, and Word; but by those who, while they admit the presence of men "more or less unsound in the faith," take no steps to have it otherwise, but even censure and speak hardly of those who do. These are no days for compromise, and, while to some of us union is as dear and as desirable as it can be to any around us, truth is dearer still, and fellowship is to us of nothing worth unless it be fellowship "in the truth."

May God speed Mr. Spurgeon in the noble, self-denying stand he has taken, and crown his efforts to uphold and display the banner of truth with abundant blessing and success.—Faithfully yours,

Wm. Fuller Gooch.

SAILORS IN ANTWERP.

For years the British and foreign seamen coming to Antwerp, the largest port on the Continent, have been more or less in the clutches of "crimps" and boarding-masters. Thousands of "Jack Tars," paid off there with large sums, were homeward bound to parents, relatives, and friends in Great Britain, the Scandinavian countries, and elsewhere. Alas, they never got further than the almost innumerable "pubs." and "dens" in Antwerp.

The British and Scandinavian Missions to seamen have during the past years given help to many poor fellows, and a few months ago Pastor Hansen started a Home, the very thing wanted, and the first opened in Belgium, on Gospel temperance principles. God has been with the Pastor. I found the Home crowded last week on visiting Antwerp. During the first three months of its existence it has proved to be self-supporting. Pastor Hansen, whose address is Rue Osy, No. 83, will be glad for any papers, books, &c., Christian friends can send him. Their prayers are also earnestly requested for this good work. Pastor Hansen is now raising a small reserve fund for the furnishing of some spare rooms, and for the defence of the work against the attacks of the well-organised "crimps." Norseman.

REAPING TIME.

A series of gatherings of young people of both sexes have been organised this winter in different centres by the Committee of the Ragged School Union. A selected number of senior scholars, who have either given proofs of their conversion, or shown heavenward desires, have been invited to central missions in different districts, and most enjoyable, hallowed seasons have been experienced, with every prospect of permanent good, as the result.

The last of these meetings took place recently at George-yard Ragged School, Whitechapel, when nearly 200 young people, from twenty surrounding Ragged School Missions, met for tea. They subsequently re-assembled in the large room, under the presidency of Earl Compton. His lordship gave a helpful address to young Christians, drawing some inspiring lessons from the life of good Lord Shaftesbury, for whose work, especially in Ragged Schools, he expressed the heartiest sympathy. He also said that both he and Lady Compton, who sat by his side, felt it a privilege to be present, and to do anything that would advance the cause Lord Shaftesbury had so much at heart.

The meeting was thrown open, and many rose to testify of the good they had received at the schools, and some were already amongst the ranks of workers. An address followed upon Elisha from Mr. R. C. Morgan; and also some heartfelt words from Mr. George Holland, who proceeded with evident emotion to speak of some of Lord Shaftesbury's visits to George-yard, and his affectionate regard for the poor children.

THE SWISS PRESS ASSOCIATION have lately passed a resolution condemning the accumulation of sensational matter in criminal cases that are reported; they also pledge themselves not to publish suicides, except in cases when local circumstances render the publication necessary.

COLD AND HUNGER IN ST. GILES'.

TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

Dear Friends,

Kindly permit me to mention the needs-be for a little special help for the struggling Poor of St. Giles' during this exceptionally severe weather. The fag-end of the winter is invariably the most trying of all in a district like ours. The first two or three months the Poor manage to pull through by all sorts of shifts and contrivances, disposing of everything in their scantily-furnished rooms that can be turned into ready cash. Thus they secure food and manage to exist; but the last month or two of the cold weather invariably produces much suffering and want, as all their little means are then gone. Add to this the recent snowfalls and bitter winds, interfering as they do with the trade of all costermongers and street traders, and you have a fair idea of the necessity that exists for rendering a little timely assistance in the shape of coals and food until our poor folks can again get a fair chance of fighting want and hunger from their doors. Any moneys entrusted to us I think I can fairly promise shall be wisely distributed, and can be forwarded to our Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or to yours sincerely,

GEO. HATTON,
SUPERINTENDENT, ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION,
Feb. 28. 4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, W.C.

P.S.—Warm Cast-off Clothing, Blankets, &c., will be most acceptable, and can be sent to me as above.

Irish Church Missions
TO THE
ROMAN CATHOLICS.

THE COMMITTEE
MOST URGENTLY APPEAL

For increased CONTRIBUTIONS to the FUNDS of this Society.

Owing to many causes, but partly, it is believed, to Jubilee Collections, the income for 1887 was £2,175 less than that for 1886.

Consequently interesting and successful Mission Work must be abandoned unless contributions amounting to be given within the next three months.

HORACE W. TOWNSEND,
Clerical Secretary and Supt. of Missions.

This Appeal is cordially supported by—
The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of EXETER.
The Rev. Canon HOARE.
The Rev. Canon McCORMICK.
Lord KINNAIRD.
Sir ARTHUR BLACKWOOD, K.C.B.
Lieut.-General Sir ROBERT PHAYRE, K.C.B.

The Secretaries gratefully acknowledge responses amounting to £1,050.

An old friend of the Society offers to contribute £10 before the end of March provided nine or more friends will send similar amounts previous to that date.

Communications should be addressed to the Secretaries, Irish Church Missions, 11, Buckingham-street, London, W.C.

Remittances should be made payable to WILLIAM PASLEY, Lay Secretary. Cheques crossed "Ransom and Co.," and Post Office Orders on Charing-cross.

WESTWARD HO!

A FAREWELL MEETING to dismiss 200 Trained Lads (who, it is hoped, will leave for Canada on the 29th inst.) will (D.V.) be held in

THE LARGE HALL, EDINBURGH CASTLE,

RHODESWELL ROAD, LIMEHOUSE, E.

(Close to the Burdett Road Station on North London and Blackwall Railways),

On MONDAY EVENING, 26th inst., at 8 o'clock.

The Attendance of Christian Friends is desired. Admission to any part of the Hall is FREE; but as a very large audience is expected, Special Tickets admitting to RESERVED SEATS, and possessing Facilities for Ingress and Egress, can be had on application at the Office, as below.

The same 200 Lads will also, as usual, attend (by kind permission of the Secretary).

THE NOON-DAY PRAYER MEETING at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate Street, on Monday, the 26th, when the prayers of those assembled will be asked on their behalf. Friends who cannot attend the Evening Meeting are invited to be present at Noon.

THE COMMITTEE of the Ladies' Samaritan Society, National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly plead for help in aid of the poorer patients and their families.—Contributions in money or clothing will be gratefully acknowledged by the Committee. A few old dresses are much needed.

PARIS CITY MISSION. — Eight Missionaries of this Society are now labouring among the ungodly and dangerous masses of Paris, with many proofs of the blessing of Almighty God. One of these to the scattered English poor. Funds are urgently needed before the close of the month, as £60 is necessary to make up the ordinary income. Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street. The Hon. Secretary for England, Mr. J. M. WEYLLAND, 31, Carlton Hill, N.W., will gratefully receive contributions, or send to any address reports and papers with full information about the operations of the Mission.

RESCUE WORK IN POPLAR.

A Three Days' Sale of Needlework

Will take place (D.V.) in the Town Hall, Poplar, on the 25th, 26th, 27th April, for the benefit of the above work, carried on at Manor Cottage, Kerbey-street, Poplar.

COMMITTEE:

Mrs. F. A. BEVAN, 59, Princes-gate, S.W.
Mrs. CORNER, Manor House, East India Dock-road.
Mrs. HENRY GREEN, Cherry Orchard, Old Charlton.
Mrs. MARSH, 71, East India Dock-road.
Mrs. C. NEIL, St. Matthias' Parsonage, Poplar.
Miss BRAY, The Rectory, Shadwell.
Mrs. WILKES, Manor Cottage, Kerbey-st., Poplar.

Contributions of Needlework, Plain and Ornamental, Clothing, and articles of all kinds suitable for sale, are earnestly solicited, and will be thankfully received at Manor Cottage, as above.

A Working-Party commences at Manor Cottage on Wednesday, 9th February, 1888, and will meet each succeeding Wednesday till the Sale. Any Lady wishing to join it will be cordially welcomed. Hours, from 3 to 5.30.

A LAUNDRY is being started by an experienced worker, with the object of teaching young destitute girls, to fit them for usefulness, and thoroughly train them for service. Price list on application to the LADY SUPERINTENDENT, Somerset Laundry, 4, Glaucus-street, Devons-road, Bow, E. Contributions towards covering initiatory expenses will be gratefully received. Reference kindly permitted to Mrs. Henry Varley, Miss Ellice Hopkins, and others. Vacancy for four girls.

DIVINE HEALING and Power for Service.—Meetings conducted by the Rev. JOHN ALLEN or his workers. Bishopsgate (32, Spital-square), Tuesdays, 7.30 p.m. Camberwell Gate (The Hall, Horsley-street), Tuesdays, 7 p.m. Hackney (Trinity Church, Triangle, Mare-street), Sundays, [illegible] p.m.; Mondays, 7 p.m.; on Fridays, Baptism of the Spirit, 7 p.m.

Postal address, Balclutha Lodge, Southgate, N.

NEED & REASONS FOR ASKING.

NEED.—A House with lower rooms large enough to hold meetings in—Gospel Meetings, British Women's Gospel Temperance Meetings, &c.; Class and Committee Rooms. Upstairs: Rooms for occasional Visitors, Tired Workers, &c.; and perhaps as a permanence for some whom the Lord has laid aside from active work.

REASONS FOR ASKING.—1st. Because the present Rooms to let in Bristol for these purposes are very expensive, and quite beyond most societies funds; mostly too large or too small; very noisy, from being near to the trams. 2nd. Because two Houses are now being offered for Sale, in capital positions, with good rooms. 3rd. Because the words of the Lord Jesus to His disciples were, "Hitherto ye have asked nothing in My Name; ask, and ye shall receive" (John xvi. 24); and again, "WHATSOEVER ye shall ask the Father in My Name He will give it you" (John xvi. 23).

The Lord has indeed blessed the Work here, which makes the workers bold to claim His promise, and ask those of His servants who have been given abundance of this world's riches to help in the good work.

It is calculated the amount needed will be about £4,500; which will secure the House, with some Furniture, and enable the start to be made free of debt. Any Donations will be most gratefully received and acknowledged, as well as further particulars given, by MARGARET M. LURY, Bellevue, Upper Redland, Bristol; or may be sent to MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London, E.C.

THE WALKING PESTILENCE.—1.

I do not refer to the pitiful army of friendless children who dog our footsteps, to beg a cup of coffee or a piece of bread, or worry us to buy a box of lights or evening paper. Our only feelings towards them are those of tearful pity and tender compassion. Nor do I speak of that ever-increasing number of wretched men and women who through the curse of strong drink and sin find themselves, like the prodigal, "to be in want." For these we have no unkind word; on the contrary, we count it a privilege to go in and out amongst them in their misery and despair, and remind them of our heavenly Father's house, in which there is bread enough and to spare.

The pestilence of which I speak is dressed in fancy tweed and broadcloth, silks and satins. It is to be found nightly at the gorgeous houses of so-called "pleasure" in the neighbourhood of the Haymarket, where everything is done that can be done "To make vice pleasing and damnation shine."

It is not too much to say that hundreds of fresh youths are enticed into these "trap-doors to hell" every week. Those in authority, the Government and the police, do almost nothing to suppress the awful traffic in the bodies and souls of young people that is carried on wholesale in this terrible centre of Satanic activity. Let those who congratulate themselves that profligacy and lewdness are no longer legalised, or "regulated," in this country, take their stand any night in the week at the triangular space known as Piccadilly Circus, and witness for themselves how sin, open and unconcealed, is allowed to flaunt itself without let or hindrance. I am afraid they would feel that, as a nation, we are not trying to suppress vice, but are virtually doing much to encourage it. If the Salvation Army were to cause one-tenth of the obstruction that the devil's army causes here, they would soon find themselves in durance vile. Unfortunately the sound of the Army drum, or the voice of the Christian witness-bearer, is seldom heard in this place. Is it not high time for Christians to awake out of sleep and lay the axe to the root of the tree?

What is wanted just now is a band of a hundred men and women, filled with the Holy Ghost, who will nightly cry in this wilderness of sin, "Repent ye therefore and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out." I have seen many an old profligate coming out of one of the places of amusement tremble from head to foot simply at having the words, "The wages of sin is death," repeated in his ear. One old man seemed to break down as I kindly said to him, "The gift of God is eternal life." Will not some respond to this appeal and say, "So much as in me is, I am ready to preach the Gospel to you that are in the twilight, in the evening, in the black and dark night." The devil's agents plan and plot, spend time and money that they may destroy souls. Shall not

> We, whose souls are lighted
> With wisdom from on high,

pray and work, spend time and money to save those for whom Christ died? Is there not power still in the Gospel, not only to save the youth who has been mercifully kept from gross sin, but also to save those who resemble the Cretan sinners, whom one of themselves described as "evil beasts" (see Paul's Epistle to Titus)?

The Young Men's and Women's Christian Associations ought to be able to supply a band of workers whose hearts God has touched, who, constrained by the love of Christ, and full of pity for those who are

> Sowing the seed of a lingering pain,
> Sowing the seed of a maddened brain,
> Sowing the seed of a tarnished name,
> Sowing the seed of eternal shame.

Remember there is more joy in heaven over the bringing in of one repentant sinner than over any other kind of work we may do to benefit our fellow-creatures.

But there may be many Christians willing to help in this special class of work, who cannot come into London at midnight. To such we would say, Scarcely any of the poor fallen girls live in the centre of London, but in the outlying districts. Their whereabouts are by no means difficult to find out; nearly any shopkeeper or postman could give the necessary information. Christian ladies could visit these houses, and seek, by the power of the Gospel, to win these sisters for Christ and heaven.

The closing of evil houses can now be accomplished without much difficulty under the Criminal Law Amendment Act. All that is required is that a house should be watched say for two or three nights, by two thoroughly trustworthy watchers, who will say nothing, but note everything. Then apply to the landlord or agent of the property, and in nine cases out of ten the centres of corruption will be cleared in twenty-four hours. The Criminal Law Amendment Act for the suppression of these houses provides that any person who (1) keeps or manages, or acts or assists in the management; or (2) being the tenant, lessee, or occupier, knowingly permits such premises or any part thereof to be so used; or (3) being the lessor (or landlord) of any premises, or the agent of such lessor or landlord, lets the same, or any part thereof, with the knowledge that such premises or some part thereof are or is to be so used, or is wilfully a party to the continued use of such premises or any part thereof; shall on summary conviction in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts be liable (1) to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds, or, in the discretion of the Court, to imprisonment for any term not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour, and to a severer penalty on a second or subsequent conviction.[*]

I shall be glad to hear from any who may be willing to help in this midnight work, outside theatres, music-halls and dancing saloons, and I would ask every reader of this to pray that there may speedily be begun a crusade of really godly men and women who will nightly "cry aloud and spare not."

James B. Wookey.

90, Almack-road, Clapton, London, E.

[*] The Act may be obtained of the Queen's Printers, price 4½d. It should be diligently studied, and put in force. The way to stop this atrocious trade is to hunt it out. "Move on" is the policeman's most formidable weapon. So in this case also.

BOUND FOR THE CAPE.

Mrs. Osborn writes, on board the ss. Garth Castle at Dartmouth, on March 14:—

We leave England to-day, five in number, for our Mission at Cape Town. We shall be thankful for the prayers of your readers for the work in our hands. Mr. Greene, of the Children's Special Service Mission, accompanies us in order to spend a few months in evangelistic work.

During my absence from England, Miss Barclay, Hill-side, Reigate, will act as honorary secretary; and will be glad to use opportunities which may occur for giving information about Christian work in the Colony. Captain Clay, Highfield, Beulah Hill, Upper Norward, is honorary treasurer for the Soldiers' Homes at the Cape.

THE GOSPEL FOR IRELAND.—The Committee of the Crystal Palace Bible Stand has resolved to send several thousand copies of Gospels to Ireland. Some fifty Christian people in the country have been corresponded with, and twenty of them have become active workers in connection with the movement. Much prayer is being offered on behalf of this work, and it is hoped that there will be great results of good by thus sowing the seed of the Gospel amongst the farmers, artisans, and peasantry throughout Ireland. The committee desires to circulate a quarter of a million portions of the New Testament in Ireland, and towards this, one Irish gentleman has offered £100.

NOTES FROM THE NORTH.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN IN GLASGOW.

On Tuesday and Thursday last week, Miss von Finkelstein lectured in Glasgow to large audiences, and created great interest by her realistic explanations of Eastern manners and customs. At the lecture on Tuesday, Dr. Thomas Morrison, of the Free Church Training College, presided; and Mr. Robert Gourlay on Thursday.

SCOTTISH BAND OF HOPE UNION.

Sir William Collins presided over the seventeenth annual meeting of this Union, which took place in Glasgow last week. It was reported that there are 570 societies embraced in the Union, and that the membership and average attendance compare favourably with last year. Nearly 12,000 membership cards and 2000 motto cards have been issued during the past twelve months.

PRESBYTERIES AND EVANGELISTIC WORK.

According to custom, Glasgow Free Presbytery received last week a report of the evangelistic work done within the Presbytery bounds during the year. Twenty-eight congregations held evangelistic meetings in 1886, but last year the number was thirty-nine. One church reported an addition of 220 members, one 180, and several over 100. Most of these have been gathered from the lapsed masses through Gospel meetings carried on night after night.

SCOTTISH BIBLE SOCIETY.

At the annual meeting in Edinburgh of this Society, Dr. Struthers reported that its operations had considerably extended, and that several ladies interested in the crofter, fishing, and agricultural populations had caused many copies of the Word to be distributed among them. The circulation of 1887 exceeded that of the previous year by nearly 1000 copies, and the treasurer's account showed such a balance in hand as to warrant supplies of Bibles being issued to ministers at about half-cost.

THE WIDOWS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

At the annual meeting of this Society, held in Glasgow, on Thursday evening, Professor Henry Drummond remarked that the rich owed more to the poor than the poor to the rich. The world was meant to be an education and a discipline, and one great agent would be gone if they had not the widow in their midst. The great secret of happiness in life consisted in making other people happy. It would be a good thing to convert the weekly prayer meeting of the churches once a year into a widows' friendly society, for it was preposterous that a special society should have to be erected on the weaknesses and imperfections of the Church, in order to do that which every church ought to do for itself.

RESCUE WORK IN EDINBURGH.

The report issued by the Edinburgh Union for the care and protection of young girls deals with two years' work, and states that about 150 girls have been dealt with by the preventive branch. Many have been rescued, placed in good situations, and are doing well. A room has been rented for more than a year in the house of a respectable married couple, where any homeless, friendless, and destitute girl can be boarded while inquiries are made, and a fresh start in life procured for her. Of the sixty-five children received into the Neglected Children's branch many have been sent to Canada. Altogether the report speaks of such an amount of good work being done that the falling of in subscriptions is greatly to be regretted.

DUNDEE TEMPERANCE JUBILEE.

Well attended and remarkably successful meetings were held in Dundee on Tuesday week to commemorate the jubilee of the introduction of the total abstinence movement into that town. A conference was held in the afternoon, at which the Church's relation to the temperance cause was discussed, and a resolution was passed declaring that the time had come when the whole force of Christianity should be brought to bear upon the destruction of the drink trade. At a crowded evening meeting it was stated that fifty years ago there was only one minister of the Gospel in Dundee who was a teetotaler, but now there are upwards of thirty. A stirring address was delivered by Rev. J. M'Neill, of Edinburgh, who remarked that he regarded the name "Gospel Temperance" as a happy omen, showing, as it did, that the movement was becoming more distinctly spiritual.

MRS. SPURGEON'S BOOK FUND.

Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon writes pleasantly in "The Book Fund and its Work," during the year 1887 (Passmore & Alabaster. 6d.). She says :—

"Now, more than ever before, is the quiet, kindly, unobtrusive work of the Book Fund needed. In these day of doubt, and deliberate divergence from the plain truths of the old Gospel, it is comforting to know that this finger-post stands steadfast, still pointing wayfarers to the right way, and that those who follow its guidance need not fear being belated in the grounds of Giant Despair, or finding themselves shut up in Doubting Castle. Solid, old-fashioned, Scriptural, Puritanic theology alone goes forth from the Book Fund shelves; and if I may judge by the letters I receive on the subject, those who apply to me for grants of books are as free from the taint of 'Modern Thought' as the author of the articles on the 'Down Grade' himself."

The books distributed last year numbered 10,311 volumes, making a total of 100,391 during the twelve years the Fund has been established. Many thousands of tracts and pamphlets were likewise distributed. The recipients were 706 in number, of whom 183 were Baptists, 110 Independents, 147 Methodists, and 160 clergymen.

MR. S. WALTON AT KINGSTON.

During the thirteen days from the 3rd to the 15th inst. inclusive, Mr. Spencer Walton has conducted a series of afternoon Bible-readings, and evening Gospel meetings, in connection with the Evangelistic Association of Kingston-on-Thames and Surbiton, which have been greatly blessed and owned of God, to the salvation of many precious souls, both amongst the rich and poor. Not a day went past without manifest and abundant tokens of the Lord's presence. The after-meetings were largely attended, and on several nights so many remained to be spoken to that they continued until a late hour. Several of the Christians, who have been working for some years in the town, say they never remember seeing such a revival, and so many thorough cases of conversion. Some were very remarkable, and some well-known characters were brought to a knowledge of the Saviour; one of the last dealt with was a known thief, who, like many others during the Mission, fell on his knees completely broken down, and seeking Christ.

The Bible-readings have been abundantly blessed, and God's children have been brought into a deeper sense of rest and victory. The addresses on these occasions were very searching, worldliness and unbelief were brought to light and judged, and not a few consecrated themselves fully to the Lord. Mr. Walton has left many friends behind, who will follow him with their prayers that his Master will continue to use and bless him. We do indeed thank God for his faithful words, and the fearless way in which he attacked dead profession and worldliness in the Church of Christ. He did not fail to present the fulness in Christ Jesus for all believers.

We understand he has two weeks still disengaged, before his proposed visit to the Cape in June, and would recommend some of your readers to arrange for a Mission. J. Y. H.

STANHOPE HOUSE, LEAMINGTON.—The thirteenth annual report of the Young Women's Christian Association and Young Dressmakers' Home, Leamington, is a record of devoted labour, attended by much encouragement. By means of Bible-classes and evangelistic meetings, frequenters of the Home and members of the Association are influenced for good. The report gives the testimonies of several young women who have been directed in the right path within the walls of Stanhope House.

REV. F. B. MEYER IN EDINBURGH.

Dear Sir,—It is our privilege to send you a brief report of the four days' special services recently conducted here by this honoured servant of God. Much prayer and expectation awaited his visit, and it was felt that he would surely come "in the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ." Time alone can show the results of this mission, but it is already abundantly clear that the blessing vouchsafed has far exceeded all expectation. Of the instrument we would only say that as "a chosen vessel" in the hands of the King he had the glad experience of causing "rivers of living water" to flow forth, to the satisfying and refreshing of many a thirsty soul.

It was most striking to see the crowded audiences which at the morning and afternoon meetings overflowed the Masonic Hall, in spite of very unfavourable weather. Indeed, on the first afternoon the crush was so great that many had to turn away from the doors disappointed. The evening meetings were really much larger; but, being held in the spacious Free Assembly Hall, there was always ample room. The preparedness of heart with which the people met was very marked; and the intense earnestness and sympathy of his audience seemed to draw forth all the power and pathos of the speaker, as he sought to win them by fervent and loving appeals to the blessed possibilities of the "Christian life."

On the second day there were signs of a desire to linger at the close, and so an after-meeting was held. Nearly half the audience remained each day, and an opportunity was given for answering questions which had been handed in bearing upon difficulties concerning the Christian life. These were found to be most helpful, and many will look back to the solemn moments when they definitely yielded themselves and their all to God, to be ruled over by the strong, but loving empire of Jesus. Day by day our hearts are being gladdened by the testimonies given of fetters of sin and unbelief broken, difficult problems solved, doubts dispelled, and peace and love restored in many previously perplexed or unrestful lives.

Another feature of the work was the large numbers of men at all meetings especially in the evenings; and special mention should be made of the meetings for men only gathered in the Moncrieff Hall, after the general evening meeting, which grew in size and earnestness night by night, and can never be forgotten by those who listened to the impassioned appeals and faithful counsels so lovingly addressed to them. The day of perfect knowledge will unfold fully what has been done. Meanwhile we praise God for what we have seen and heard, and are confident that, should the Lord send his servant to us again, he will receive the warm and brotherly welcome of Christians of all denominations in Edinburgh.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' HOME, MALTA.—Rev. J. Laverack, officiating Wesleyan chaplain, writes from Floriana, Malta :—God's blessing still rest upon his work here. At the Home at Floriana six or eight, mostly sailors, have come out for the Lord during the past three or four weeks, while at the Rest, the branch Institution, over thirty, mostly soldiers, have professed conversion within the same period. We still need over £1500 on the Rest purchase account. We should be glad, also, to hear from any of the Lord's stewards prepared to give £500 to build and furnish a large hall in connection with the Rest. Very much also do we need, at both institutions, some strongly bound volumes of The Sunday at Home, and the like. The latter may be sent to the Wesleyan Mission House, Bishopsgate-street Within, London, E.C., for forwarding.

CONFERENCE IN BELLEVILLE.

Our Lord's Second Advent.

A hearty response was made to Miss de Broen's invitation to pastors and members of the different French and English churches to meet Rev. J. Melville Pym, who had proposed to hold a Conference on this subject during his month's stay in Belleville. The warm regrets expressed by many who were prevented from coming showed that the subject had wider interest than some of our friends imagined would be felt for it in France.

The day opened with a preparatory prayer-meeting. At 11 o'clock many people of different denominations and languages assembled. Mr. Melville Pym spoke on the faithfulness of God throughout past ages, a pledge of the fulfilment of his promises in the future. From the promise in the Garden of Eden of the Deliverer, his accomplished work, and parting with the message of return, the minds of those assembled were led to consider the disciple's fitting attitude of mind. It should be that of Christ Himself, which was, "I come to do thy will, O God."

M. le Pasteur Appia followed with striking remarks on "The Bride says, Come." Many Christians practically say, "Do not come," or "not yet." The hindrances to the desire for his coming were mentioned. Perhaps someone we love hinders us, or our own failures do so. Pastor Wood followed, with definitions of the word "waiting," and Rev. Mr. Anderson, in an admirable address, spoke of the urgent need of preparing for the coming of the King.

At the afternoon meeting Rev. Howard Gill presided. He maintained, on the strength of Titus ii., that the subject of the Lord's Second Coming is the most practical in the Bible. The servant who believes his Master is at the door will be in readiness for his return. The Old Testament, the Epistles, the Apocalypse are all full of the subject, and this Scriptural attitude was much more attained by the early Church than by the Church of the present day; they looked for the Saviour from heaven, we look to the Saviour in heaven.

Rev. J. Melville Pym spoke on 1 Thess. i. 1—3. The Thessalonians turned from idols, and so must all who live the life of faith. The Sandwich islanders threw their idols into the sea. If we do not live the life of faith it is because we have not turned from our idols, whatever they may be, which are taking the first place in our hearts. The wickedness of the world, the hardness of the human heart, everything shows that, as a whole, there will be no conversion of the world till Christ returns. "The heavens contain Him till the time of the restoration of all things."

In the evening the iron room was filled with the French poor—a highly interested audience. The subject was new to them, but the speakers knew well how to join it to the simple practical elements of the Gospel. After two evangelists, agents of the Paris City Mission, had spoken, Mr. Pym, on Mark xiii. 33, said that, if not ready for his coming, we must be assured that we are not fit to live. He did not send us into this world for our own gratification, but to live to the honour of God; and, if we do not this, we are hastening to eternal death.

Dr. Anderson gave an admirable address on "Waiting for his appearing," with illustrations from his own experience of the great expectation with which one waits for the coming of an illustrious person. Mr. Anderson, from Sweden, well known as an evangelist in Finland and Lapland, next spoke. An after-meeting followed, with prayers from the people themselves, and even after that some individuals remained for earnest individual prayer.

This is the first Conference, in the English sense of the word, that has taken place in Paris, but it is not likely to be the last, for many are thankful for it; and, as one wrote to Miss de Breen, "it remains a sunny memory." No controversy was attempted, and the most helpful discourses on this great topic were the result.

Y.M.C.A. ANNIVERSARIES.

CAMDEN TOWN.

The twenty-eighth annual meeting was held in the Lecture Hall, on Thursday, March 15, when about 400 people were present, Mr. W. J. Palmer (Reading) presided, and addresses were given by Revs. H. W. Webb-Peploe and Rev. F. B. Meyer. Mr. Peploe gave a most powerful address on Timothy, based on 2 Tim. ii., and viewed in the sevenfold light of a son, soldier, athlete, husbandman, workman, vessel, and slave.

The report, read by Mr. Jervis, secretary, was very encouraging, and showed that God had been in the midst in mighty power. Altogether it may be said to have been the most encouraging annual meeting ever held in this branch, which was formed in 1859.

HACKNEY.

The fourth annual meeting of this association was held last week, at the new premises, 275, Mare-street, Hackney. Mr. Geo. Rayner (chairman of the committee) presided. Mr. Frederick L. Porter, the general secretary, made a statement showing the progress of the association since it was started in two rooms over a chandler's shop. Since that time 422 young men have joined the association, and during the last twelve months they have received 137 new members. Their actual strength at the present time is 214. He referred to the spiritual and educational work carried on in connection with the association, and pointed out that the physical welfare of the young men was not neglected. About £200 is required to make the premises of the institution thoroughly complete.

Addresses were delivered by Mr. Alfred H. Cocks (treasurer), Rev. J. De Kewer Williams, Mr. W. B. Wilson, Mr. Douglas, and others. Mr. Rogers, of the London City Mission, testified to the help he received from the members of the association in carrying on spiritual work at a men's lodging-house, and in visiting about 750 poor families in the neighbourhood.

In the evening another meeting was held in the large hall. Mr. George Williams being unable to attend through indisposition, his son, Mr. Howard Williams, took the chair. Mr. Studd, who attended as a substitute for Mr. Quintin Hogg, spoke on Christian Manliness. Mr. Michael Young delivered an admirable address to young men, giving several practical lessons, in short and pithy sentences. The Chairman, in making an appeal for funds, said he had been over the premises, and must congratulate the committee on the able way in which they had expended the money entrusted to them. Dr. Barnardo also gave a stirring and impressive address.

THE MANCHESTER ANNUAL CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE is this year fixed for September 25, 26, and 27. It is expected that men from various parts of the world, whom God has blessed, will be present.

BRIGHTON Y.M.C.A.—A pleasant gathering was recently held at Steine House, on the occasion of an "at home," given by Mr. Marriage Wallis (the chairman of the committee of the institution), and Mrs. Marriage Wallis. At a public meeting held afterwards two life-size portraits of Mr. Wallis were unveiled; these had been presented by the members and associates of the branch. The proceedings testified a high appreciation of Mr. Wallis's influential interest in the affairs of the Association.

JOHN WILSON MEMORIAL SCHOOLS, BAAKLEEN, SYRIA.—Encouraging reports continue to be received of the growing prosperity of these schools, which were established in 1880, to supply Bible and other knowledge to the Druses. The American missionary of the district has the charge of them; but help is now much needed to pay the rents and teachers. They are the only Christian schools in the place, and are under the sanction of the local authorities. English ladies reside in the place, at their own expense, to help the work. The treasurer is Mr. Alexander Melville, School for the Deaf and Dumb, Llandaff, South Wales.

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

The special efforts among dock labourers and lodging-house men during the winter have been greatly blessed. Upwards of six thousand men, from all parts of London, have attended the free teas held, since December, on Thursday and Saturday nights. A short Gospel service is held on each occasion. Many have been rescued from lives of sin. The open-air Gospel work is continued on Sunday nights.

Two hundred women were gathered from the lodging-houses and off the streets to a free tea. At the inquiry-meeting many sad tales were told of sin and sorrow. As a result of efforts since made several of these women are now leading happier lives. The poor children, over three hundred in number, attending our juvenile services, have been treated to a "Robin Dinner," kindly given by the Ragged School Union.

SIR JOHN MACDONALD'S CONFESSION OF CHRIST.

The Montreal Star publishes the following account of some recent services at Ottawa:—

Ottawa, Feb, 21.—The revival services conducted by Messrs. Crossley and Hunter during the last six weeks in the Dominion Methodist Church here were to have been brought to a close to-night. The interest they have excited in all classes of society has been great, and augmented by the fact that Sir John and Lady Macdonald have been attending as often as two and three times a week. To-night a very perceptible thrill went through the audience as the Premier and Lady Macdonald entered the church. During the course of the preliminary exercises your correspondent learned that the evangelists to-day lunched with Sir John, when he told in all sincerity that he had experienced a change of heart. His well-known features wore a rather serious and troubled expression as he walked to his seat. He took part in the singing with earnestness, and those in the neighbourhood, who were observing him, were not surprised when, in answer to an appeal by Mr. Hunter that all who wished to become Christians and desired the prayers of the audience would stand up, the Premier of the Dominion arose with his wife. It made a distinct sensation.

Mr. Carson made a motion, which he said had been his secret purpose for two days, to the effect that the evangelists be besought to remain in Ottawa another week, although they are due in Belleville almost immediately. The speaker looked straight at Sir John in requesting some gentleman in the audience to second the motion, and the veteran statesman did it. Later the question, "All who love Jesus," brought Sir John again to his feet. The evangelists decided on the spot to remain.

CUBA.—Rev. W. F. Wood, agent of the Jamaica Baptist Missionary Society, writes to the Jamaica Baptist Reporter about his work in Cuba, where he has been labouring a little over a year. The church, which is only a year old, numbers 175 members. There is a mission day school of 130 boys. This progress has roused the hostility of the Jesuits. Mr. Wood has been cursed in the cathedral at Cienfuegas with candle, bell, and book. Many little annoyances are given, but the most serious trouble is that there is no available burial-ground for Protestants who die. They must not be buried in the Roman Catholic cemetery. It is illegal to bury them anywhere else, except land be especially set apart for the purpose. The city authorities refuse to sell land for such a use, and if any private person is inclined to do so he is immediately beset by the Jesuits. The result is he either refuses, or demands a prohibitory price for it. There have been public lectures against Protestants night after night, and placards warning against them posted all over the town. But God's work goes on. William Head.

"BECAUSE HE DIED FOR ME."

With sin my soul is weary,
No help, no hope have I,
Save only that for sinners
A loving Christ did die.
But, ah! I've often grieved Him,
And scorned his proffered love,
How can I hope my pleading
Will now his pity move?

And yet Thou art the Refuge,
The Saviour of the lost,
The Shepherd of the straying,
The hope of tempest-toss'd.
I flee to Thee to hide me,
Without another plea
But that I know Thou lovest
Poor guilty ones like me.

I want Thee for my shelter,
I nestle at thy side.
There from the dreaded tempter
My fearful heart would hide;
I own that I am sinful,
Deserving nought from Thee,
And yet, O Lord, I trust Thee,
For Thou hast died for me.

My great High Priest in heaven,
Before the throne He stands;
Each prayer or praise I utter
Is offered by his hands;
I dare not have a trouble,
Or carry any care,
But cast them all on Jesus,
Who will each sorrow share.

My heart lies hushed before Him
In a deep sea of praise,
Unruffled by the storm-winds
That sweep o'er life's dark days.
And when in heaven I see Him,
My glory-song shall be
One long, glad hymn of triumph,
Because He died for me.

MISS MACPHERSON'S LITTLE EMIGRANTS.

A hundred more boys from Miss Macpherson's Home are to leave on Tuesday next for Canada in the steamship Pomerania. They attended the noon prayer-meeting on Monday at Aldersgate-street. Several of the gentlemen who took part in the proceedings supplicated the Divine blessing on the lads, and also on Miss Macpherson's good work.

In the course of a brief address, Miss Macpherson said that some of the boys had no father, some no mother. She was pleased to say that a number of the children had accepted the Lord Jesus Christ. They had been instructed on the old lines of definite teaching, and the teaching had not been in vain. Among recent encouragements, Miss Macpherson mentioned a letter received from a lad who had been taken from the streets and cared for in the Home. Dropping into a place where Canon Farrar was preaching, his attention was arrested, and he had now become truly converted. The lad is about to enter upon training for a ministerial career, the entire expense being borne by a godly gentleman who had become interested in the case.

MR. GEORGE CLARKE writes from Dublin on the 16th inst.:—May I ask prayer for a mission in Australia, which I am leaving England on Friday next, 23rd inst., per ss. Britannia, accompanied by Mrs. Clarke, to conduct, in connection with what is termed the "Centennial Mission" in Victoria and South Australia. I would ask that prayer might be offered at noon prayer-meetings, at family prayers, and in private, for this effort to reach the careless and godless in our Australian colony. For a six months' mission in Ireland I expect to return at the end of January, 1889.

SHOW SUNDAY.

Among the forms of Sunday desecration specified by the Bishops in Convocation is what is now commonly called "Show Sunday." To some of our country and foreign readers it may be necessary to explain that, on the last Sunday of March, it is the custom for artists to receive invited guests at their studios, to inspect the pictures painted for the various exhibitions, which are open to the public later in the season.

To look at pictures in a private house may not seem a very heinous offence, but the proceedings of Show Sunday are altogether objectionable and offensive. The crowds gathered in the studios come as much for mutual exhibition as for inspection of the pictures, and the scenes are very like rehearsals of the parade at the Royal Academy on "private view" day, only without the more reputable elements of that assembly, who retain some respect for the Lord's day. There are also Jews, who would not be seen on their own Sabbath in such a place. The greater the crowd the more is the vanity of the artist flattered, and the fame of his new works spread. The business motive of advertising the works can hardly be taken into account, because the Sunday loungers are not usually buyers of pictures.

It is what passes outside the studios that forms the chief scandal. The roads, especially near Kensington and Hampstead, are in a turmoil all the afternoon with carriages and horses, coachmen and servants being thereby deprived of their day of rest, and getting no good by being brought together on such an occasion.

It is right to say that this custom, although very general—the example of the highest artists having descended to lower grades of the craft—is not universal. There are some professional artists who are also English gentlemen; and others who, on Christian principle, refrain from this desecration of the Lord's day. The card of invitation in this case is for a week-day visit, and some have the consideration to give the choice of a week-day or Sunday.

Let us hope that the number will increase of those who refrain from breaking the Divine law and outraging public opinion in this matter. To encourage such men to be firm, I would remind them that the biography of art records noble examples of consistent piety along with highest genius and skill. The anecdote is familiar about Dr. Johnson speaking to his friend Sir Joshua Reynolds, and Sir Joshua never touched a brush on Sunday afterwards. The greatest sculptor of that time, John Bacon, R.A., one of the founders of the Church Missionary Society, was known to all men for his religious strictness, and he never opened his studio on the Lord's day. To mention an instance nearer our own time, David Cox, who was loved as well as honoured by all, always remembered the Sabbath to keep it holy, or sacred from professional work. We have been told by more than one artist that the example of David Cox was not without good influence among the frequenters of the Royal Oak at Bettws-y-Coed. They speak with warm remembrance of the walks with him to church on Sundays, and of their still following the genial artist's example of honouring the Lord's day.

Let no one regard this protest against "Show Sunday" as a trivial matter. We may be having a proposal by-and-by to open the Exhibitions at Burlington House or the Grosvenor Gallery on the Lord's day; and thus helping to bring upon England the disgrace and danger of the "Continental Sunday."

"THE IRISH ECCLESIASTICAL GAZETTE" says in a recent issue:—The Christian, an English organ of what may be described as the new sect of undenominational religionists, has in its number for the 5th inst. a most admirable likeness of the Archbishop of Dublin, together with an appreciative biographical notice.

THE SELF-HELP EMIGRATION SOCIETY.—The third annual report holds out a prospect which should be very tempting to the surplus labouring population of these crowded islands. The committee state that if suitable candidates present themselves they are prepared to find situations, in Canada alone, for a large number of women, and to ensure work for a thousand emigrants in all during the coming spring and summer.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Richard Weaver addressed a crowded audience at the Edinburgh Castle on Sunday evening last, when several manifested great anxiety of soul.

Mr. William Forbes has just concluded a six days' mission at Bosworth-road Chapel, North Kensington. The clear, lucid manner with which the Gospel was made known was the means of great good, especially to members of the Church.

Mr. H. Veasey has held a fourteen days' Gospel mission at Thorncombe, Somerset; the meetings have been well attended and souls have been brought to Christ. Many who professed conversion thirteen months since, when the evangelist was there, are still rejoicing in the Lord.

Rickmansworth.—A week's mission in the Parish Church, conducted by Rev. J. G. Dixon, rector of St. George's, Birmingham, which has been manifestly greatly blessed, was concluded on Monday week. No effort of this kind has previously been put forth, and only another proof has been afforded of the words, "If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto Me." Large numbers of non-church-goers have attended the services, and many Nonconformists have appreciated the faithful preaching of the missioner.

Melton Mowbray.—A ten days' mission has been conducted in the Corn Exchange by Mr. Henry Thorne, in connection with the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. here. The attendance and interest increased as the mission progressed. It is trusted that as the result of the mission many have been led to seek for better and for higher things. Several young men, members of the Y.M.C.A., have determined to continue the early morning prayer-meeting that Mr. Thorne conducted the two Sundays he was in Melton.

Kaynsham.—Mr. G. C. Norrish, of the Evangelisation Society, has been holding a three weeks' mission in this town with ever-deepening interest, and very largely increased congregations. All denominations have been represented at the meetings, and religious life and activity have been greatly increased in the various churches. He has also given addresses in cottages and private houses to those who were not able, through age or other causes, to attend the services in the parochial schools. There are numerous indications that the result will be a permanent blessing to the locality.

Woodford.—Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has concluded an eight days' mission in the Congregational Church (Rev. W. E. Anderton), with which the churches at George-lane (Rev. Thomas Hammond, pastor) and at Ray Lodge (Rev. G. H. Giddins, pastor) have heartily united. Notwithstanding the inclement weather, the attendances have been large, nearly all remaining to the after-meetings. There have been not a few instances of definite blessing received, and the churches have been quickened and stirred. Mr. Hallowes, in his future work, will be followed by the sympathy and prayers of many whom his earnest and faithful services have blessed here.

Rev. W. Haslam has concluded a very successful mission at Lancaster. Some gratifying results are reported, showing that the energetic efforts put forth have not been in vain. On the last Sunday the spacious Church of St. Ann's was crowded in every part. On Tuesday, the last day of the mission, a large number of corn merchants were present, and throughout the day all the services were well attended. The people testified their warm appreciation by a liberal contribution as a thankoffering to the Church Parochial Mission Society. The meetings for women in the Association Hall were regularly and well attended. Mr. and Mrs. Haslam are going to St. Mark's Church, Preston, to conduct another mission.

Mr. Payson Hammond's meetings in Sacramento, San Francisco, have been greatly blessed to large numbers of people. They were held in a building seated with two thousand chairs, besides a large number of benches; these were all filled, and many persons stood throughout the services. Gospel hymns and songs of praise were sung with much spirit, and the interest increased day by day. The Sacramento Daily Record Union, in some remarks on the meetings, says:—"It is not Mr. Hammond's eloquence that holds the attention of his audience and draws the listener close to him, but his earnestness, his pleading, his sincerity of purpose, which cause everyone to pause and consider, to apply his words to themselves, and involuntarily say, 'He means me.' He makes everyone reflect upon his past life, his present existence, and anxious about the future."

Birmingham.—The Christian Help Mission in Coventry-road is doing good work among the poor by visiting, Gospel preaching, and helping them to help themselves.

Mr. Gibbens, of the Evangelisation Society, aecently conducted a mission at Purton Schools, near Berkeley, with quiet spiritual power to believers and unbelievers. Christ was exalted, his Gospel proclaimed, and souls were blessed.

Bible Carriage Work.—The Liverpool and Bethany Bible carriages have for some time past been located at Leeds, in charge of Mr. Northcote Wills and a Mr. W. H. Llewellyn. Some thousands of Testaments have been distributed, besides Bibles and Gospel books. During the stay of the Liverpool carriage at Hunslet, in charge of Mr. Llewellyn, it was decided to commence mission work in that place. A suitable room has been obtained, and, with the assistance of some of the Leeds Christians, Mr. Wills has been the means of pointing many to the Saviour. The Liverpool carriage is now at Dewsbury, but owing to the rough weather little has as yet been done in that neighbourhood.

Hucknall Torkard, Notts.—A Mission Society was commenced here eight years ago, by about twelve men, in an old barn. An old chapel being for sale in the town it was subsequently obtained and used for some years; this became too small and has recently been enlarged. It was re-opened by one of the resident clergymen, and holds about 500 people. This is a mining district, and the majority are of the working class. Many of the members are rough, hard-handed men, whose very faces tell you what they have been before their conversion; they sit at the Master's feet, clothed and in their right mind. Though a mission church it is continually feeding the other churches in the town, and it has the sympathy and support of all the clergy. Its preachers are supplies drawn from all denominations in the neighbourhood. Many have professed conversion, and backsliders have been brought back to the fold.

A. Cooke.

MR. C. INGLIS at SOUTH SHIELDS.

A series of powerful meetings was concluded here by Mr. Inglis on Sunday, March 11. The afternoon Bible-readings were a source of real spiritual strength and instruction in the Christian life, while the evening Gospel meetings were times which many will long remember for power and holy enthusiasm.

Numerous incidents are used, culled from the extensive experience of the evangelist of more than twenty years in many lands, which serve good purposes, as illustrating the truths enforced. Each evening the results in the after-meetings were encouraging, and not a day passed without definite blessing being manifested.

THE LONDON JEWS' SOCIETY, by the death of the Emperor of Germany, has lost a good friend, and a life member. His Majesty gave every year the sum of £25; and, as the last report shows, the Society had thus received in all £625 in these annual subscriptions.

BEDFORD COLPORTAGE SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of the Bedford Colportage Society was held on Friday week. The report stated that during the year an additional colporteur and book agent had been appointed; and there had been sold 500 Bibles and Testaments, 2000 volumes of books, and 11,000 magazines.

THE SHOREDITCH IRON ROOM.—For nearly twenty-five years out-door preaching has been carried on in connection with this Mission, in the streets near the Great Eastern Goods Station, and in the well-known Sunday Bird Fair. The superintendent is Mr. Joseph Knowles, who, having retired from the Army after serving in India, seeks to enlist soldiers under the banner of the Cross. The funds show a deficiency. Copies of the last report may be had from Mr. Knowles, whose address is 21, Benthal-road, Stoke Newington, N.

GIFFORD HALL MISSION.—The anniversary services of this Mission were held last week. On Thursday the annual tea and meeting were well attended. Mr. T. A. Denny presided, and addresses were given by Rev. Andrew Mearns, Messrs. J. E. Flowers, E. W. Gates, Barry Wake, John Tod, and H. W. Whittenbury. Mr. Benjamin Clarke read a very interesting report of the year's doings at the mission-hall. The Mission deserves the support and sympathy of Christians living in suburban and well-to-do neighbourhoods, who have not the poor always with them.

FUNDAMENTAL TRUTHS OF THE GOSPEL.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE CONFERENCES.

As far back as July last it had been resolved by the Council of the Evangelical Alliance to convene a series of Conferences for the promulgation and exposition of what are commonly believed to be the fundamental truths of the Gospel. The first series of these gatherings were held last week—on Wednesday at Exeter Hall, and on Friday at Kensington Town Hall. In this issue we report with considerable fulness (though not verbatim) the important addresses delivered on these occasions. With the exception of the opening meeting at Exeter Hall, the attendances were not so large as might have been expected, considering the intrinsic worth of the subjects set down for consideration. The presence and speech of the pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Tuesday morning doubtless accounted in large measure for the great throng of hearers at that meeting; proving that the name of C. H. Spurgeon is still one to conjure with in the evangelical world.

Well-known friends of evangelical truth presided at the meetings, and gave brief introductory words; the chairmen included Mr. Donald Matheson, General Ward, Sir Robert Phayre, Dr. Stoughton, General Sir A. Lawrence, and Mr. W. Shepherd Allen. Lord Polwarth, the President of the Alliance, was to have presided at the opening meeting, but was prevented by the illness of Lady Polwarth. He sent a letter, however, expressing the most cordial sympathy with the object of the gatherings.

On Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday this week the series of Conferences were continued at Mildmay Conference Hall and the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road. In our next issue we purpose furnishing a similar report of the utterances at these meetings.

EXETER HALL,

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 14.

[MORNING MEETING.]

The Inspiration, Authority, and Sufficiency of Scripture.

By Rev. CANON GIRDLESTONE.

It is not easy to discuss such a list of subjects as this in half an hour, so as to guard against all misunderstandings. I can only attempt to give the outlines of these three topics, and I would ask you to pursue them for yourselves. It seems to me my first business is to face the last word, and that word is "Scripture." What are the Scriptures? We divide them into Old and New Testaments. The former consists of thirty-nine books that are held by Jew and Christian alike. This collection is the growth of a thousand years, a period that closed in the days of Nehemiah or thereabouts, 400 B.C. After that time I do not suppose that anything material was added to the Old Testament. It is accepted by Christians on the authority of Christ and his Apostles. We have literary reasons for knowing that the Scriptures spoken of by Christ are those which are in our Hebrew Old Testament. The Jews accepted the collection on another ground, into which I need not go.

THE BOOKS AND THEIR AUTHORS.

As to the books themselves, the prophetic ones have the names of the writers and the dates of the writers. Some of the other books may be judged by their contents, and their authorship ascertained; but a large number are anonymous, and we can only gather their dates from their possession of certain literary signs. I will only mention one—that it was the habit of the sacred writers to make use of the writings of their predecessors; consequently you can go back from Nehemiah to Ezra, from Ezra to Chronicles, Kings, and so on to Moses. Nor need we stop there, because Moses no doubt had patriarchal documents in his possession. There are now in the British Museum tablets or brick documents as old as the days of Abraham. Doubtless Abraham possessed and carried documents out of Ur of the Chaldees; and they were added to as time went on, so that they got into the hands of Joseph, and, together with his remains, came into the possession of Moses. It is highly probable that we have in Genesis historical documents put together by Moses, or on his authority, many of them dating back to the earliest time of the patriarchal history.

In dealing with the New Testament we are in a different position altogether. It is held by Christians to have been written in one generation, or two at the most—the generations from which Christianity streamed over the world; and to be the work of the Apostles and prophets of Christ. You may trace each individual book of the New Testament by the aid of manuscripts, versions, and quotations, back through the age of printing to the generation in which the books were written. The Epistles almost always bear the name of the writer, with one notable exception—the First Epistle of John—the style of which is so manifest that there cannot be any doubt it was written by the author of the fourth Gospel. As to the Gospels there is this remarkable fact, that, though they are all anonymous, yet they have all got names that have been handed down by very early tradition; and we depend on early tradition for the authorship of almost every classical writing we possess, such as Thucydides and Herodotus, neither of whom was named as having written their books within a century of the books having come into being.

With reference to these New Testament books, the first five contain the testimony of eye-witnesses of the great facts on which Christianity hangs. They are the work of men whose eyes beheld, and whose hands handled, the Word of life. We know they are not myths or cunningly devised fables, but the literature of the men in whom Christ breathed and in whom the Spirit wrought, and who taught, worked, and died for Christ. The collection of these books was gradual, as the individual books spread from country to country. Probably two centuries elapsed before all the churches scattered through Christendom had got complete collections of the books, and by what we may call the survival of the fittest, under the providence of God, they had come to an agreement as to what books might be regarded as the work of the apostles and prophets of the New Testament. It is sometimes said that the Church gave us the Bible. It is quite true each generation of Christians has handed down the Scriptures to the next generation; and I hope we shall hand them down intact to the next generation after us. But the Church, before it gave the Bible, received it from the apostles and prophets, who received it from the Spirit of God.

INSPIRATION.

Now I come to the question of inspiration. I do not accept the Bible because it is inspired, but I accept the inspiration because I have got the Bible. The foundation of the whole matter lies in this, that the inspiration of the Old Testament is accepted in the New. How, then, do I get at the inspiration of the New? First, by analogy; because the case is analogous with that of the Old Testament. Second, I rest it on the strength of certain promises made by the Lord Jesus, and recorded in the Gospels, especially in the 14th and other chapters of John, and in certain chapters of Matthew, such as the 10th. People say all writings are inspired. No doubt they are, either by God or the devil. But there are distinctions. In a certain sense every good book is inspired, and I do wish that every writer—every newspaper writer, everybody who writes a book, would pray God for the inspiration of his Spirit before he begins to write. But we must distinguish as to the Spirit's action. The various writers were possessed of what we call spiritual and mental faculties, and by the Spirit's action these faculties were rightly influenced. You must distinguish between faculty and the influence brought to bear on it; as you distinguish between eyesight and light. God has given the light of inspiration to the whole world, for all nature testifies of God; to the Jew, because the whole of the Old Testament teaches the Jew that God is in providence and in history; and to the Christian by bringing before him the truth as it is in Jesus. But besides this ordinary function of the inspiring Spirit, there are extraordinary functions; as when God gave wisdom to Bezaleel, strength to Samson, and to the prophets power to predict, as in the case of Micaiah, or to other prophets power to write. The inspiration of the Scriptures is contrasted with other classes of inspiration. Many persons prophesied, whose words we have not got; and many things we have in Scripture are not direct prophecies, and are not, strictly speaking, revelation. We have to distinguish between what is the revelation and what is the historic or literary framework of that revelation.

What then do the Scriptures contain? They contain a selection of the Divine revelations on various subjects, and the historic and literary framework. As to the first, God spake in sundry ways and in divers manners; many times by dreams and visions, and voices and angels: so God's truth came to man. As to the second, God used various instruments to set forth the framework of truth. The whole man of these inspired writers was used—their mind, memory, knowledge, imagination, power of arguing and illustrating, and their language. They made use of various materials, oral or traditional, the archives of kings, the decrees of monarchs. In describing natural phenomena they would use the language of that age; not of this age, or of the last age. In putting down visions men would use their mother tongue to express what God had printed on the mind or brought before the eye. Thus you have the treasure in earthen vessels; but you have the treasure. God was at work, predicting, suggesting, controlling, quickening the memory, opening the understanding, inclining the heart, guiding the reason, giving in each case just the aid needed to enable each man to carry out his commission to write.

AUTHORITY OF SCRIPTURE.

From inspiration we come to authority. If inspiration is settled, authority becomes an easy matter. The authority of Scripture is absolute. Some say there are degrees of authority. Yes, there are various degrees, as the authority of the parent, of the Church, the ruler, of learning, of antiquity, of intuition, of consciousness; but we must not despise one of God's gifts. We are sometimes in a false position, driven from one extreme to another. We should be careful to acknowledge all those things that God has bestowed upon us. But, say some, you must read the Scriptures cum grano. Yes, cum grano salis. Use your sense, your intelligence, the verifying faculty, and the praying faculty. Keep your eye and heart open as you read; your head clear, and your heart warm. See that you draw your proof from plain texts of Scripture, not from fancy texts. Do not let an argument hang upon an illustration. Compare Scripture with Scripture. Consider the age in which the writers lived—whether it was a fully developed or an immature age of truth. Consider the various points of view from which the various writers, under God's Spirit, set forth the same truth. When you have done this, then bow to the truth; you have got it from God; stick to it. Why do we believe such a doctrine as the Trinity, say, or as God's future judgment of men? One man may say: "I believe it because my mother believed it." That is a very good reason: let nobody despise it; it is a blessed reason. Another says: "I have learned it in my Catechism." Another: "It is part of the trust deed of my chapel." Another: "It is in the Thirty-Nine Articles." Another: "I find it in creeds, and in the councils of the Church." All these point back. Who presided over the first councils? There was then a community and a Church. The Gospels were the chairman of the first councils. Every authority of the Church to which we bow points back to the words: "It is written." Observe the authority given to the Old Testament in the New. There is one little word translated "It is written" which occurs twenty-five times in the New Testament, and always having reference to the Old. Our Lord and his Apostles never overthrew a single fact recorded in the Old Testament. They never said, "That is all in the past." Why, if a thing happened it happened, all the same whether one year ago or ten million years. Truth is not altered by age. Christianity is really built upon the Old Testament, and grows out of it. Look for yourselves at the doctrines of the New Testament, and see if there is anything in it that has not got its roots in the Old. There are 600 quotations from the Old Testament in the New. If, as we may conclude, both the Old and the New are equally inspired, then their authority rests on the same level.

SUFFICIENCY OF SCRIPTURE.

Lastly, there is the sufficiency of Holy Scripture. I belong to a church which says in the Sixth Article, "Holy Scripture contains all things necessary to salvation." That is my idea of the sufficiency of Holy Scripture. Rome says it is not sufficient, and needs to be interpreted. I agree that it does. Do not set up as omniscient because you are able to read and possess a Bible. Receive and use the gifts which God has bestowed upon you. Even the youngest of us are liable to error! Do not despise the dictionary or the grammar, or the parental or pastoral voice. Do not be above using a commentary. First get out of the Word all you can yourself, and if you cannot make it clear, take advantage of helps. Do not despise the judgment of the men who composed the old councils, and wrote the Creeds and Catechisms. These things were not lightly put together. Study the minds of great men who have passed away, or who remain. They are God's gifts. Get all the help you can, especially in considering the state of things in the time of Christ. What a mercy we have got the writings of Josephus, which throw light upon many of the events that happened in the early days of the Church. We read that it was said to Ananias, "God shall smite thee, thou whited wall," but we should not know the fulfilment of that but for Josephus, who tells us that he hid himself in a drain, but was pulled out and slain. But while you may take helps and illustrations from other sources, keep things in their own order. There is no library like these old books; no commentary like that; no illustrations like those contained in this wonderful Book. From the fathers go to the grandfathers, and from things mediæval to things primeval. Remember that the true Vicar of Christ, and his true Interpreter, is the Holy Ghost.

Canon Girdlestone closed by urging that the way to advance Christian union is to recognise that Holy Scripture leaves certain matters of minor importance open questions, but on the great saving verities light enough is given, and all may be at one. As to the sufficiency of the Scriptures we have only to look to the triumphs it has achieved in the past, and is achieving to-day among all classes of people—from the poorest of the poor to the aged, dying Emperor of Germany, who said, when comforting passages were read to him, "That is beautiful; that is good; that is true."

The Unchangeability of the Gospel.

By Mr. C. H. SPURGEON.

You may be aware, dear friends, that I am an especially harsh and ungenial individual, accustomed to great fury in speech, and, therefore, that I may confine myself within due limits, and say nothing that should be too strong this morning, I intend to read you a passage of Scripture, promising you that I will not go beyond it in any of the strong utterances that I may use. It is Gal. i. 6—9: "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from Him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another Gospel," &c. Paul is in an amiable and charitable mood, as I hope I am. But he declared that if anyone, even an apostle himself, preached another Gospel, he should be accursed. He even ventured further, and said the same of an angel from heaven. The Gospel was once for all delivered to the saints, who are to maintain it and scatter it throughout all the nations that it may be the means of life to the rest of mankind. It is a definite faith, a definite statement entrusted to the Church of God. And to make sure, it was written in black and white, so that it might remain. Moreover, the Book which contains the Gospel is sealed by these closing sentences: "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this Book: and if any man shall take away from the words of the Book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city." The Gospel, therefore, is an absolutely perfect thing, without variableness or shadow of turning. If it had been intended that the Gospel should be improved, surely there would have been some hint that at least in this nineteenth century, the most glorious of ages! men would arise who would give new revelations and bring in superior light. But there is no such intimation. There is, however, an intimation that in the last days there shall be mockers walking after their own lusts. There are plenty of intimations of a departure from the faith in the last days, but there is nothing to say that there will be a clearer knowledge of something which was but dimly revealed before. Whatever may be said about evolution in creation, I know of no evolution in theology. God has spoken, and it is man's duty humbly to receive the word. The idea of an evolution in theology gives the strongest temptation to trust in men and in human theories, and must lead to an utter unsettlement of faith, especially in regard to the inspiration of Scripture. It is now sometimes said that one part of Scripture is inspired and another not. I would suggest that in future the inspired part should be printed in black, and the rest in red, so as to prevent any misunderstanding. I wonder whether the text, "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life," should be regarded as inspired or not. Assuredly a great many people have found their way to heaven by it. It is sometimes asked whether the words spoken by the devil or by either of Job's friends are inspired. The record of it is inspired, and when such a question is asked it only assumes that the person addressed is an idiot. Indeed, it is one of the characteristics of modern culture that it regards everybody who differs from it as an idiot. I hope we are not quite reduced to that level. If the Bible is not wholly inspired, I should like the distinction plainly marked. If we have not in Scripture an infallible Book, we should be better off without a Book at all.

MAN HAS NOT CHANGED.

The Gospel cannot be a changeable, variable, shifting Gospel, because, first of all, man has not changed. He is the same sinful being as ever; and, if man is the same, God's mode of dealing with him will be the same. If an atoning sacrifice was wanted 1900 years ago, it is wanted still. If it was once true that without shedding of blood there is no remission, it is true to-day. Again, death is the same. Coming, as I often do, from sick-beds, I thank God that I have such a Gospel to preach to dying sinners. If I had to tell a dying sinner that he must do his duty or he could not be saved, what duty could he do, whose life is drawing to an end? Dying saints always rest on the old Gospel, in whatever way they may express themselves. Again, Jesus Christ is the same, the Father is the same, and the Holy Spirit is the same. A fact that happened ten thousand years ago is just as much a fact as if it happened yesterday; if only two witnesses saw it, that is as good, to my mind, as if two thousand witnesses saw it. It is idle to say that certain books or monuments do not mention it. A negative does not disprove a positive.

But it is said by some that there is always an advance. No one has suggested a change in the multiplication table; the fundamental points of mathematics are still the same, and so the fundamental truths of the Gospel of Christ remain unchanged. Some persons, indeed, may go beyond the truth; I know of several who have done so. I wish that they could have grace to come back again.

The Gospel is the same, because it is sufficient for all the purposes for which God sent it. Wherever it is carried it has the same power as of old. The Gospel was a match even for the cultured and philosophical Greek, and to-day it still commands some of the most stupendous intellects on the face of the earth. As an old-fashioned believer, I do not feel a bit ashamed of my company. Great names can be quoted on the other side, but they will not be quoted in the next generation except with execration, while those who stand up for God and eternal truth have names that will live while time lasts. It is said that some persons believe the Gospel, but do not preach it. If so, they are all the more guilty before God. If I had within my breast a single truth reserved, I should expect to be banished from the presence of God. If a thing is true, out with it. The people want more of the Gospel and not less. It is God's Word and not man's comment on it that is needed to save men's souls. In the case of those converted under my own ministry, I usually find that it was not what I had said, but a text that I had quoted that sealed the work. Read of the martyrdoms of Diocletian, and then the story of Bishop Hannington and the martyrs in Central Africa, and the story of Madagascar forty years ago. These stories are like what occurred just after the Master went to heaven. The Gospel is still elevating character to the very highest degree; it is equal even to the immoralities of great cities; it is our duty to trust it, and, instead of using wooden swords of modern invention, to keep to the old Jerusalem blade—"Jesus Christ, and Him crucified."

ALTERATIONS NOT IMPROVEMENTS.

The modern alterations in the Gospel are not improvements. I have observed one thing—that the preachers of the improved Gospel seldom display any joy, delight, enthusiasm. One person writing to me, standing at the antipodes of my faith, said: "You ask me, does it make me happy? There is nothing in what I preach that could make anybody happy." That is quite true there is little, there is nothing left—it is all gone. They can prove, and prove, and argue, but they have no joy. Contrast that with the preachers I used to hear. How they warmed up, and how they seemed to enjoy it, feeding themselves while they were feeding the people. Their faces beamed like angels' faces while they told of free grace and dying love, and "rang those charming bells." The dolorousness of modern prophets is striking. They remind me of what Tom Hood said to the clergy man who came and talked to him in a serious, solemn, sad manner: "Excuse me, sir, I do not think your religion agrees with you." The religion of the Gospel so thoroughly agrees with those who receive it, that it is a well-spring of joy and a delight to them. Therefore let us not depart from it.

We require no improved Gospel, because there is nothing in it which needs to be mended. Great things were promised from a revision of the Holy Scriptures. It was, no doubt, a very proper thing, but then it was said that the old orthodox people would never show their faces again. The truth is we are pleased with the Revised Version after all. As to doctrine, we are quite content, for we have lost nothing, and even fancy that here and there we have gained a bit. At any rate it is a gain to have a clearer view of truth, and to have the Word of God better translated. The science of theology ought to be grammar. He who understands grammar so as truly to interpret the language of God is, to my mind, the theologian of the day. It is said that science is somehow or other disproving something in the Bible; but it is impossible that God's works can contradict his words. There used to be a school that said all science was in the Bible, but I never could see that! At the same time I would rather believe that than believe that there is anything in heaven or earth that can really come into conflict with what God has spoken. If religion is to be altered as science increases, the alterations will have to be very frequent. I do not know how many times Dr. Stoughton [who sat near the speaker] would have had to change if he had changed with the science of the age. He would certainly have had to take in all the daily morning papers, and the evening papers as well. The history of philosophy is the history of human folly. There is no insanity which has ever yet had a philosophy that is greater than the insanity of the present time, and I expect to live till it is known to be so. I am not inclined to go on following the wriggling snake through all its twistings and turnings, and windings, but am inclined to say, "Let God be true and every man a liar."

Then I maintain that the alterations being made by different persons are dangerous, because they lead the way for every error to creep in. The error of purgatory is even now creeping in through Rationalism, and will naturally lead the way to praying for the dead, and perhaps, the sale of indulgences. Again, "improvements" in doctrine tend towards laxity in morals. Wherever the Old Gospel has come to be despised, there has uniformly sprung up with it a widening of the moral range, and men have done, even with a clear conscience, what they never would have thought of doing before. Mr. Spurgeon concluded with an earnest appeal to all who hold the Old Gospel to be steadfast and unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as they know that their labour shall not be in vain in the Lord.

The Work of the Holy Spirit.

BY REV. CANON FLEMING.

This is the most solemn and clinching part of all that has come before our minds to-day. It is the key which turns the lock of God's truth, his gracious Gospel, and fixes it indelibly upon the heart and soul, firmer than in the rock for ever. We are living in days when men are talking a great deal about power, and are coveting power. The Christian should covet spiritual power. The prophet of old said, "Truly I am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord." There, I think, we have the secret of all true power: the power of faith, the power of love, the power of prayer—all are set before us there. It was true language for the prophet to use; it was not too strong for the prophet, and not too strong for us to-day.

"THE OLD IS BETTER."

Now the Bible is God's Book for all his children, at all times, in all nations. We have no novelties to bring you now. You have heard none, and I have none to introduce. I can only speak a closing fragment of that Gospel which has been set before you. Whatever churches we represent, whatever may be the cry for something new, we can, I trust, put our hands upon the Bible, and say, "The old is better." Faith is still the same; it is God's great power to-day. You have only to read the eleventh chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews to see what it was in the olden times, and what the heroes did then. We have the same faith now. Prayer also is the same, and it is all linked to the work of the Holy Spirit. Prayer moves God, because it moves the arm that rules the world. "If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?" Love also remains the same as in the Book of the God of Love. It is the strongest power in the world to-day. Love will melt the heart when no other power can touch it. Unless we are inspired by God with his love, and have sympathy with Him and with the souls around us, we shall never be instrumental in saving souls. We have all need of this power to-day. A man has gone down for want of love; he has drifted away, and thought that no one cared for him because he cared for nobody. Many a man, too, has been saved through this love, which is but a dim reflection of the love of God. "When we were yet without strength, Christ died for the ungodly. Scarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet, nevertheless, peradventure, here or there, now and then, say, in the history of the world, "for a good man some would even dare to die. But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us." This wealth of love, this wealth of faith, this wealth of prayer, is all ours by that power which the prophet spoke of—the power of the Holy Ghost.

THE CITADEL OF THE HEART.

We do not despise intellect, we do not despise learning, we do not despise wealth. All these must have their place, and will have their place without us, whether we will or no But none of these can take the place of the work of the Holy Spirit. Some think these truths respecting God's Spirit are not wanted now. This is such a refined age, such a different period from the times of old, there is such progress and power now, that we must guide the intellect, the reason, the head! These people seem to leave out the heart, but God never does so. The Bible tells us that Christ came to save the fallen and rebellious heart of man. The head and intellect, and wealth and learning, will all take their places when the heart's needs are attended to; and then we shall have a redeemed body as well as a redeemed soul.

It takes more than eloquence to recreate a soul; nothing less than the power and work of the Holy Spirit can do that, and the man who tries to save a soul, apart from the work of the Holy Spirit upon the word spoken, and written, and read, will certainly be baffled and defeated. This is the great want of the Church to-day. It is, indeed, for the lack of this that the Gospel has not brought the world to the feet of Christ. All churches want this: the ministry wants it. Some say we want an educated ministry. Yes, but we also want a ministry "full of power by the Spirit of the Lord." This is what the laity also want. We want to see sons and daughters better than their fathers and mothers have been; but unless we have this power we shall not find the children better than those who went before them.

THE UNION OF SANCTIFIED HEARTS.

All through my ministry I have laboured for Christian union. The power and work of the Holy Spirit upon our hearts is the only and the strongest bond of union. True union among the churches of God is a thing possible, but no vague holding of any creed will unite men together. The affinity of sanctified hearts is what will draw men more and more together. "The night is far spent, the day is at hand." I do not despair, because the world is growing older, of yet seeing more of that which we now represent and pray for. All who by the Holy Spirit are being made more like the Lord Jesus Christ are being drawn together, whether they know it or not, whether they admit it or not. In a naval war between England and France, two ships came into action in the dead of the night. It seemed in the darkness that neither would conquer, and when the day dawned it was found that they were friends and not enemies. So it is that we come out of the darkness, and as we meet to-day we see that we are not enemies but friends, that we are not defeated, but bound together. And I say that if there is anything in the world that will tend to do this, even if we are not to live to see it done,—if anything will bind the Churches of Christ together, with all their imperfections, deficiencies, and squabblings,—it is not to be creeds, nor, indeed, platforms like this, nor organisations; certainly not politics, and not nationalities; but what is here spoken of, the one true, uniting, cementing power of the Holy Spirit, which leaves each distinct as the billows, but shows them one like the sea. "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing."

Special Prayer-meeting.

In the afternoon a special prayer-meeting was held in the Lower Hall. The Hon. General Ward presided. In the course of the proceedings two addresses were delivered.

The Person and Work of the Holy Spirit.

BY REV. F. B. MEYER.

There is perhaps no form of words in which we join more often than "I believe in the Holy Ghost." Yet many a congregation which is accustomed constantly to utter the formula might say with those that do not utter it, "We have not so much as heard whether there be a Holy Ghost." It is our desire now to accentuate the great and glorious doctrine of the personality and work of the Third Person in the ever-blessed Trinity. We must never forget that we live this side of Pentecost, for many Christians seem to be living on the other side. What is it to be living this side of the day of Pentecost? It is to realise that the Holy Spirit, which before Pentecost was reserved for the few, is now the heritage of all Christians, of all who believe. Before Pentecost He was still working in the world. It was He who brooded over chaos, and brought order in creation. It was by Him that holy men were led to write the Word. He was superintending the entire course of human history, bringing about the fulness of the times and the coming of the Son of God. Before Pentecost He was reserved for the few, for the élite, for the spiritual aristocracy of men. But when that day struck, Peter well stated its true import when he said that the Holy Spirit now is shed forth upon handmaidens, and upon servants, upon young men and old—in fact upon the common people and obscure disciples, those who shall never stand forth as the leaders of the Church. These have got as much right to claim the filling of the Holy Spirit as those who in the ancient days received Him.

"When the Comforter is come," said our Lord, "He shall testify of Me;" and it is a remarkable fact in the dispensation of God's providence that the Holy Spirit never reveals his own presence, and it is perhaps for this reason that the world and the Church have almost forgotten Him. So that the only way, or the means by which the presence of the Holy Spirit is indicated, is in the exaltation of the Son of God Himself. And you will know that you have received the fulness of the Spirit when the Lord Jesus becomes to you inexpressibly precious. Also you will know that a church has received the fulness of the Holy Spirit when in the members of that church, in the preaching and witness-bearing of that church, the name of the Lord Jesus Christ is as ointment poured forth.

Our Lord, in telling us that the Holy Spirit should come to witness of Him, gave us an assurance that, however recreant the Church might be to her duty, and however evil the times into which she might be thrown, there never would be lacking in the Church and in the world at least one Agent and one Voice that should maintain the unimpaired glory and beauty of the Lord Jesus Christ Himself. This was so marked in the first ages of the Church that the Apostles, when before the tribunals, not only styled themselves witnesses of the Saviour but also quoted the Holy Spirit: "We are his witnesses of these things; and so also is the Holy Ghost, whom God has given to them that obey Him." And throughout the Apostolic age this witness-bearing on the part of the Holy Spirit was continued, so that towards its close St. John says that among those that bear witness, not in the believer's heart only but in the Church and the world, is also "the Spirit of truth." We all know that there is no close to the Acts of the Apostles, and that is because that book is never complete. In that book we have the commencement of the work of the Holy Spirit in the Church and the world, but that work has proceeded all through the ages, and God the Holy Ghost is as real to us to-day as his work is Divine; his witness-bearing also is as personal as ever it was in the days just after He had been first given to the Church.

Mr. Meyer went on to recapitulate various outstanding facts in our Lord's life to which the Spirit may be said to bear special witness. These points were enforced, with illustrations from Apostolic history, and references to present testimony. In conclusion, he thanked God that in these days there is so great a movement of protest against unevangelical teaching. This, also, is to be attributed to the working of the Holy Spirit.

Rev. E. W. MOORE

briefly continued the consideration of the subject, reading Acts i. 8: "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto Me." We have no lawful calling here except to bear witness for the Lord Jesus Christ. For this end, surely for nothing else, we are left on earth; our lives are prolonged that, whether we eat or drink, or whatsoever we do—whether we speak or whether we work—we may be witnesses for Christ, may represent our absent Lord. We are to represent Him on earth, for He condescends to represent us in heaven. The first thing in a witness is personal knowledge. It is the privilege and responsibility of every Christian to bear witness to a living Saviour. That is the work, but where is the power? The Apostles manifested Christ in their lives, but how? Not through worldly knowledge, not through power of arms, not through wealth. It was through power received from the ascended Lord by the Holy Spirit. "After that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." That we may have fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ, we should crave the power of the Holy Spirit.

[EVENING MEETING.]

Jesus Christ the Son of God.

By Rev. E. E. JENKINS.

I believe Christ to be the Eternal Son of God, not only because I consider the doctrine to be clearly taught in Scripture, but because I cannot conceive of a teacher for all the ages, a leader of all the races, and a deliverer from all evils, having no other attributes than those which are common to us all. If Christ is merely human He is simply one of several religious and philosophic founders of renown. But we claim for Christ that He is not one of many, but One over all. And in demanding for Him this position we affirm that the human race cannot be regenerated by the wise men who belong to it. The men of science and letters to-day are certainly not wiser than the sages of other days. Science has increased their knowledge, and the material conditions of the race are more accurately understood now than at any former time; we are masters of forces of which our fathers never dreamed. But those advantages have not increased the wisdom which addresses itself to the moral needs of humanity. They have not increased among us moral power. Modern knowledge has not sent one ray of light into the region of human destiny; it has not improved the clearness or the force of one of those motives which lead to righteousness. It lends us no help in the fight between conscience and passion. It is not in the power of any intellectual acquirement or any degree of training to make us better men. He who proves to me that there is no God in the world, makes it equally clear that there is no hope for the world.

HOPE ONLY IN CHRIST.

But I believe there is hope for the world. I cannot imagine that man, the grandest product of creation, is destined merely to indicate vast capacity, and to be always destitute of the power of using and perfecting it. There are aspirations and emotions which our philosophic teachers imagine they get rid of by calling them the errors of feeling and the material of superstition. But to discredit an emotion is not to get rid of it. These sentiments are not the abstractions of the metaphysician or the dream of the recluse. They are associated with common life; they are the motives of duty, or the sources of sorrow, or the inspirations of strength and nobleness. They are the possession of all races; they are the heritage of man. Human treatment of human needs is wanting in the qualities of knowledge, authority, and sympathy. But I have hope for the world, for all these are found in Christ; because Christ is man, and more than man.

The universality of human wickedness, which has been the standing puzzle of moralists, is made clear at once by the doctrine of hereditary alienation from God. Those wonderful contrasts in man of grandeur and meanness, of the angel and the devil, of lofty purpose and ignoble failure, of better things in the hope, and found nowhere else than in the hope—these are explicable in a nature that has fallen from a high estate. When Christ claims to be sent of God to bring the race back to that estate, is not the claim supported by the desperate need of the race; and also by the fact that the labours of other teachers in this direction have been, and continue to be, a standing failure? These have in some instances been widely beneficent, but they have failed to penetrate the source, to touch the roots of the hereditary disease of the mind. Let us take this proposition, that there is no help for man in man, and place it beside the claim of Christ to be more than man. "I am the bread of life." When we examine Christ's sayings, and measure the standard of his life, and see that standard rise beyond all ideal gradations of excellence, outstripping the imagination; when we behold the purpose of his life consummated in sacrifice, do not all these features of the Christ harmonise the position He claims for Himself, and naturally follow it?

THE ORIGINAL CHRIST OR NONE.

Consider the remarkable fact that the teaching, the life, and the death of Christ have commanded the profound attention, I had almost said the equal admiration, of nearly every school of thinkers. But there is something equally remarkable—the strange inconsistency between their devout admiration for his character, and the verdict they pass upon his pretensions. They offer Him intellectual homage; they quote his wisdom and reverence his career; but they are critics, not disciples. They take care that nothing of Him, and nothing from Him, shall be accepted which does not agree with what they conceive to be the laws and conditions of nature. The miracle is impossible; the testimony of the miracle is, therefore, invalid. How do they know that the miracle is impossible? Have they attained that vast knowledge of the forces and movements in operation outside their system, which can justify the enormous assumption that a miracle is impossible? They confess that Christ is infinitely above them in the knowledge of the human heart, in purity of life, in grandeur of character; yet they sit down to study his history with the coolness of a reader of proofs, and put their pen through this passage, because it is a myth; through that commandment, because it is an antiquated superstition; through the other statement, because it violates probability. When their work is done, what do they leave us? A Christ reduced to their own stature: a piece of modelling and waxwork. We will have the original Christ or none. Away with these critics, who know exactly what Christ ought to be and what He ought to mean. He is his own interpreter, and He will make it plain. They confess that He manifests the profoundest insight into our nature; why do they reject his testimony when He speaks of his own nature? If they applaud the Sermon on the Mount as displaying the purest pattern of human life, they are bound, in all consistency, to accept the passage of another discourse: "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." If Christianity has done a noble service for mankind, has it been done by a Christ criticised or a Christ followed? What is the secret of the spell, or charm, which invests the proclamation of the Gospel; which makes the common people hear it gladly; which makes its invitations music to the heavy laden, to the poor, to the sorrowful and the dying? The very mystery which these critics would discredit. The sympathy, the power, the presence, the personality of the Son of God; the promised peace by an atoning sacrifice; the rest from guilt, from doubt, from fear, not in a proposition, a statement, a community, but the rest of faith in a risen Christ.

GIVE US THE OLD GOSPEL.

There are several Gospels preached in this city of London. Which of them commands the largest following? Which attracts for its preachers the largest congregations? Which brings the new heart to the hearers? Which brings new life into the family, order and sobriety into the neighbourhood? Not "another Gospel," but the old Gospel, which was not of man, neither by men, but by Jesus Christ, and God the Father who raised Him from the dead. As one who has visited many countries, and studied many religions, I thankfully affirm, that the triumph of the Gospel is its ethical power, and its ethical power is born of its mysteries. Strip it of these, and its glory departs with them. Talk not of the wisdom and poetry of its literature; the Aryan and Greek muse can furnish the sublimest strains of prudence and devotion. As for stripping the Gospel of its mysteries, it looks absurd even in the assumption of an argument. The chemist may change the constituent elements of air, but he only affects the atmosphere of his laboratory, while the unchanged air outside continues to give life to millions. So the critic in his study can eliminate the divine from his local text, but the breath of God holds on its way, sweeping over the wastes of humanity, to make humanity rise up and live.

Should all the forms which men devise
  Assault my faith with treacherous art,
I'd call them vanity and lies,
  And bind thy Gospel to my heart.

Jesus Christ the Righteousness of the Believer.

BY REV. H. C. G. MOULE.

ONE of the first duties and deepest instincts of the Christian in face of any great truth concerning our Lord and Redeemer surely is to veil the face of his soul, to bow down in inward awe and adoration, and humbly to ask of the Holy King and Master such grace and guidance as that we may in some sense truly set Him forth. Let me introduce this holy subject with two verses of the Word of God: "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: and He is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world" (1 John ii. 1, 2).

The passage is brief but divinely full. I desire to concentrate my words only and wholly on some few great facts and considerations which seem to me to constitute the heart and centre of the subject. As to its limits, in the phrase "Christ our Righteousness," as commonly understood among evangelical Christians, we have not only the doctrine of the Atonement implied. We have a special aspect and application of that doctrine. It may be stated thus: Jesus Christ in his atoning merits, Jesus Christ for me a sinner is my immediate ground, is my one real ground of peace with God, not only at first, but always to the end. As my sinless sacrificed Peace, I, believing, am welcomed to the refuge, the hiding-place, the home, which is, in fact, Himself, my Head and Lord.

Now look a little at that short pregnant passage I read, which stands in one of the inner sanctuaries of the Bible, so to speak. This first Epistle of John is very possibly the latest page of Scripture in date. Assuredly in it the Holy Spirit takes the reader into the recesses of spiritual life and experience. He leads him into the most penetrating views of holiness, obedience, and love. He twice says that God is love. He repeatedly speaks of the Christian life as such, as a life without sinning. A tone and air of serene, yet awful sanctity, at once spiritual and practical, characterises the pages. The Christian contemplated in this letter is a man of God indeed. He has fellowship with the Father and the Son. He walks in the light of God. He possesses eternal life now; is a child of God now; and, when the Son shall appear, he is to be like Him, seeing Him as He is.

THE BELIEVER NOT SINLESS.

All the more remarkable and significant, in relation to such a person, that in such a passage comes in the language I have read. For one thing, we are here warned that the heights and depths of grace leave the actual liability to sinning there still. The whole weight, indeed, of the revelation John is making is to act against his sinning, "These things I write unto you, that ye sin not." But conceivably the man may sin. And if he does—whether the sin look greater or less, whether deed, word imagination, impulse, tendency—what, when the sin happens, is to be the man's thought? Is he to say:—"I am sorry, I regret it; though, after all, it is from some points of view, 'a fall upward,' a development, a something not adjusted yet, but to be corrected and harmonised soon"? Is he to say:—"My true law is the realisation of my deepest individual life, and a certain mysterious knowledge of evil may need to be a factor in the process"? Is he to say, on the other hand:—"I am an item in a vast solidarity of regenerate humanity, of spiritualised human life, and all partial evil within this is universal good?" Is he to say, in simpler thought and phrase, "God is a Father; for me the Divine Fatherhood is the Alpha and Omega—my creed, and articles, and confession: my spiritual life is just insight into that, and sympathy with that; all other phases of religious thought, if true at all, are but broken lights of that, and the sooner we merge them in that great ray the better. As a man, certainly as a spiritually developed man, I am akin to God. I am one with God; there is nothing in God for me to fear; a deviation from his idea is indeed calamity, disease, imperfection, but the life and love of God suffusing me must heal and restore, and the burthen of the fact is lost in the sea of love!"

Are these, or any of them, the ways in which the man is to deal with the event of his having sinned? No, not according to John the Apostle. The truth with which he meets the case is at once sterner and tenderer; harder and firmer. "We have an advocate with the Father." The Father, then, is yet a judge, and a judge needing urgently a perfectly valid plea on the man's behalf. And our advocate is "Jesus Christ the Righteous." Not now Jesus Christ the meek and lowly, the altogether lovely with the charm of an eternal love, but Jesus Christ the Righteous, the keeper, and honourer, and glorifier of eternal law; Jesus Christ at once the Lord and the Bond-servant of everlasting Deity; Jesus Christ in whose eyes the smallest sin is hateful and abominable beyond imagination; Jesus Christ whose pleading for us, we may be sure, will not palliate our sin, nor tone it down, nor talk about falling upward and development.

PROPITIATION.

"And He is the propitiation for our sins." Here is the basis of the advocacy, the strength of the plea, the reason why of the sinning believer's, the deviating, the defective believer's, non-condemnation, non-exclusion. Mark the words well. First "the propitiation"; we know what that is. It has but one meaning in Greek or English; it means sacrificial pacification of an offended power. And then "He is the propitiation." Not it but He; not merely a thing done, but a person who has done it; not merely suffering, but a sufferer; not merely obedience, but an obeyer; not merely death, but the Lamb of God slain. It is a phrase in which we see merit, profound, mysterious, valid, prevailing; merit such that the sinner before the Father-Judge is an accepted child still, not for his own sake, but for this Merit's sake; a merit all the while lodged in a Person, because such and such things have been done and borne by Him. It is a memorable phrase. It is doubly memorable standing where it does, in this supreme context of life and love. We are in this Epistle suffered, indeed, to look into the heart of God, who is Love.

I might say much more on the details of this mighty, tender, holy passage. But I want to leave a few deep impressions on our minds, and let this one be our sufficient impress from the deep-cut seal of these verses—the truth that Jesus Christ, the Advocate, the Propitiation, is the infinitely necessary preservative of the regenerate man's acceptance, standing, and peace before the Father, in the event of his ever sinning, be it in violation or in defect. "Christ for us" is no mere introduction to a state in which "Christ in us" is to be all in all; "Christ for us" still less is an "element" of rudimentary and imperfect Christianity. It is to remind us of this, if I mistake not, that the Apostle adds the great words—"and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." Sacred and blessed statement, but why here? Is it not to remind the awakened and penitent believer, long in Christ, but today conscious of wandering from the true, close walk with God, that he must stand for purposes of acceptance, of justification, of peace, precisely on the same old humbling ground? Yes, he must leave Christian experience alone for this purpose, and kneel down at the foot of the cross, and wrap himself in the Lord's merit, precisely the same as the last, the newest, the least instructed penitent of the whole world has to kneel in the first moment of his first faith.

TRUE WITNESSES.

A strong thinker of the past, Isaac Taylor, of Ongar, somewhere says that to the end of time, a vicarious atonement (in the old evangelical sense of the words) will be assailed with objections, and that to the end of time the awakened conscience will gravitate to it as to its one possible rest. True witness; let me put my seal humbly to it in both its parts. Another great Christian of a remoter past, Count Zinzendorf, has left on record, in the like connection, a notice of a personal experience of his own, which has powerfully impressed me; let me read you the words: "About this time I met with the work of Düppel, in which the doctrine of the imputed righteousness is attacked. Its system seemed to aim at eliminating from the idea of God the notion of his wrath, and just so far as I sympathised with that view I liked the system. I was then in the attitude of the natural theologian, and 'the good God' distressed me when his acts seemed to lack a sequence of mathematical precision. I sought to justify Him at all costs to men of reason. But when I came to think over my own conversion I saw that in the death of Jesus, and in the word Ransom, there lay a profound mystery; a mystery before which philosophy stops short, but as regards which Revelation is immovably firm. This gave me a new intuition into the doctrine of salvation. I found its blessing and benefit, first in the instance of my own heart, then in that of my brethren and fellow-workers (in the Moravian Church). Since the year 1734, the doctrine of the expiatory sacrifice of Jesus has been and will for ever be our treasure or watchword, our all, our panacea against all evil, alike in doctrine and in practice."

True witness, I say again, All that I would add to it is a brief word on one great and glorious truth—the union of Christ and his people. Deeply convinced am I that in that blessed truth, of which the New Testament is really full, there lies not, indeed, a solution for us here below of all the problems that can be started about atonement and acceptance, but a most precious assistance to the believer's thoughts, as he grasps the reality of atonement and acceptance, and awaits the light of eternity upon them. Union with Christ is the radiatory centre, or the attracting centre; the uniting centre of the whole range of saving truth. What is the true virtue of faith? Its revealed function is bringing the man into actual oneness with our glorious Head. The special virtue of that oneness, from the point of view of our need as sinners, is that, in the holy solidarity of Head and members, the member now receives—not arbitrarily, but in a profound and real union—the benefits of the merit of the Head on the one hand, and the influx of the life of the Head on the other. Our Advocate and Propitiation is also our elder Brother, our celestial Bridegroom, our vital Root, our living and life-giving Head.

THE NEED OF THE TIMES.

In closing, I would seek to bear a brief, earnest witness to one profound need of our times. It is a far-spread need in all sections of the Christian Church, one which is fitted to humble and hide the face as we essay to speak of it; a need traceable not to any special doctrinal aberrations, but to the fallen heart of man. I mean the deep, solemn need of a keener, tenderer, profounder sense of sin. I rejoice in the manifold proofs of Christian life at this time, but I must utter my deep conviction that we are not growing, on the whole, in the sense of the sinfulness of sin. And I remember with sad distinctness that most true saying that there has never been a great deviation from Scripture in Church history, but an inadequate sense of the sinfulness of sin has had to do with it. Oh let us pray for an intuition, so far as we can bear it, into the sinfulness of sin, into the awful wrongness and rebellion of sin; into the condemnableness of sin; into sin as "by the commandment becoming exceeding sinful." Let us pray that, while we mourn it as a calamity, and as disease, and loathe it as pollution, we may have some deep, awful sense of it as guilt, as the thing which the holy law of God must to all eternity abhor, and denounce, and doom. What shall we do meanwhile? We will gaze in the glass of the Word, and upon the revelation of the holiness of God. Let us learn the oft-forgotten use and habit of adoration, of holy fear, of the sight of God, which makes the soul veil its face with its very wings, while yet it sings the solemn praises of the Infinitely Holy. To see Him so is both to die and to live—to die to the last dream of claim, or refuge, save beneath the cross; to live to and in the discovery of the love of God, which is in Jesus Christ our Lord.

It is long years now since, in the morning of manhood, after many a mental wandering, the question was driven home upon my inmost being, by a power which, indeed, was not myself: "What must thou do to be saved?" But that question came in a way over which the lapse of time has no power. The soul got intuition then which it can never lose, into self, into sin, into holiness, and into the need, the reality, the eternal rightness of the blood of the Lamb, of the righteousness of the Mediator. Yes, long years have rolled, but those things are above time. Meantime, I have seen abundantly enough, in observation of a richly varied world of acquaintance and connection, to assure me, amidst a universe of mysteries, that in the living grasp of these mighty truths, in the application and assimilation of them into man's life, there is a "power of God unto salvation" in a sense most profound which there is in nothing else. Christ crucified—He is still a stumbling-block, still folly; but still for ever the power of God and the wisdom of God. Let us not rest without some deep sight of the Holy One in his holiness. It will show us self and sin; but, blessed be God, it will show us the glory and wonder of the cross, the glory of the Lamb, the peace of pardon, the bliss of acceptance, the moral strength of the joy of the Lord, and the joy of ceasing from our own works to behold the full beauty of Jehovah Tsidkenu, the Lord our Righteousness.

"I believe in the Holy Ghost."

By Rev. Dr. DAVID McEWAN.

All the fundamental truths of the Gospel are alike important. But when we regard Christianity, not as a system, but as a living force, I think there is one article of belief that must be allowed to have the pre-eminence. That grand fundamental doctrine is expressed in the words, "I believe in the Holy Ghost." I am afraid very vague ideas prevail and have long prevailed among Christians concerning the work of the Holy Spirit. Controversy in its old acute form may have ceased. But on this and other subjects there are worse things than controversy. To ignore and lose sight of an important Bible truth is as great an evil as to fight over it. Error is all the more dangerous when it is unchallenged, and its deadening effect all the more insidious when it is latent. And there has been a failure, I fear, in acknowledging and honouring the Spirit of God, as that Divine agent without whom the Gospel itself is powerless to save. If only the whole of Christendom were to rise to a full practical conception of what is involved in the words, "I believe in the Holy Ghost," nothing would be so likely to lift her up to a higher plane of life and action, to bring down upon her a Pentecostal baptism of spiritual energy, and to open up before her a new era of holy progress and unprecedented triumphs.

THE SPIRIT DIVINE AND PERSONAL.

What does believing in the Holy Ghost include? and what are the great practical lessons this fundamental truth carries with it? It includes, undoubtedly, faith in his own divinity and personality. We can have no right conception of the Spirit's work, unless we have right conceptions of Himself. That He is Divine all admit who believe in the Trinity of the Eternal Godhead. That He is a Person is a doctrine no less Scriptural and important than that He is Divine. To say that the Spirit of God is only the Divine power or energy in active operation, to speak of Him as an influence, and nothing more, or as a mere personification of the Divine attributes, is to lower the whole tone and practical value of Bible teaching concerning the Spirit's work. To be brought into contact with a mere power or influence in the matter of our personal salvation is surely a very different thing in a moral point of view from knowing that we are dealing with a Divine Person, and that He is dealing with us. What could our Lord mean by commanding his Apostles to "baptize in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost," if the Holy Ghost is not a Person equally with the Father and the Son? What could He mean by "blasphemy against the Holy Ghost" as a sin not to be forgiven, if He intended simply blasphemy against a power or influence? Besides, we find in Scripture all the acts and elements of personality, the exercise of individual intelligence, and an independent will, predicated of the Spirit—such as commanding, counselling, comforting, witnessing, quickening, striving; being tempted, being grieved, helping men's infirmities, and making intercession for them; sealing, searching, taking of the things of God and showing them to us, and distributing to every man severally as He willeth. What can be the force or use of language, if all this is not intended to represent a person?

THE GREAT WORKER.

But believing in the Holy Ghost includes more than this. It includes faith in Him as the Author, Sustainer, and Perfecter of the Divine life in the human soul. He is, no doubt, the great Architect and Worker in creation; and in no pantheistic sense his all-pervading presence operates effectively in maintaining and controlling the laws and elements of nature. All that is noblest in human intellect; best and purest in human genius; all that in any age has contributed to human progress and welfare, are also due to Him. But infinitely higher than these common operations of the Divine Spirit is his special office and work of imparting the life of Christ, sustaining and promoting it, and finally perfecting it in the souls of the redeemed. Though the means of grace, as well as the minds and hearts of men themselves, have an important and responsible part to do in connection with it, the work itself, from the beginning of spiritual life in the new birth to the last consummation of it in glory, must be traced to no inferior instrumentality, but to the supreme agency and effectual operation of the Divine Spirit.

I grant there is a side of mystery to this truth. What truth has not its side of mystery? I cannot define the mode in which the Spirit operates; or adjust the relation in which his working stands to human responsibility, or the freedom of the will. Our Lord does not attempt this; but says: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but knowest not whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." I admit, too, that the truth may seem utterly incomprehensible to the world. This should not surprise us. Christ expected as much, for He said: "Whom the world cannot receive, for it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him; but ye know Him, for He is with you, and shall be in you."

CONSTELLATIONS OF TRUTH.

One has to admit too, with regret, that it is a truth which has not been without its liability to abuse; and that in the course of centuries it has occasionally suffered and been brought into contempt through the ignorant zeal and misguided enthusiasm of weak and ill-formed minds. But none of these things affect the truth itself. There it stands as a truth "most surely believed among us," established and attested by the Word of God in passages so numerous that to afford even a glimpse of them one would have to do with them as astronomers do with the stars when they arrange them into separate groups and constellations. Some are in the form of prayers, as when the Psalmist prays, "Take not thy Holy Spirit from me," or the Apostle that we be "strengthened with might by the Spirit in the inner man." Some are in the form of promises, as when God promises to "put his Spirit within us," or the Saviour that He would "send the Comforter, which is the Spirit of truth." Some are in the form of predictions, as when the prophets declare that the Spirit shall be "poured out in the latter day upon all flesh;" "poured out as water on him that is thirsty, and as floods on the dry ground." Some are in the form of warnings, as when we are told not to grieve, not to vex, not to quench, the Holy Spirit; or when God declared that his Spirit "will not always strive with men."

Some are in the form of doctrinal statements, as when the Saviour says, "Except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God," or when the Apostle affirms that we are saved, "not by works of righteousness which we have done, but by the renewing of the Holy Ghost." Some are in the form of passing allusions, as when the Apostle speaks of "the love of God being shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit which is given to us," or of Christians "beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, and being changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." And some are in the form of practical exhortations, as in the words: "Be ye filled with the Spirit," and "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, which is in you, which ye have of God?" It is, therefore, the Spirit that quickens, it is the Spirit that enlightens, it is the Spirit that strengthens, it is the Spirit that sanctifies, it is the Spirit that bears witness with our spirit that we are the children of God, it is the Spirit that seals us unto the day of redemption, it is the Spirit that makes us meet for the inheritance of the saints in light, and it is the Spirit that is the earnest of the inheritance. And thus the testimony to this great truth concerning the Spirit's work is interwoven into the whole texture of Scripture—not a solitary golden thread, but multitudes of such threads running in all directions through the entire web; all combining to proclaim Him the supreme author, promoter, sustainer, and perfecter of the Divine life in the human soul, the highest gift to his Church of the ascended Lord, without which all earthly ministries, sacerdotal services, and human instrumentalities, are vain—a gift shed forth abundantly with the exalted aim of making us living members of the living Christ, or, as Isaac Barrow so eloquently expresses it, that we might be made "temples of his divinity, thrones of his majesty, orbs of his celestial light, paradises of his blissful presence."

PRACTICAL LESSONS.

Believing in the Holy Ghost, therefore, includes faith also in his abiding presence with the children, and his indwelling in the hearts of all true believers. But I do not dwell on this. I wish rather to call attention to the fact that there are important practical lessons which a true and Scriptural faith in the Spirit necessarily carries with it. There is one thing, indeed, which it does not teach. It does not teach us to be less diligent or earnest in the use of means. The circulation of the Word, the preaching of the Gospel, the observance of religious ordinances, and the putting forth of human efforts to bring men to Christ, are not in any way diminished in importance or urgency by this doctrine. God's Spirit, we must remember, works by means, not by miracles. And so far from slackening our diligence, or damping our zeal, or cramping our energies in seeking by all instrumentalities in our power the salvation of men, a true and enlightened faith in the Divine Spirit should just have the opposite effect. We should be inspired with all the greater courage, and influenced with all the more glowing zeal, to use the means, by the very knowledge that we depend on the Spirit of the living God to give them effect. Looking to the magnitude of the evils we have to combat, we might well despair of ourselves, and of the weapons we wield, but for this assurance, that behind and beyond us and all our feeble instrumentalities, there is the power of Him in whose hand even the worm Jacob can become as a sharp threshing instrument, having the power to thresh the mountains, and beat them small. Relying on his Divine agency, we can therefore say to the most gigantic of obstacles to the progress and triumph of the truth, either in the heart, or in the world, "Who art thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain." For it is "not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts."

Does it not teach us, moreover, the terrible depth of the sinner's needs? Does it not proclaim his spiritual condition to be one that demands something higher than mere human remedies? Earthly physicians may do much to mitigate pain, relieve sickness, and restore the enfeebled and emaciated human frame to health, but one thing they cannot do, they cannot bring back life when it is gone. Let the vital spark be once extinguished in a human breast, they have no more power to rekindle it there than to create a world, and the doctrine of the Spirit assuredly teaches a similar truth concerning all who are "dead in trespasses and sins."

THE PENTECOSTAL AGENT.

Does it not teach us, also, the true source of the Church's power? that it is not in her wealth, nor her numbers, nor her powerful organisations, and eloquent ministers—important as these may be in their own sphere—but in the degree in which she is filled by the Spirit of God, and accompanied in all her efforts and service with his Divine presence and power. It is through want of this at the present day that in so many cases it is not the Church that is converting the world, but the world that is converting the Church. What can she be but feeble in her efforts, and crippled in her resources, and limited in her progress and triumphs, so long as there is so much in her divisions and jealousies, her dependence on outward forms and ceremonies, and her conformity to the world, to hinder the manifestations of the Spirit's presence in the midst of her, and the glorious forth-puttings of his almighty power. Think of Pentecost and of the thousands converted in one day. Think of the blessed times of revival which the Church of God has witnessed, when, under the baptism of the Holy Ghost, whole communities have been aroused to a sense of their sin, and their need of a Saviour. And were only a day to come that, throughout her whole extent, and through all her varied denominations, the Holy Spirit made her indeed his habitation, and her heart the throne of his power, so that all her movements became but the breathings of his Divine life within her, and all her enterprises and energies but the weapon in his mighty hand, who might not hope soon to see her mission accomplished, and the whole world through her instrumentality converted to God? Then should the mountain of the Lord's house be speedily established in the top of the mountains, and exalted above the hills, and all nations flow into it, and soon should "the knowledge of the Lord fill the earth as the waters cover the sea."

Does this not teach us above everything the necessity for fervent and believing prayer? Is it not to this that God referred when He said, "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." As expressing, therefore, the best and richest of blessings—the blessing that brings all other blessings in its train—life, peace, hope, holiness, qualification for every service, courage for every enterprise, grace for every trial, victory over death, and meetness for heaven: as involving prayer's strongest argument, its mightiest plea, its purest motive, and its highest aim, let the words be engraven on every heart, deeply, savingly, lastingly—

"I Believe in the Holy Ghost."

KENSINGTON TOWN HALL,

FRIDAY, MARCH 16.

[MORNING MEETING.]

Our Rule of Faith and Practice.

By Rev. Dr. ANGUS.

The subject I have undertaken to introduce, the Authority, the Sufficiency, the Inspiration of Scriptures as our rule of faith and practice, is of great moment. It is, indeed, vital. Deny it, and whence can we get our knowledge of God, of salvation, of Christian duty, of eternal life? The alternative is Popery or Rationalism, each man his own teacher and law, or the darkness of heathendom. Deny it, and everything is denied — God's method of forgiveness, of renewal, of holiness. In a sense, the subject includes all that is noblest and most blessed in the Gospel itself. If this foundation be destroyed, the whole Christian fabric will totter and fall.

And yet we are charged with the worship of a Book. Bibliolatry, it is said, is the weakness of Protestantism, though I believe it is our strength. The Book we believe to be the Book of God, the "God of Books," as one calls it. God, having spoken of old time unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us in his Son, in a sense the Divine Word, Scripture as the word being the utterance of the Divine love and righteousness: the Son, the Divine Word, the visible living form with unspeakably greater tenderness and power.

But the meaning of these statements needs to be made clear by explanation and examples. The New Testament is made up almost entirely of the teaching of the Lord Jesus Christ, of five of his Apostles, whom He commissioned to give his Gospel to the world, and of the Epistles of Paul. The Old Testament consists chiefly of the revelation given through Moses, the Holy Writings, including the Psalms and other books, and the Prophets. This double collection of three sets of books each make up nearly the whole volume

THE NEW TESTAMENT.

Let us begin with the New Testament. My statement is that in all the three parts we have the strongest assertion of the Divine authority of each. Take two Gospels as representing them all—Matthew and John. They contain together forty-nine chapters and one thousand nine hundred and forty verses, and of these one thousand nine hundred and forty verses, eleven hundred and forty verses were spoken by our Lord. They describe the purpose of his coming and the nature of his kingdom. They tell of the glory He had with God before the world was, and how men are to honour the Son even as they honour the Father. In his earliest recorded discourse, He describes the nature and the necessity of the new birth, speaks of the "exaltation," the lifting up that awaits Him. By and by He speaks more plainly, and shows how He must suffer and give his life a substitutionary ransom for many, his blood being shed for the remission of sins. God's love and righteousness are again and again revealed, and again and again men are warned to flee from the wrath to come. He that believeth is saved. He that will not believe—the wrath of God abideth on him. All this, the very essence of the Gospel, is taught by our Lord again and again, while He asserts in various forms the Divinity of his mission and his authority in the world and in the Church.

Mark how our Lord describes his teaching—"If God were your Father," said He to the Jews, "ye would love Me: for I came forth and am come from God; for neither have I come of Myself, but He sent Me" (John viii. 42). "My teaching is not mine, but his that sent Me" (John vii. 16). "The words I speak unto you I speak not from myself. Believe Me that I am in my Father, and the Father in Me" (John xiv. 10, 11). And again, addressing the Father, He says, "The words which thou gavest Me, I have given them, and they have known of a truth that I came forth from thee" (John xvii. 8). His words abiding in us are life and holiness. We give, therefore, to the words Christ spoke the authority Christ claimed for them. And though we do not speak of them as inspired, any more than we speak of the Decalogue as inspired, each coming direct from God Himself, we regard them all as Divine. Lord Jesus, to whom can we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life. Nor less emphatic is the claim put forth by Paul. As the Apostle of the Gentiles, his authority was questioned, and, therefore, he vindicated it in the strongest terms. One advantage of the opposition he encountered is that we have learnt from his case what inspired authority meant, and how all the Apostles claimed it. "Paul, an apostle, not from man, nor through man, but through Jesus Christ and God the Father." Such is his title (Gal. i. 1). "For," adds he, "I received (the Gospel) not from man, nor was it taught me, but it came to me through the revelation of Jesus Christ" (Gal. i. 12), "We speak God's wisdom...revealed to us through the Spirit; not in words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Spirit teacheth" (1 Cor. ii. 6, 10, 13). The Gospel, therefore, he preached was to be received not as the word of man, but (as it is in truth) as the Word of God, which also worketh effectually in all that believe (1 Thess. ii. 13). These claims he makes for himself, only that he may be not a whit behind other Apostles, and so makes it also for them. He makes it, moreover, for what he writes as well as for what he speaks, and he repeats his claim in nine, at least, of his Epistles, and in some of them (notably in 1 and 2 Corinthians and in Galatians) he repeats it again and again.

CHRIST'S COMMISSION.

To five of the Apostles who have written books in the New Testament Christ gave commission to publish his Gospel to the world; and promised them, on four different occasions, the presence of the Holy Spirit, who was to recall to their remembrance what He Himself had taught, and to guide men into all the truth. After his resurrection He renewed and extended the promise (Matt. xxviii. 18—20; Acts i. 14). To the five this promise was fulfilled; the Lord working with them, and confirming the word by the signs which followed (Mark xvi. 20), and the good news, the Gospel which they proclaimed, was proclaimed in and by the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. So Peter defines and affirms the facts (1 Pet. i. 22).

I am not now dealing with the evidence of these claims. I am dealing only with the fact that all the teachers of the New Testament make theirs. But I may add that the claims are vindicated by all the evidence which supports the truth of the Gospel itself. Christ's mighty works, the signs of Apostles, were seen wherever they went. The Master and the disciples alike gave themselves to the cultivation and practice of holiness. Their lives they laid down in attestation of their sincerity and truthfulness; and multitudes, through the Spirit, became obedient to the faith. Whatever evidence there is, in short, of the truth of the Gospel is evidence of the Divine authority of these first teachers. They claimed it, and there is no middle place between the recognition of this claim, and the alternative that they were deceivers and not true.

THE OLD TESTAMENT.

The Divine authority of the Old Testament is best proved in our times from the teaching of our Lord and his Apostles. They accept as authoritative the books whose authority the Jews had accepted, and they ascribe them, in various ways and in many passages, to the Holy Ghost or to God. They speak of the rites and symbols of Judaism as intended by the Holy Ghost to set forth evangelical facts and truths; as they speak of the facts of Jewish history, and of the lives of good and bad men, as rich in moral and spiritual lessons. They reason again and again from single words and expressions, and quote all as intended by the Spirit to have such meanings and uses. All Scripture being inspired of God is also profitable for instruction in righteousness. No prophecy ever came by the will of man, but men spake from God, being moved by the Holy Ghost (2 Pet. i. 21).

Such are emphatically the claims of the Old Testament as described by our Lord, by Peter, and Paul. Like claims are put forth and vindicated by the Old Testament writers themselves. But the short and easy proof of their claims is the authority and example of our Lord and his Apostles. The Gospel is the completion of the Law, and both are from God.

The inspiration of Scripture is another mode of describing the theme I have been discussing. It adds to the authority and sufficiency of Scripture a statement of the way in which authority and sufficiency were given to it. "Men spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." All Scripture is "God-inspired." Externally, through study of facts and records, under Divine guidance, by visions and direct utterances, the full meaning of which the prophets themselves did not always understand, God revealed his will. Internally, the Spirit trained and instructed them, and they sought to know what the Spirit that was in them did signify. Large portions of the Psalms and of the Epistles are traceable to this gracious work of the Spirit in the hearts of those who believed. The Psalms often record the personal experience of the writers. Paul, the writer of the Romans, passed through a spiritual training that made the teaching of that Epistle in the highest degree clear and precious to him. The disciple whom Jesus loved is the disciple who has written most of love both in his Gospel and in his Epistles—just as the evangelists first witnessed the things they saw, and then described them.

This gracious preparation of men's hearts to write experimentally of what they were instructed to teach does not lessen the work of the Spirit in them. It augments and ennobles it. The fact that they knew whom they believed, and really felt the truths they teach, adds to the naturalness, and, in a sense, even to the authority of their teaching.

THE ONLY POSSIBLE RULE.

The Authority, the Sufficiency, the Inspiration of Scripture, the rule of our practice and faith. My theme includes another point—the sufficiency of Holy Scripture. It is not only a rule of faith and practice, it is the rule. It contains all that is necessary to our salvation and holiness. What cannot be proved from it is no matter of faith, but, at most, of opinion. Nor can we accept any new revelation as from God unless it come supported by the same miraculous evidence which proved and vindicated the old.

We need and use our reason to investigate its evidence and to ascertain its meaning. We use the teaching of learned and spiritual men whom God has taught. Above all we seek the guidance and teaching of the Holy Ghost, the lessons of a loving and devout heart. But each of these helps we use with caution. Reason may become Rationalism, which interprets truth only to deny it. The teaching of good men may become mere human tradition, and even the experience of a devout heart may lead to mysticism or prove a delusive spirit. No one of these helps, nor all combined can be regarded as of co ordinate authority. They are not parts of the inspired law, they only help to expound it. To follow them when they contradict the Bible is to deny it. To follow them when they add to it is to admit another revelation, and so to add to God's words, and to make them our guide when they agree with it is to rest our obedience on the wisdom of man rather than on the truth of God. Use them all, especially the loving and devout heart, only remember that it is to the law and to the testimony we are to make our final appeal. Studied with holy simplicity and humble teachableness, the Bible is the Divine means whereby men are led by the Spirit into all the truth.

The Sufficiency of Scripture.

The Old Testament is the revelation of God to Abraham, to Moses, to Psalmists, and prophets—a continued revelation, extending over 2000 years. Every part of it was a light shining in a dark place! By it, as we know, thousands believed and were saved; and such characters were formed as Heb. xi. describes. The earlier portions of it enlightened the eyes, converted the souls, and rejoiced the hearts of multitudes; and the later portions give lessons on God's character and government, and even on the work of our Lord, hardly inferior to the fuller disclosures of the New Testament. The Bereans examined it, and therefore they believed. From a child Timothy had been taught it, and he became wise unto salvation, and his profiting appeared unto all. How often have we wished to spend a day with Christ, to hear the gracious words that proceeded from his lips! How often have we wished that we could have been present when for the first time one of Paul's letters was read to the Church he addressed! Now, through the New Testament, we know more of the teaching and spirit of our Master than any one disciple knew; and we read, not one of Paul's Epistles, but at least thirteen of them—the entire library which was provided for a dozen churches. The whole circle of truth and duty, as revealed and applied, is ours. We know all that was known by the Churches of Asia, and Italy, and Greece. And, if Old Testament believers had reason to chant the 19th Psalm, and the 119th, in praise of only a portion of the sacred books, what shall our song be, to whom all these revelations have come, with the added teaching of the ever-living Christ, and the added influences of Pentecost, and of the dispensation of the Holy Spirit.

CLOSING SUGGESTIONS.

Let me mark, in closing, two or three lessons suggested by this theme.

(1) Let me repeat, with renewed emphasis, the warning with which I began: the question of the Divine authority of the teaching of our Lord, of Paul, and of the other Apostles, is vital. If they have not spoken with Divine authority, there is for us no Divine revelation on earth. The very revelation they profess to give, noble as it seems, is rendered untrustworthy by the claims they make. None has come to tell us of heavenly things.

No provision has been made for forgiveness. The great and precious promises of the Gospel are of human origin only, and cannot sustain or sanctify us. Every religious feeling, every virtue, all practical benevolence, the hopes that strengthen us in struggling against sin, and give us peace in dying—all of which are maintained as Christians know by those views of God and Christ which his Word gives—all must cease. The very light in us is darkness: how great must the darkness be!

(2) All the weapons of the Gospel are defensive except one; the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation, the breastplate of righteousness—all are defensive. The one aggressive weapon is the sword of the Spirit, the Word of God! Master it, use it in your individual life and in your church work. Use it and you will conquer. Be mighty in the Scriptures and full of the Holy Ghost and the tempter will flee from you; nor shall any be able to withstand your reasonings and appeals.

(3) Free yourselves from the cant of our modern unbelief, that the work of the Bible is over, that the Book itself is effete, and that it fails to meet the difficulties or even to define the duties of our modern civilisation. All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man, modern culture included, as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, the flower falleth away, but the Word of the Lord endureth for ever, which Word is by the Gospel preached unto you. Let man catch its spirit and apply its principles, and there are no modern social difficulties it cannot solve, no new duties it cannot explain and enforce.

(4) The want of our times, in the higher department of theology, is the profounder and the simpler study of our Bibles. We often go beyond Scripture in our explanations. We still oftener fall short of it in our beliefs. Let us say all it says, and no more, and let us believe all we say. The result will be clearer light, more reverent knowledge, larger usefulness, and more complete evangelical fellowship. I cannot expand these thoughts; I can only suggest them as appropriate to my theme to this gathering of the Evangelical Alliance, and to the needs of our age.

Christ the Propitiation.

By Rev. E. A. STUART.

It is commonly said that the Pauline age is passing away, and the Johannine age about to dawn. On that account I am glad that it is in the writings of John himself that Christ is twice spoken of with great distinctiveness as the propitiation for our sins. Not that it may for a moment be supposed that the teaching of Paul was pure dogma, for he has plainly set before us that the fruits of the Spirit are love, joy, peace, and so forth; and in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, by his panegyric on love, he has shown us that he is not one whit behind in spiritual life. Let us consider, first, the need of propitiation; secondly, the method; and, thirdly, the result.

The necessity for propitiation arises from the fact of separation having taekn place between God and man through sin. This separation concerns not only man but God, and therefore there is a Divine as well as a human necessity for a propitiation. We believe, not only in a subjective atonement, but in an objective one. Some tell us that it was only needful for fear to be removed from man, and that wrath had not to be removed from God. We thoroughly believe that God is love, and unchangeable love, and that no sacrifice was required to induce Him to do that which He was previously unwilling to do. At the same time, we maintain that the Son is as loving as the Father, and that there is no variance between them as to justice and holiness. Further, we declare that the love of God is the antecedent cause of the propitiation of our Lord Jesus Christ. In fact, Christ died for us because God loved the world. But the attributes of God were, so to speak, put out of harmony by man's sin. If things had been normal, love, justice, and holiness would have flowed forth, but when sin came in, neither justice nor holiness was met. Therefore, propitiation was necessary for the reconciliation of mercy and truth, for the bringing together of righteousness and peace. It is only at the cross of Christ that these things meet together. Love always implies anger, and it is because God loved man that He was angry at the coming-in of sin. The heathen had an idea of a jealous God, but no idea of the world being under the wrath of God, because they had no conception of a God of love. Justice must be satisfied, holiness must be inculcated, and God's love must be drawn forth, before the sinner could be restored to God's favour. In the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ this problem is solved.

As to the means by which the propitiation could be effected, we observe that it must be by condemning sin, and by entirely putting away this interrupting principle. "In his own body He bare our sins upon the tree." To do that, Christ must be God as well as man. If we deny his Divinity, we can make nothing of the atonement, or substitutionary work of Christ. "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself." Christ's humanity made propitiation possible; his Deity made it efficacious. I believe that, before the beginning of the world, Christ was the slain Lamb. By virtue of the eternal covenant between Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, He has the right to be cur Representative. Before the creation He made Himself responsible for his creation. Observe how, in the Epistle to the Colossians (i. 14—17), creation and redemption are placed in juxtaposition.

The result of this propitiation may be summed up in the word "gratitude." In this the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ differs from all others. Every other religion is a servitude —a trying to pay a debt. Our religion is one of thankfulness because the debt is paid.

As for the righteousness of the believer, I believe that it is the overlooking of that old-fashioned truth of justification by faith, which leads to many of the errors of the present day. There is a great difference between justification and pardon. The soul that has accepted pardon through our Lord Jesus Christ will very soon begin to realise that it wants a character in which it may stand in the presence of a holy God. Not only has the death of our Lord Jesus Christ provided a pardon for our sins, but his perfect fulfilling of God's law has provided a righteousness, clothed in which we may stand in the very presence-chamber of God. "Not having our own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith." The hymn puts it well: "Jesus thy blood [for pardon] and righteousness [for character]; my beauty are, my glorious dress."

Truth as related to Spiritual Life.

By Rev. W. FULLER GOOCH.

God has been pleased to give to man a tripartite nature, which is, in 1 Thess. v. 23, set forth as "spirit, soul, and body," not body, soul, and spirit, as it is generally put, but in the true order of precedence. The spirit, first, as man's highest element of being; the soul, or intellectual faculty, second; and the body, the material environment of both, last. The spiritual predominates in every case where the Divine order is observed, and spiritual life is life in its highest and chiefest form. Apart from its possession, man is represented in Scripture as dead—"dead in trespasses and sins." The great distinction between the true Church of God and the world, the saved and the unsaved, is found in this, that the former are quickened by the Holy Ghost into newness of life, are regenerated, and have "passed from death unto life," while the latter abide in spiritual and judicial death. That which is instrumental, therefore, in producing spiritual life is from every point of view of deepest moment and of priceless value.

We cannot too earnestly assert that when we speak of fundamental truth, we do not mean truth which is essential to any particular party, creed, or form of Church government. All possessed of spiritual life meet in reference to major points on common ground, and even though it may not be that all pronounce the same Shibboleth, or cast their forms of expression in the same mould, yet all in heart set seal to truths which, affecting the salvation of the soul and its communion with God, are fundamental and supreme.

SPIRITUAL LIFE NO CHIMERA.

In dealing with our theme, we would first remark that spiritual life is a fact which can only be accounted for and explained by the truths which we call fundamental. That spiritual life as a distinct experience, and as a powerful factor in the history of mankind, is a fact, not a chimera or enthusiastic dream, is indubitably proved by the annals of the Christian Church from its commencement until now. Spite of all the defects and blots which mark the records of Christianity, as developed in the character of its adherents, there remains so large a residuum of truest sainthood, and noblest triumph over the flesh and sin, as well as of deeds and impulses born not of man but of God, that it is impossible to deny the constant flow through all the ages of a stream which, traced to its earliest consciousness as a Christian experience, finds expression in the words, "I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life that I now live in the flesh is a life of faith on the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me." But such a life is only possible on certain conditions, and in the presence of certain facts. For instance, how can it be explained apart from the sacred Scriptures, which find one of their most powerful proofs of Divine origin and authority in the answer of man's heart and conscience to their revelations of sin and holiness, of salvation and of grace? Further, spiritual life is asserted in Scripture to be only possible where there is vital union with Christ: "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." But here, again, we are confronted with the whole mystery of the incarnation, life, death, and resurrection of our Lord, the fact of spiritual life necessitating the whole. This is equally true of the work of the Holy Spirit. Man has no power to quicken himself into spiritual life, nor can this life be produced by aught but a power Divine. "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one." If, therefore, this life is possessed at all, it must have been begotten of the Holy Spirit, even as it is written: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

Secondly, we remark that spiritual life depends for its origin upon fundamental truth. Thus is its awakenment within the soul accounted for. "Of his own will begat He us with the Word of truth." "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible by the Word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever." That Word is said to be "the Word of life"; it is in its nature "quick and powerful"; its contents are "lively oracles"; they are "spirit and life." The whole Gospel record is written that we "might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing, we might have life through his name." Spiritual life is ever preceded by conviction of sin, accompanied by faith in the redeeming work of Christ, and rejoices to acknowledge its indebtedness to the Holy Spirit for its origination and production in the heart.

SPIRITUAL PROGRESSION.

Thirdly, we again remark that spiritual life is incapable of development and sustentation apart from fundamental truth. We might appeal for proof of this to the sad decline of spiritual power which has accompanied and followed the present widespread decline in reference to evangelical faith. Apostasy from the truth necessitates experimental as well as practical decay. The only point of contact between the soul and God is found in the risen Christ. If the spirit's hold on Him is loosened, the whole fabric of communion totters to its fall. Spiritual life is evidenced by a faith which works by love. Once let that faith be shaken, and truth becomes ignored, or loosely held, love grows cold, the fire within burns low; and smouldering embers, or at best a flickering flame, is seen, where aforetime the genial glow of spiritual fervour lit up and gladdened the soul. Hence the force of our Lord's own words: "Abide in Me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in Me." And again: "If ye abide in Me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." The rule of spiritual progression is: "As new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the Word, that ye may grow thereby." Neglect the study of the Scriptures, and spiritual life cannot develop; its most essential nutriment is lacking.

Fourthly, spiritual life cannot answer its appointed end, or fill its sphere in the outer world apart from fundamental truth. The purpose of God in the regeneration of a soul is not simply its own blessing and blessedness, but the advantage of others. The glory of the Divine name is the fruit brought forth. It needs not that we be logicians, subtle disputants, or skilled controversialists, in order to fulfil the functions of our spiritual position as made alive in Christ, but it is a positive necessity that the truth of God be in us, his Word our guide, his salvation our joy, his Spirit our personal and abiding Paraclete. There shall be no lack of power if our feet are found in the way of the Divine testimonies; we shall walk at large while we keep God's precepts.

NO SURRENDER.

Lastly, let us remark that spiritual life is dependent for its joy, its inspiring influence, upon fundamental truth. One who knew much in olden time of its power has said, "Thy statutes have been my song in the house of my pilgrimage." The angel of the Lord declared to the wondering shepherds on Bethlehem's plain that the message of Christ was "glad tidings of great joy"; and is it not so, that wherever the Gospel of the grace of God exerts its power, there joy attends its course? But the joy comes from those truths which modern thought most obscures and disavows. Shall we reject the plenary inspiration of the Scriptures, and in their place accept the shifting forms of human thought; leave the place of lowly confession, and exchange the spirit of contrition for that of self-righteous confidence, in view of the vaunted dignity of man; regard the Cross of Christ as a moral influence, and an example of self-sacrifice, rather than as a vicarious offering for sin, and a substitution of the Just for the unjust; lower the Divine person of our Lord to the level of a merely perfect man; lay aside the robe of our Saviour's perfect righteousness for the filthy rags of our own doings; and, instead of the communion of the Holy Ghost as that of a living, personal Friend, substitute an influence or a negation? Never! Spiritual life needs it all, clings to it all, refuses to part with aught so vital to its own existence.

Never was it more essential than now that would-be champions of the truth should be filled with the Spirit of God, baptized, suffused with the Holy Spirit. Heated words, bitter strife, brilliant repartee, intolerant zeal, are carnal weapons, wholly unsuited for the spiritual warrior, or the holy war. "Our weapons are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds."

The Consequences of Sin.

By Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.

The subject entrusted to me, as it appears in the body of the syllabus, is broader than I propose to undertake. "The entrance of sin into the world: its extent and its consequences," is too large a subject to deal with in the short time at my disposal, and so I shall confine myself to the third branch, "The consequences of sin," announced in another part of the syllabus as "everlasting punishment." Upon this alone was I invited to speak. In the Word of God it is clearly stated that sin entered into the world by the craft of Satan working upon Adam and Eve. Sin brought death as its consequence, and death passed upon all men, irrespective of their position, irrespective of their circumstances or their works, because "through the offence of one many died." The extent of the consequences being universal, it is perfectly clear that, if men are to be delivered therefrom, and God Himself is to be "clear when judged," universal provision must be made for man's need, and the sons of Adam must be placed in such a position that God may be both just and the justifier of those who have been ungodly; some provision must be made for their guilt, and yet some retribution for their evil; and, a satisfaction having been found, they must be so conditioned that they may be received again into their Maker's favour. This we believe was accomplished in Jesus Christ: and yet we believe that men may be eternally punished for resisting the offers which God has made.

Now, in speaking on the solemn subject of what we believe to be the penal effects or consequences of sin—namely, everlasting punishment—I do feel that I need the sympathy of my hearers more perhaps than any of my brethren who will be called upon to speak afterwards on more engaging themes.

Let me refer you to two passages of Scripture, namely, 1 Peter iv. 17, in which appear the words, "What shall the end be of them that obey not the Gospel of God?" and to Luke xii. 58, 59, which says: "When thou goest with thine adversary to the magistrate, as thou art in the way, give diligence that thou mayest be delivered from him; lest he hale thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and the officer cast thee into prison. I tell thee, thou shalt not depart thence, till thou hast paid the very last mite."

God is love. So our Scriptures tell us. I am told, however, that when Mohammedans enter a kiosk where the Word of God is being sold, seeing a motto setting forth that God is love, they immediately turn round to the colporteurs and say, "That's a lie!" We should marvel, I think, if anyone amongst ourselves openly dared to contravene such a statement; yet, however unintentionally, this is just what is being done by declarations made on every hand at the present time. Men dare not word it, as the Mohammedans do, and say "That's a lie!" when we affirm that God is love; but nevertheless, in effect or by counter-affirmation, those who object to the Gospel make this very declaration. One would, indeed, have thought that after eighteen centuries of preaching it would not have been needful for anyone in a Christian country like our own, to speak in justification of God; one would have thought that the creature proposing to defend the Creator would have been absolutely out of place amongst such a people as ourselves. Yet, I fear that, with all our lights and opportunities, one great charge upon Gospel ministers at the present day seems to be to clear the character of God, if possible; not by argument, which would be only a human effort, but by a removal of errors which have gathered round the utterances of men concerning God's holy truth, and then by positive affirmations from the Word of God, to show what the Scriptures really contain.

If we endeavour to discover the consequences of sin by looking into our Lord's words, as recorded by St. Luke, we shall see that the passage is full of imagery. If we attempt to explain it, perhaps we are justified in saying that it gives us some such idea as this: While we are in the way with our adversary the Law, to appear before Almighty God, who is described as the Magistrate, we must take care to be delivered from that Law, lest we be brought before our Lord Jesus Christ as our Judge, who would deliver us to the officer—the angels; and they would take us and cast us into prison, by which we should understand the place of punishment, "hell." If once we be cast into it we should never come forth from that awful place, until we have paid the very last mite; which must mean, of course, till we have made actual atonement for, and compensation for, every sin that we have committed since we were called into existence. Such being the imagery, we may well ask ourselves, what is really the common idea, and the common declaration, concerning these things, as supposed to be put forward by "orthodox" preachers? The affirmation concerning the ordinary evangelical preacher is, that while describing eternal life as the free gift of God, he yet limits the provision to an exceeding few; Calvinists declaring that God intended the salvation of a small number only, and Arminians, while throwing the doors open more widely in appearance, restricting God's mercies to those who consciously accept them. On both sides, then, while on the one hand it appears that the Gospel of Christ is offered to all men, we are generally represented as preaching that as only a few accept Christ, only a few can be saved; and that all except those who believe in Christ will be consigned hereafter, irrespective of their position or condition in this world, irrespective of their age or their light, irrespective of their opportunities or their action, to a state of everlasting distress and anguish, which is only described, physically as torment and fire; only described, mentally and spiritually, as remorse, bitterness, and gnashing of teeth. In fact, the condition has been regarded as one that could only be pictured by piling up expressions displaying the most utter torture, mental and spiritual, through all the ages of eternity. Such is the declaration made with regard to us, and then the challenge is boldly thrown out to us: Can a God, who consigns his creatures to such torment throughout eternity, be described as a God of love in any sense?

Our first question is, Is the matter so described in God's Word. Again we ask, Is it so in the preaching of those who hold the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ? And we declare that not one syllable of such an awful creed as that is to be found in God's Holy Book, and I do not know a single man who would dare to give expression to such sentences as if they emanated from God in heaven. We meet the charge with a direct negative at the outset. Our next step is to inquire from whence such a creed as this can possibly have sprung. We find that it never sprang from men who knew the full, free Gospel of salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ in its totality. It originated with the fathers, and is found in the writings of Origen and Augustine; and from Augustine it is commonly thought originated the idea that infants who have not been baptized and received into the Church would be damned to all eternity. From that time the creed developed and increased in width, because it was found productive of prosperity to those who undertook to deliver men from perdition. As the power of the Romish Church increased, and the darkness of her influence spread over the world, this doctrine proved an exceedingly paying one; the creed was gladly accepted as the real teaching of God's Word, and all those who were not in the pale of the Church and absolved at the hour of departure, were said to go to everlasting destruction, whatever that might mean, unless their souls were delivered by the powers of the Church. Holding the keys of hell as well as heaven, the ecclesiastics affirmed that no one could be let loose without some provision being made to meet the case. Hence arose the doctrine of purgatory, to which of course was speedily added the belief that by paying sufficiently people could secure the release of relatives and friends from misery, and their entrance into eternal bliss. This creed respecting future punishment grew in force and horrors as men lost all Scriptural knowledge, and by the utterances of half-educated monks and priests, until at length hell became an absolutely material condition, in which men were throughout eternity frizzled and fried, and subjected to exquisite torture of body and soul—in pain, without a door of hope; in darkness, without a ray of light.

But the moment the Reformation commenced, and God began to give light to the nations, we see the dawn of a glorious deliverance from the dark bondage put upon them by Rome. The first thing made clear was the glorious truth concerning God's provision in Christ Jesus. Romans v. in the mouth of Luther, as well as Romans vi. and viii., became magnificent manifestations of God's universal love. "As by the offence of one, judgment," &c. (Rom. v. 18), God has made a provision equal to, yea, exceeding, the loss sustained through the sin of Adam. In the person of Christ there was provision made for all the disease, as well as all the sin that had come upon humanity through the Fall. At length men came to understand the fulness of God's love and power—that the Lord Jesus had been "made a curse for us," that through Him the curse had passed from humanity—been borne away, as the scapegoat took it of old. It was seen that Christ took the sinner's place, that, as shown in John iii. 14, 15, and 2 Cor. v. 21, He had "become sin" on behalf of the human race, and had redeemed the race from the curse and the effects of sin. The light of this glorious provision at once swept away all that figment concerning the harshness and the cruelty of God, who had been represented as punishing all his creatures simply because Adam had fallen long ages before. Then came another manifestation of truth—the willingness of God to accept everyone who would accept the Gospel, every one who would believe into God's dear Son; so that, wheresoever there was an exercise of simple faith, man was changed into a condition in which, in God's sight, he took the place of his perfect Son, and was made the very righteousness of God in Christ Jesus our Lord. Such was the doctrine that came when Luther began to preach the Gospel of justification. But still there lingered among men an awful figment concerning hell; and, while the provisions of God were announced as being so perfect, there still clung the idea that, whenever men did pass into hell, they would go into such a condition as their forefathers had been preaching.

But God gives us to-day educational advantages, as well as the spiritual revelation found in his Book. In the enlightened age in which we live, man's thoughtful mind has refused to bow down to the dark traditions of the ancient fathers, and the revulsion of feeling has produced a literature widely spread; very reverent (in some cases), and exceedingly interesting; in others flippant, but, on the whole, a literature demanding great attention; and, for this reason, that the instinct of an enlightened mind revolts against the material hell of the fathers of the Roman Church, and men are yearning for light concerning this subject. When we look for a manifestation of this feeling, we find at least five different schools of thought,—different from what is called "orthodoxy"—although, God forbid that what I have described should be regarded any longer as the orthodox belief.

The first of these views is known as "Life in Christ." It was set forth by an earnest and devoted writer forty years ago. It holds that there is no immortality inherent in man, and, if men do not receive Christ, they ultimately pass into a condition of annihilation, and are lost as beings for ever and ever. According to this view, everlasting punishment means an absolute destruction of being for ever, and this is for those who are not vitally, and by faith, united to God's dear Son.

The second view is known as "Eternal Hope." In it we are led to think that the great majority of men—all, in fact, but a very few saints;—all who have lived in sin and are not assuredly saved and sanctified, will pass into a purgatory, or place in which they will undergo a what is termed "æonial pruning." The end will be the translation of those souls—that is, nearly the whole of the human race, into the glory of God, because the æonial pruning has done what the offers of salvation on earth failed to do. The expounder of this view practically yields the point in dispute by admitting that almost certainly those who determinedly and obstinately refuse God's offers of mercy will be doomed to everlasting pain and suffering. It becomes merely a question of numbers in meeting this view!

The third view makes annihilation absolute as soon as the soul passes from the body, for all who are not savingly united to Christ.

The fourth view is known as the Christadelphian, which appears to be, in some respects, distinct from, though so closely resembling, the doctrine of conditional immortality. The Christadelphian deems it right and just that sinners should be punished for sins committed while here below, and that while on passing from earth they cease to exist absolutely (because they are not united to the Lord Jesus Christ), yet God will recreate them at the day of judgment, in order that He may inflict punishment in proportion to the measure of guilt. This appears to involve a charge, against God, of incomprehensible cruelty!

The fifth view is, of course, the most pleasing of all, and is known as the "Restitution of all things." According to this view, not only will all men who accept the Lord Jesus Christ on earth be translated into the everlasting joy of the kingdom of God, but, hereafter, by some process which is hardly defined, all those who have known even the depths of depravity will gradually be purged and exalted to God's kingdom, actually including Satan himself.

Such are briefly, the doctrinal developments of those who have expressed diverse views on this subject. Now, as I read that blessed passage in Rom. v., and many others corresponding to it in purport, I find that the provision of God is complete for the race, and the righteousness of Christ is also complete; God has made such provision that all might be saved if only the Gospel could be made known and be accepted by them, and all who do not consciously reject it are really placed in a position of acceptance before God. [At this point the speaker was told that he had only five minutes more, and at once he had to drop the chief threads of his argument.] Let us consider, that more than half the human creation, as I have heard, die before they reach the age of five years. Therefore, if God's provision is perfect for all the human race, and if God has put the righteousness of Christ to our credit, so that it can only be taken away from us through our knowingly and consciously sinning and refusing the provision God has made, it follows that more than half the creation passes at once into the Kingdom of God, because dying in infancy, and not having knowingly and wilfully rejected the provision that is made in Christ Jesus, they are accepted before God through the atonement of Christ. At once we sweep away that foul accusation that God hurls unconscious babes and infants into everlasting damnation and pains of hell.

Secondly, let us remark that God never speaks of the heathen as if He intended to punish them except in proportion to their sinning against light. From Romans ii. and Luke xii., &c., we judge that God's punishment will be proportionate to man's sin—those who have rejected much light will receive many stripes, and to those who have had little light few stripes will be administered.

Thirdly, we know that all who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ will pass to God's right hand in glory.

To recapitulate, we may safely say that if infants are saved, and they form half the creation; if the heathen, by far the larger portion of the race, are to be judged according to their light; and if all believers go into everlasting joy through our Lord Jesus Christ, then, at least, one great argument (viz., that of numbers) has been swept away altogether from those who oppose the really orthodox view.

We are left to deal only with the case of those who, having received the offer of salvation in some sense or other, whatever that may be, according to the measure of their light have wilfully turned away their ear from the Gospel, and despised the grace of God. Of such men as these what can we say? What but that God, having made full provision, having offered to men that which is a token of his highest love and goodness, must deal with them upon the basis of their rejection and determined refusal of his offers of mercy? It is not of God's purpose that any man is lost or is found outside the bounds of his grace and glory; but if men decline the offer God makes to them in Christ, if they wilfully refuse the mercies of God, I cannot see how there can be in the world to come, even arguing on the ground of reason, any further hope; for they are simply abandoned to their own determined perdition.

If, however, we turn to the passages of God's Holy Word, which deal with this subject, we see what God has plainly revealed. We find two sets of passages, both very distinct. One set of passages makes use of the word "death"; it is often spoken of as if it meant annihilation by those who would overthrow the doctrine of everlasting punishment. It never can mean annihilation; it only means separation. It means separation of parts, separation from a person, separation of the spirit from the body, separation from those we love in position or condition; that is all it can ever mean. Secondly, death is not spoken of as the punishment of sin, but as one of the penal consequences of sin. That being so, where there is sin, there is separation from God; and it is only as separation from God can be obviated by a removal of sin that there can be a bestowment of the life which is offered in Christ Jesus our Lord. "Whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." Where God deals with infants or heathen, there is a provision for the bestowment of life in the Lord Jesus Christ, in whose person death has been swept away, so that no man is now sent to everlasting death, or the everlasting consequences of sin, except he has rejected the gracious offer of God made to him. When you read in the Book of Revelation of "the smoke of their torment ascending for ever and ever," and in the Second Epistle to the Thessalonians of "everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord," you should consider the context, and you would see that this is the punishment of those who have wilfully and determinedly come forward, in an anti-Christian spirit, against the Lord Jesus Christ.

The second set of passages uses the word "destruction." Now there are ten Greek words which in the New Testament are translated "destruction," of which only four are concerning the fate of the wicked, viz., the words olethros, apôleia, apollumi, and katargeô. Not one of these words, however, nor others which are found in the New Testament, means annihilation, or anything which we can regard as the destruction of existence. The word aiônios, rendered "everlasting," and "eternal," occurs seventy-one times in the New Testament, and has been much disputed. We are even told that it is a misrepresentation to bring it forward and say that it means "everlasting" or "eternal." I can only say, however, that long before "Eternal Hope" was put before the world the matter had been fully considered, and we had been told that the word had its origin in the two words aei ôn, which signify "ever being."

The word must, then, mean everlasting, in the deepest sense, whether employed in reference to God Himself, to the saints, or to the lost—as lengthened an existence as is possible for the subject of the sentence in which it is used. There has been much misapprehension of the word, but I may not stay to explain. Years ago, a person holding the Christadelphian view, which I have set forth, told me that aiônios could not set forth the everlastingness of God; only the word aïdios could do that, and that that word was only used once in the New Testament (viz., Rom. i. 20) to express "the eternity of God!" I acknowledged my fault in being ignorant of this. But a few days later, remembering the statement, I was reading the Epistle of Jude in the Greek Testament, and I there found (ver. 6) that the fallen angels were reserved en aïdiois desmois—"in everlasting chains" under darkness, unto the day of judgment. Men say that the chains only last to the day of judgment; but surely the passage seems plainly to mean "reserved in everlasting chains for the judgment that will take place on that day;" but that this does not in any way remove the chains.

While my heart aches to close with words that seem to take hope from any soul, yet from the depths of conviction, gained through many years study of this painful subject, I feel that men deceive themselves and their brethren, injure the cause of the Gospel, and are likely to bring multitudes down to everlasting destruction, whatever is meant by that term, if they attempt to overthrow the simple truth of God's Word that some "go away into everlasting punishment," and that that means pain (as well as loss) "for ever and ever." Men make new translations and additions to Scripture; they give "reason and conscience" a place side by side with God's revelation, and thus put another authority on a par with the Bible. That authority they follow, and make paramount. Listen to the consequences: A man stood face to face with me, a worldling. I have had others very nearly say the same, but only he said these words: "I have found from the writings of a learned Canon, a far greater gun than you in the Church, that if I do sin ever so greatly there is an eternal hope for me in the world to come; and I tell you plainly that if it means millions of years I am ready to go into whatever that damnation means for the sake of enjoying my pleasures now, and all your preaching won't touch me, for I tell you the Canon is bigger than you. I intend to sin, and take the consequences, for I know now that I shall be saved at last." This man sadly misrepresented the writer, but see what may result from the careless reading of such books. "What shall the end be of them that obey not the Gospel of God?" I say, "Take heed whilst thou art in the way with thine adversary, and be delivered from him." Believe in God's Son, who died to show that God is love, and be saved by Him, for if ever a man does get into that prison, he shall never come out until he has "paid the very last mite."

Christ's Atoning Work.

By Rev. H. BATCHELOR.

I have to say a few words on the Lord Jesus Christ as the propitiation for sin. We all know that death is the penalty of transgression. Christ had no personal sins to die for. A perfect and spotless life has been claimed for no one besides Christ in the history of the world. Christ truly died for others—died that others might live. Our Lord's death was vicarious and substitutionary.

These are not speculations, but plain, palpable realities from the pages of the Divine record. The sole reason that so many refuse to believe in the vicarious sacrifice is that they do not like the doctrine, and they will not have it. They have taken up in relation to our Lord's redeeming sacrifice a position precisely similar to that taken up by the Pharisees of old against a suffering Messiah. Unless our Lord and Saviour suffered in our stead, how shocking that one who never sinned should undergo the extreme penalty for sin? We are, indeed, obliged to ask—Where was God? If our Lord did not die for our transgressions, what a discouragement to loyalty and virtue is offered in his cross? The only Sinless One was stricken down! Who would dare to walk in his footsteps with this portentous spectacle before him? But these terrible spectres all flee when we remember his own words: "It is written that the Christ should suffer, and rise again the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations."

In view of the spectacle on the Mount of Transfiguration when our Lord conversed with Moses the giver of the law, and Elijah the prophet, concerning "the decease which He was to accomplish at Jerusalem," we are constrained to accept St. Paul's statement that Christ "died for our sins according to the Scriptures." The significance of our Lord's death is strikingly shown or proclaimed in the memorial Supper. It is not the incarnation, it is not the stainless example, that the Church commemorates in that ordinance; not our Lord's miracles, nor his long-suffering endurance during his public ministry, nor indeed his resurrection and ascension followed by the descent of the Holy Spirit. The memorial supper sets forth none of these, but rather it proclaims the one great truth of our Lord's death—his death for us. We come here to live; but He came to earth to die.

Christ our Righteousness.

By Dr. SINCLAIR PATERSON.

To give practical proof of the absence of denominationalism in speaking of Jesus Christ as the righteousness of the saints, I will take for my text the Eleventh Article of the Church of England:—

> We are accepted righteous before God only for the merit of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ by faith, and not for our own works and deservings.

I could not wish it more clearly or distinctly stated than in these few words. And indeed when we look at it there are only two possibilities: we must stand on our own merit, or we must stand on the merit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Either we are saved by works or by grace. We have only to read with open eyes and mind such a Scripture as the Epistle to the Romans to discover that no man can stand before God for a single instant with any hope of acceptance as he is. Read Romans iii., and take the description God gives there of the human heart—a description that none of us would dare to give and that none of us will accept for ourselves until we know that God reads the heart as we do not, and sees its secrets as we can never see them. Read that awful indictment of human nature, in which it is declared that our feet are swift to shed blood, destruction and misery are in our paths, the way of peace we have not known, and there is no fear of God before our eyes. That absolutely describes sinful human nature in the best of us. Even in the saint that is what the heart is, according to God's judgment; and, therefore, if we are to enter into his presence and enjoy his favour, we must have another righteousness than man's, and that is the righteousness which is of God through faith in Christ Jesus. Paul says that he rejoices to have this righteousness; that he puts aside altogether his own righteousness, and trusts absolutely and entirely to the finished life and obedience unto death of the Lord Jesus Christ.

You remember how Christ replied to the rich young man who wanted to know what he must do to inherit eternal life. When he said that he had kept the commandments from his youth up, he had little conception of what the law of God really implies. In his reply Jesus shed light upon the whole matter: "If thou wilt be perfect, go, sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow Me." That was law-keeping. If he loved his neighbour as himself, according to the commandment, he would not have kept more to himself than he gave to his neighbour. Which of us will dare to say that we love our neighbour as ourselves? Who will dare to say that he loves the Lord with all his strength and soul and mind? If not, do we truly take up the cross and follow Christ? We never can be saved on the basis of law-keeping. There is only One who ever lived on earth whose righteousness could be accepted by God. If Jesus Christ had not come down and lived here, and obeyed the law, and fulfilled and honoured it, God could never have been honoured on earth at all. This He did as the representative of man. The first man was our representative; we sinned and fell in him. Sin exists, and we cannot explain it away. The only logical, as well as Scriptural, explanation is the first three chapters of Genesis. So the Second Man came, and by his obedience the many are made righteous. The first man brought in sin that wrought ruin and disaster; the Second Man wrought righteousness, on the ground of which each one may enter into the fulness of fellowship with God, and know what it is to be accepted in the Beloved.

It is a sad thing, and yet it is true, that the very people to whom the Lord came, to prepare them for this righteousness, stumbled over that stumbling stone. "The Gentiles, which followed not after righteousness, have attained to righteousness, even the righteousness which is of faith. But Israel, which followed after the law of righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteousness" (Rom. ix. 30, 31). Christ was to them "a stumbling stone and a rock of offence." He is the end of the law for righteousness to everyone that believeth. It is a blessed thing to know that we have in the Lord Jesus Christ something far better than Adam had when he fell in the garden of Eden. He lost all his privileges and brought in sin and death. What do we read of Christ? "God hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." Did you ever think what the merit of Christ implies? There is nothing we cannot claim if we go to God in the meritoriousness of Christ. There can be no true obedience rendered by us until we come under the full sway and blessing of this meritoriousness of Christ. This is our one plea of prayer—"for Jesus' sake." The merit of Christ is the righteousness of Christ, made perfect in obedience unto death, and we come under the full power of that merit when we accept Him as "the Lord our righteousness."

MR. DENHAM SMITH has passed through a week of increased suffering, and his physicians consider that the disease has assumed more definite symptoms, notwithstanding which his mind remains still calm, peaceful, and submissive.

A CONFERENCE of BIBLE CARRIAGE WORKERS and those interested in colportage work will be held at the Gospel Hall, St. Nicholas-road, Bristol. Tuesday and Wednesday, April 24 and 25, at 11, 3, and 7 each day. Any who purpose attending, and need accommodation should communicate with James Vicary, Ebenezer House, Dalrymple-road, Bristol; or A. G. West, Warkwood, Redland, Bristol.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.—Miss de Broen requests Praise, for the great blessing the Lord granted to the Conference in her Iron Room, March 14.——PRAYER for blessing on special meetings in Fifeshire, from the 14th to the 26th inst.——For blessing on a mission being conducted by Miss Herdman, among soldiers at Malta.——For blessing on special services at Douglas, Isle of Man, from Sunday next to April 1, to be conducted by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes.——For a deeper work of grace in the pastor and workers in a church in South London, and that there may be an awakening among the unsaved.——For second mission by Mr. William Forbes, at Weybridge, commencing on Sunday next.——For the increasing population of Walthamstow, that the servants of the Lord may have grace so to live and to speak of Christ, that many shall believe in Him and be saved.——For the recovery of Miss Gurnet, Superintendent of the "Rosslyn Mission," Tollington Hall, Hornsey-road, who has been laid aside by an over-strain, mental and physical.

OBITUARY.

MR. JABEZ HORNE.

This Christian brother, Inspector of Schools of the New Orphan Homes, Bristol, recently passed from earth at the age of seventy-two years. He had suffered from a short attack of pleurisy and consequent exhaustion. He went to the New Orphan Homes only the day before, as usual, and was conducting the examination, when he fainted away, and after a time was sent home, where he succumbed to the attack. Our readers may remember that, a few years ago, Mr. Horne compiled a series of most instructive Biblical questions that appeared week by week in these columns.

MR. HENRY BERGH.

This well-known philanthropist, of New York, has recently died, at the age of sixty-five. The son of a Government shipbuilder, he was for a few years in the public service. After travelling extensively, he decided upon devoting his life to humanitarian enterprises. He vigorously pleaded the cause of dumb animals, and consequent upon his exertions laws were passed, and a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals formed. In 1874 the deceased rescued a little girl from inhuman treatment under circumstances which attained great publicity, and which led to the founding of a Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

MR. E. BOUSTEAD.

On the last day of February the Lord took to Himself Mr. Edward Boustead, of 34, Leadenhall-street, and Clapham Park. Mr. Boustead was an earnest Christian, a successful merchant, and a faithful steward. He was in his eighty-eighth year, and was one of the first who took sittings at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and was a liberal supporter of its many institutions. Being a man of sound judgment, combined with much gentleness of spirit, he became the trusted and revered counsellor of many. Like Gaius of old, the truth was in him and he walked in the truth; he did faithfully whatsoever he did to the brethren and to strangers, and many could gladly bear witness of his generous but unostentatious deeds.

REV. SAMUEL M'ALL.

This venerable Congregational minister has just entered into rest at the age of eighty-one. He commenced his ministry in 1829. For thirteen years he laboured at Doncaster, and for seventeen at Nottingham. After these pastorates he accepted the Principalship of Hackney College, where he also held the post of Theological Tutor. From this he retired in 1881, after twenty-one years' work. He was of a beautiful spirit, and was held in esteem by men of all classes. His wife survives him, as also do two of his sons and a daughter, who is wife of Rev. A. D. Philps, of Coggeshall. During the last thirty years of his life the deceased was a total abstainer.

THE HIGHGATE TRACT AND VISITATION SOCIETY, in connection with which forty workers visit over 1000 families weekly, has lately organised a book loan movement. The poor and aged are invited to read good and interesting books, as well as tracts. The new agency is highly appreciated, but its operations are cramped by the shortness of the supply of volumes.

THE WILLING HANDS SOCIETY.—Miss Reade, 4, Goldington-road, Bedford, and Miss H. Polhill-Turner, Howbury Hall, Bedford, the secretaries of this little Society, recently formed in aid of missions in China, would be glad to welcome members for the above Society, and will give full particulars to those wishing to join, and to help by the work of their "willing hands."

PRAYER FOR CHINA.—Writing from Paoning Fu, N.E. Sz-chuan, lately, Mr. Hope Gill asks for prayer for the opening up of the immense and densely populated cities of Western China; and that suitable premises may be got in these cities in which to live and labour for God. "This station," he says, "is newly opened, and we are craving to see the heathen turn from their idols and superstition to serve the living God.

JEWS ON THE CONTINENT.—On Monday last Mr. David Baron, accompanied by Mr. Barnett, started on another three months' mission tour. They go through to Vienna, and hope to visit many places in Hungary, where they have not been before, and then proceed to Roumania, where they hope to spend most of the time. Their work will be chiefly directed to the distribution of the Hebrew New Testament, and they desire prayer for a rich blessing on their efforts.

LONDON, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted from their previous good character and position to mix with others.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for contributions:—

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case where it is possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent, that every shilling has been spent.
